But the principal work of the B. A. F. consists in bringing aid and comfort to every labor-baiting employer in the state. Take the case of the oil workers. Since the strike called last September, when the Associated Oil Company refused to continue a working agreement between themselves and the government relative to working conditions and disputes in the industry, and refused to confer with the workers on the ground that "this policy would lead to Sovietism," every weapon of fraud and violence and victimization has been used to smash the union. It was recently revealed in court, for instance, that a certain detective, Emerson, had been hired by the Oil Company to set fire to the oil warehouse, in order that a number of union men might be implicated and put out of the way. The union persisted, but the B. A. F. came to back up the Company's fight; and now, according to the latest figures given by the B. A. F., the weeding out of union men is going on at such a rate that they now form only 20 per cent of the whole number employed, and soon these too will be gone.

WANTED!

Workers for the Worker.

Any comrades having a little time to spend for the cause can help "The Worker" by donating a few hours labor at addressing and preparing circularization material. Come to the office at any time and ask for Wm. F. Kruse.

Call It "Rule of Gold"

The B. A. F. has also thrown itself whole-heartedly into the struggle of the San Francisco employers to reduce the minimum for women from $16 to $11.68 a week, which is being resisted to the uttermost by all sections of women workers. The extent of the sinister influence of the organization is shown by the fact that if a worker so far forgets his duty to his masters as to dare to boycott one of the retail stores which are affiliated with the B. A. F., vengeance follows swiftly upon his presumptuous attempt at class solidarity, and he finds himself out of a job. The B. A. F. openly boasts of this power of ousting workers from their jobs at its pleasure.

So much, then, for the B. A. F. "Golden Rule"—or perhaps it might better be called the "Rule of Gold"—in action.

TO DEFENSE OF MOONEY

San Francisco.—The Mooney-Billings defense has let loose an onslaught upon the Cincinnati Times-Star which in a recent editorial gave vent, by inference, to the wish that Tom Mooney, the framed labor leader, might have been hung instead of commuted to life imprisonment as a result of the open-shop, Chamber of Commerce conspiracy on the Pacific Coast.

The occasion for the poisonous sheet's outburst is the debate between Solicitor-General Beck and Prof. Felix Frankfurter, recently appearing in The New Republic.

Oakland, Cal.—John C. Wieler, Communist and former clergyman, has begun serving his 14-year term at San Quentin, after his appeal to the district court of appeals was dismissed on one count out of four. Wieler is in bad health, and has been in custody of the sheriff on certificate from his physician that he could not survive a term in the country jail. At San Quentin, however, he will be set to work in the jute mill, like all new prisoners.

Court Hits Bomb Squad; Jakira Case Dismissed

Judge John E. McIntire, of the Court of General Sessions, has handed down a decision that the raid executed last April by the Bomb Squad on an apartment at 170 Bleeker St., was unlawful, and ordered the return to Abram Jakira, one of the occupants of the apartment, of two pistols said by the members of the raiding party to have been found in his suit case at that time.

Indictments against Jakira, Israel Amter and Edward Lindgren with relation to literature seized in the same raid were dismissed by Judge Talley for lack of evidence to sustain them. Judge McIntire's decision ends the proceedings against Jakira for the unlawful possession of firearms which were instituted at the same time.

The opinion holds that the constitutional provisions guaranteeing the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects against unlawful search and seizure is expressive of a fundamental conception of social policy, and that it is "universal in its application."

It is not, the opinion states, a guarantee of the right to remain undisturbed in the possession of specific property, but a guarantee against the unlawful invasion of the privacy of men and women living under the protection of our legal system.

Evidence obtained by a violation of these constitutional provisions, Judge McIntire holds, cannot be used against a defendant's application to the court.

The opinion quotes from decisions of the United States Supreme court which hold that security against unreasonable search and seizure is "of the very essence of constitutional liberty," and that the guarantee of these rights "is as important and as imperative as are the guarantee of the other fundamental rights of the individual citizen—the right of trial by jury, to the writ of habeas corpus, and to due process of law."

Whether or not any particular defendant is convicted, Judge McIntire's opinion holds, is less important than the maintenance of these constitutional safeguards.

The defendant was represented by Hale, Nelles and Shorr, and Osmond K. Fraenkel was associated with them. The motion for the return of the property was made by Murray C. Bernays of Hale, Nelles and Shorr.

Misuse of Permit System Gets Union Head in Bad

(By the Federated Press)

NEW YORK.—Wm. A. Hogan, financial secretary, Local No. 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, has been indicted on charges of grand larceny in the first degree for alleged manipulation of the union's funds. The indictment is the result of disclosures of Samuel Untermyer, counsel to the Lockwood investigating committee who brought out that Hogan had supervision over a permit plan whereby non-union men paid $2.50 a week to work with union men. Hogan is charged with having stolen $21,625 from the union's permit money fund.

The testimony before the Lockwood committee brought out that there are between 15,000 and 20,000 electrical workers in New York City, of whom only 3,000 were members of the union. Attempts to join the union were almost always met with the statement that "the books are closed." Then the applicants would be told that they could work on weekly permit cards if they paid $2.50 per week each for journeymen and $1 for helpers. This made $130 a year for journeymen and $52 a year for helpers, while the monthly dues paid by union members were only $2, or $24 a year.

One of the witnesses before the committee, Thomas D. Naughton, testified that the amount collected by the union in these permit fees might well average $5000 a week, or more than $250,000 a year. Four men were continually busy taking in the special permit receipts. According to Alfred H. Bull, the organization's accountant, no cash book ever was kept with day to day entries; the bookkeeping system was pretty bad, and he had been fooled by the officers who furnished him the data on which to base his audits.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

[illegible]

Why [illegible] education?

The fight for free schools was initiated and continued to success by our labor unions in the early part of the last century.

But when we got the "free" schools, we stopped. Why we should have free schools, assuming that the worker wanted to be on an equal footing with the moneyed man, does not seem to have entered into the agitation. It seems to have been taken for granted that, given free schools, the children would gain in knowledge and understanding without more ado.

Seek Knowledge and Understanding

For [illegible], knowledge and understanding [illegible] our children shall have. We desire that they shall be able to compete with the children of capitalists in the activities of the world. We dislike to think that they shall be at a disadvantage when about to take up the serious struggle of our busy, tho bustling, world. And if they remain in the ranks of labor we desire that they shall be able to understand every questionable situation, every dispute that may arise between the capitalist and the worker.

Are we doing anything in our schools to help towards this understanding? Is it likely that our schools will be run for the benefit of the workers, for the purpose of turning out freedom-loving individuals, thoughtful men and women, uncommercialized human beings, with our "Board of Education" composed of lawyers, business men and financiers? Do you find any "John Deweys," "Ferrers," or "Herbert Spencers" on the Boards?

Public Schools not Workers' Schools

Is it then not evident that the public schools are not workers' schools—that they embody no thought of the development of character and the thinking power, not to speak of self-expression, self-determination, initiative and the love of decent human life?

To what extent then are we on an equal footing, educationally, with the employing class? Do the children of wealth depend upon the schools? Hardly—there are private schools to suit all cases for those who can pay. These private schools do everything and anything to satisfy the desires of the "coupon clipping class." If these schools are not advanced in methods it is only because the wealthy are not necessarily intelligent. But when some new or advanced idea in education is to be tried out, it is done where it can be paid for privately. Our public schools remain static as to methods, even tho new forms, like manual training, may be introduced. And the worst of it is, no matter what may be introduced, our schools have become thoroly commercialized.

Any free expression in education can be tried out where the tuition fee is large, because we do not appreciate what is going on in the educational world sufficiently to sacrifice anything for new schools. We are too busy concerning ourselves with wages and shorter hours.

Must Build Own Schools

Schools with advanced ideas and methods, which exist in New York, Detroit and elsewhere, are being financed, not by workers, but by "stockholders." If there is anything good that is going they get it, from steam yachts and flying machines to new experiments in education.

So we must go back to our first question—"Why must we wait for the intellectuals who are not workers to formulate new ideas in education or to enunciate broad ideas of the educational thinkers of the past?

Have we not enough intelligence among our workers to know how to feel the pulse of the educational thought—not the school program—and to delve into what has been said and done by Cominius, Herbart, Rousseau, Pestalozzi, Froebel, Herbert Spencer, Ferrer and John Dewey, not to mention the more modern A. S. Neil?

Why should it not be the concern of every workers' group—labor union, benevolent society, political organization—to see that the educational question is repeatedly or regularly being considered, discussed and studied to the end that we may build our school, our own schools so far in advance, from an educational standpoint, of our public schools, that even the capitalistic private schools will be seen as in a mist far behind. Before the year 1860 Herbert Spencer wrote the following:

"Not only ought we to cease from the mere unthinking adoption of the current fashion of education, which has no better warrant than any other fashion. . . It must not suffice simply to THINK that such or such information will be useful in after-life, or that this kind of knowledge is of more practical value than that; but we must seek out some process of estimating their respective values; so that as far as possible we may positively KNOW which are most deserving of attention."

Prophets of evil have been in the habit of chirping—par[illegible] since the Russian revolution—that chivalry and all the [illegible] virtues which have made the lives of Jessie James and Cap[illegible] Kid shine in comparison to the slimy trails left by the mode[illegible] highwaymen from the buccaneer of Wall Street and his slick [illegible]tors, the respectable financiers, to the gentlemen whose [illegible] capital is a loaded revolver and his sphere of operations the pub[illegible] highways of New York.

But while there is life there is hope. Like a sunbeam burst[illegible]ing through a murky sky came the report of a hold up in wh[illegible] the gentlemen of the mask tore a page out of the book of "Jesse Jam[illegible] and sent the thrills of romance running up and down the spines of th[illegible] Americans who know that in this land of initiative and "pep" things [illegible] happening every day that tend to give us a distinctiveness unique amo[illegible] nations.

While the Bolsheviks were calling the attention of the unemploye[illegible] to the fact that the capitalists robbed them and then threw them out [illegible] the streets to starve without even presenting them with a Salvation ar[illegible] Doughnut two Americans in the expropriation business were giving the lie to the Bolsheviks and proving that the Robber System had not lost all sense of honor.

In a certain grocery store in uptown New York six citizens of the metropolis were purchasing certain articles for their wives and incidentally thanking their stars that they lived in a country where Bolsheviks were scarce and life was secure. In the midst of the discussion two masked men appeared with drawn revolvers and in "treat 'em rough" accents ordered the assembled Americans to point their fingers towards the ceiling.

The same order was given to the grocer and his assistant. The two operators performed the task of separating from their coin, jewelry and anything of value that was not part of their anatomies of those whom they favored with their attentions.

After they had finished their tasks they held a caucus to decide whether they should punish the victims for not having more money in their possession. (The collection was only $84.)

They decided, however, that such disgusting poverty was due to lack of initiative and proper training, so instead of severely punishing them—as they richly deserved—the bandits gave them 50 cents each to pay their carfare home.

They regretted they could not give them a dollar each, but, as the spokesman for the two said:

"There is so much competition in this business since the termination of the war that we bandits must, if we expect to remain in the business, lay down certain rules of procedure, to safeguard ourselves against our emotions.

"In the legitimate field of banditry our competitors do not run the risks we do, therefore their expenses are not so high. The bankers and capitalists are aided by the government in relieving the workers of their wealth, but we are as objectionable to the government as a Holy Jumper is to a Catholic. Therefore we must practise thrift. Good day, gentlemen.

"If one of you moves before we are safely in our car, the unpleasant duty will devolve on us of pumping you full of lead. Good day."

JUSTICE

Editor, The Worker:—Appended please find a clipping dealing with the late "ruling" on the "Oregon Comical Sillyism Law." You may use the following information and the clipping, both, to make up the kind of a news-item that your columns will stand.

Joseph Laundy was arrested on November 11, 1919, at a meeting of the Workers, Soldiers and Sailors Council here. The masters found his "Wobblie" card and indicted him under their brand-new "Comical Sillyism Law." With the advent of the "Communist Raids" (Jan. 2, 1920) they also found that he was a member of the Communist Labor Party. For good measure they gave him a "Communist" indictment under the same law.

Things went snappy in those days. February, March and April were the days of the "Red Trials" in this burg when the following were tried, i. e. convicted.

Of Communists there were: Fred W. Fry, two years (paroled on account of old age); Claude Hurst, two years; and Karl W. Oster, five years.

Of I. W. W.'s there were: L. Sorile, one year; Joseph Laundy, two years.

One poor devil, an alleged I. W. W., Wm. Johnson, was picked up in a "Hoosier" town named Condon. He was tried without an attorney and as they could not get him to say much and did not even succeed in locating his card, they simply handed him "the book" (ten years). He was "convicted" in December, 1919.

The cases of Laundy, Sorile and Oster were appealed. The "ruling" referred to in the clipping is the first action on these appeals. The others have not yet been argued before the more or less "honorables."

At present there are no class-war casualties in the Oregon pen.

Oh, yes. Oh, yes—the Master giveth and the Master taketh away—"Justice" a la Democracy!

Coldwell on Tour in West for Amnesty

Joseph M. Coldwell, prominent New England strike leader and revolutionary Socialist worker, and Eugene V. Debs were recently released from the Atlanta, Ga., prison, after serving more than two years for violation of the infamous so-called espionage law.

Coldwell will start on a tour of the middle west, beginning March 25th, at Pittsburgh, Pa., demanding the opening of the prison doors for the scores of other workers—class war prisoners still lying in America's dungeons for standing by their class. Leaving Pittsburgh, Coldwell will enter Ohio for a series of dates.

SHOW YOUR SOLIDARITY—NOW!

Stand by the Workers Party in its fight for the release of our comrades in prison. Aid in the relief for families of deported radicals. Help send comforts to our comrades in prison.

Funds from this meeting divided between the National Defense Committee and the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee.

It is well known that both Coldwell and Debs would have long ago been released from prison had they been willing to promise "good behavior." But they preferred prison to disgrace.

When at last President Harding, because of the overwhelming demand for the release of the political prisoners signed the release of only a few, instead of all as was demanded by millions of Americans, Debs and Coldwell made a solemn vow to fight for the release of those comrades, the Communists, the I. W. W.'s and all class-war prisoners still in prison, the very moment they were free.

Standing within the stone and steel walls that had been their "home" for nearly three years; with pulses quickened by the thought of freedom, yet filled with anger and sorrow that only a few had been ordered released, Coldwell and Debs made a solemn vow that they would not rest until every class-war prisoner in America's prisons had been released. They shook hands and pledged themselves to this fight.

The Workers Party has taken up this fight with them. We demand the release of all political and class-war prisoners, including Mooney, Billings, Larkin, Ruthenberg, Gitlow, Winitzky, Ferguson, Taylor, Sacco, Vanzetti, the Communists and the I. W. W.'s.

The Edelweiss, the Yorkville Section of the Friends of Soviet Russia, will give a Grand Concert and Ball with GIPSY MUSIC, on Sunday, April 9, 1922, at 5 P. M., at the Labor Temple, 243 E. 84th St. Proceeds for the Famine Sufferers.

Caleb Harrison, secretary of the Workers Party, will tour the New England States in Dist. No. 1, beginning March 18, and covering Boston, Lynn, Chelsea, Peabody, New Bedford, Springfield, Norwood, and several other points. After leaving Massachusetts he will cover cities in the up-state district in New York, winding up in Buffalo on April 2.

After the mass meeting in New York, March 19, Robert Minor will make a short tour to Philadelphia, Wilmington, Del., Reading, Pa., Trenton, N. J., Baltimore and several other points in Dist. No. 3. Later on Minor will begin a tour in New England.

The Federations are gradually getting themselves into shape for active work. The Finns with over 7000 members formally became part of the Workers Party on March 1.

Besides the Finnish Federation the following federations have the required number to be recognized as a federation with a bureau: Germans, Russians, Italians, South Slavic, Jewish, Hungarians, Greek, Lithuanians, Polish.

There are other groups that are affiliated but have not secured up to the present time sufficient members to grant them a bureau, namely: Armenians, French, Esthonians, Spanish.

There are other federations that are sympathetic to the Workers Party, but so far have not arranged the technical matters necessary for complete affiliation. These Federations have sufficient numbers of members to give them a bureau each.

They are the Bohemians, Roumanians, Bulgarians, Scandinavians. It will be but a short time before all the Federations listed above will be full pledged federations of the Workers Party, each functioning with a Bureau to conduct the work amongst their respective nationals.

Arrange Details for the Young Workers National Convention, April 15th

By HARRY GANNES

The tentative draft of the Manifesto and Program of the Young Workers League has been submitted to all branches of the League by the National Organization Committee. Details of the convention have been arranged.

The list of organizations answering the call grows daily. Everywhere new branches are organized. A branch of the Y. W. L. is being organized in Trenton, N. J. Gardner, Mass., has answered the Convention Call, and has already elected its delegates to attend the convention. In Boston active work is being carried out. The comrades in that city are working in close harmony with the Workers Party.

Interested in Movement

From Scranton, Pa., comes a letter which reads in part: "I have read about the Young Workers League by George Oswald in the "Voice of Labor". I am interested in the movement ..." Philadelphia is now strongly organized and bids fair to become the largest league in the country. They have English, German, Italian and Jewish branches, all working in close harmony and doing everything possible to aid in building a national organization. Their membership mounts daily. Los Angeles issues a challenge in this form: "It will just be a matter of time before Los Angeles will be as well organized, just as strongly as the larger cities in the East."

Branches have been organized in Aberdeen, Wash.; San Francisco, Calif.; Jamestown, Pa.; Lawrence, Mass.; Bethlehem, Pa.; Hancock, Mich.; Winnipeg, Man.; Minneapolis, Minn., and many other places.

Like the Magazine

Philadelphia comrade informs us "The Young Workers League is coming over the top in good shape." Bethlehem likes the magazine.

Chicago is issuing a local paper (mimeographed). The March issue has just come to hand. The idea is a good one and should be followed wherever possible.

"For quite some time a number of us have been engaged in getting a Young Workers League under way," writes Henry Ungleich of Syracuse, "in this, the deadest of towns, and at last have succeeded."

"Youth" has been changed to "The Young Worker." The March issue will appear under the new name. The reasons were two: (1) In order to get mailing privileges, as there is already in existence a magazine named "Youth"; and (2) because after careful consideration it was decided that the new name is more expressive of the organization and its mission.

March Issue Is Out

The March issue is now on the press and will be out shortly. Those interested in receiving the magazine are urged to send in their orders for bundles or subscribe to the paper. A drive is being inaugurated for subscriptions. Blanks will appear in the next issue, and all interested in seeing the magazine grow are invited to become a self-appointed agent and solicit subscriptions. The price will be $1.00 per year. The N. O. C. requests that all who received the last issue of "Youth" make returns in order that the paper may continue in existence, as well as grow and extend to larger fields. Criticism and comment are invited. Contributions are asked for. Build the press of the Young Workers League!

WORKERS' HALL

SUNDAY, MARCH 26

8 P. M.

The Workers Party and the United Front.

By [illegible]

Political Parties represent certain economical group-interests. In the main there are two classes: The Bourgeoisie and the Proletariat. And the political parties are grouping themselves along the same class lines.

Within these classes there is a further subdivision along industrial, occupational or income lines. Thus the different bourgeoisie groups are represented by conservatives, liberals, democrats, agrarians, etc., which exist as separate parties, fight each other, and unite only on fundamental issues between the Bourgeoisie and the Proletariat. In the same manner the different proletarian groups of the American working class fall along the lines of occupations, trades and industries.

The grades of direct and immediate importance of the individual services of the workers to the employer determines the economical wellbeing of the worker, his attachment to and satisfaction with the present conditions.

Thus a succession of such gradations divides the locomotive engineer, in charge of a modern flyer, who goes from his "run" to his cottage in a nice country town, and the migratory lumberjack, or spinning-wheel operator of a new England factory town.

The divisional lines of the American working class into such economical groups coincide with divisions along national group lines, the bulk of the unskilled workers consisting of foreign-born immigrants.

The class-unity of the American-born pattern-maker or engraver with the Syrian mule-driver of the mines, or the colored cotton-picker of the South is hardly, if ever, perceptible.

This condition widens the chasm between the various economical groups of the working class. Thus the working class of America consists of a number of distinct and separate layers. The uppermost can hardly be distinguished from the proud, satisfied American middleman and the bottom ones feeling the whole burden of capitalist oppression, obtaining as their share of the much-boasted American prosperity misery and despair.

At any moment of the class-struggle the bottom layers supply the most revolutionary workers, for they have nothing to lose but their chains and a world to gain. They are more militant in their struggle, they are more susceptible to revolutionary teachings.

A revolutionary workers' party represents in aim and methods of struggle, in everyday slogans and tactics the needs of the bottom layers and is suited to their psychology and temper.

Those layers of the workingclass that have established normal or working agreements with their employers, who have grown into the communal life, are less militant, less aggressive. They are looking towards a gradual process of improvements which result from a drawn-out process of bargaining and thru a slow but sure process of liberalizing the minds of the public. Those layers are represented by a variety of reform-socialists, laborites, and progressives.

Because of a difference in militancy for present needs; because of a hostility of the bottom layers to the so-called labor aristocracy which at times is being bribed into submission by the capitalists offering them a share of the exploitation; because of a difference in tradition and to a certain extent of culture; the different economical groups can be represented only by different political parties, respectively influenced by and under the political hegemony of their respective parties.

At present, in the pre-revolutionary period, the revolutionary workers' party cannot therefore be a mass-party in the sense of including great masses and representing the bulk of the American working-class, in the sense of the Russian party of the pre-revolutionary period, where the working-class was more homogeneous.

It can include only those elements who are imbued with the spirit of rebellion against the existing system, who have no more illusion as to the capitalist democracy and its institutions, who know that the principle of capitalist rule is force and that it can be overthrown only by force. In this sense it can represent only a portion of the working class, its bottom layers.

The revolutionary workers' party must give in its program the maximum of revolutionary expression. It must contain a ruthless unmasking of the capitalist state and bourgeois institutions as instruments of barbaric suppression of the working-class.

It must point out the inevitability of a proletarian state to bring about the transition from capitalism to socialism.

It must contain a program of action to meet the needs and demands of the most oppressed layers of the working class.

It must expose in its activities the capitalist lieutenants among the workers.

It must interpret in the light of international class-struggles all the activities of the capitalists of all the countries and their henchmen among the labor leaders.

It must point out the futility of reforms and expose the reformists as conscious tools in the hands of the bourgeoisie to perpetuate capitalist misrule and to avoid revolutionary outbreaks of the oppressed masses.

No other program and tactics could fit the party of revolutionary workers. No compromise or watering of the program will bring into its ranks elements from other layers.

The main activities and most of the energy must, however, be directed against the direct enemies of the working class. In this a radical departure from previous tactics must take place.

At the period when the vanguard of the working class was making assaults upon the whole capitalist structure, its immediate destruction being the direct objective, the immediate enemy of the revolution, or the first line of trenches of the capitalist class were the centrist parties, and those of the Second International and the conservative labor leaders who were in various ways and degrees opposing the rise of the working masses to revolution.

The immediate object of the revolutionary party was, therefore, to remove from the path of the working masses these obstacles.

The fight for the destruction of the above-named parties was waged in order to release the revolutionary forces for the attack on capitalism.

The world situation, and particularly in America, is now such that before any attempts can be made for a revolutionary attack, a consolidation of the ranks of the working class must be brought about.

We are entering here in America on a period of organization and entrenchment of the forces of the working class.

The issue at stake now being not the rise of the working masses for a revolutionary attack but the defense of the immediate interests of the working class against the onslaught of capitalism; it is necessary to line up the working masses of America first for the defensive struggle.

A united front is therefore imperative and now possible of all the organizations ready to take up the defense of the immediate needs of the working class.

The object of the united front so far as the political end of the revolutionary party is concerned, is to influence all the layers of the working class, to inject in them the spirit of class-unity, which is lacking in the American working class; to imbue them with the spirit of struggle for their class-interests against the capitalists.

This can be achieved only thru the joint efforts of the various organizations, which have an influence over the various layers, only thru a demonstration of unity. Thru a united front can the working masses be rallied around the slogan for class-unity.

In this united front the revolutionary party occupies the position of the left wing. Representing the most aggressive, the most militant portion of the working class, the revolutionary party will by its flank attacks compel the parties to its right to move in a forward direction.

While maintaining its organizational integrity, its separate program and tactics, the Revolutionary Party will criticize the political activities of its allies on the industrial field, it will combat the influence of the Socialists and laborites who are representing the upper layers of the working class, and are for peaceful agreements and defensive tactics. The Revolutionary Party will advocate the rule of the Rank and File in the unions, will call them to action, while within the ranks of labor the revolutionary party will wage a fight for supremacy against the Socialists and laborites, but it will put up a united front against capitalism outside of the ranks of labor—a united front for a common purpose, for common slogans, the revolutionary party being the most militant and aggressive in its denunciation of capitalism and in exposing the hypocrisy of capitalist institutions.

The common purpose shall be adapted to the pressing needs for the moment of the working class. As for instance the present common slogans of the united front may be:

1. Relief to the unemployed at the cost of capitalist tax payers.
2. Legislation against open shop campaign and against destruction of union conditions.
3. Recognition of and trade with Soviet Russia, etc., etc.

The revolutionary workers party shall take the initiative and the lead in forming the united front. It shall start a broad propaganda and it shall immediately take steps to meet representatives of the Socialist Party, the Farmer-Labor Party, the Non-Partisan League and the radical labor unions with the object of forming a United Labor Party of America.

Party Plans Lectures for Workers School

The Workers Party of Local Greater New York is establishing a Workers School with a series of lectures.

At its Educational Conference, Local Greater New York, decided upon the establishment of a central school to be known as the Workers School. Since it is quite late in the season the Local has decided upon running a series of lectures on the International and American Labor movement, beginning March 27 and running for six consecutive weeks.

Comrade Ludwig Lore will lecture on World Socialism and Communism, Monday evenings. Dr. I. A. Goldstone will lecture on the Marxian system on Thursday evening, and a series of six lectures will be presented on the American labor movement by the following: A. F. of L., Wm. F. Dunne; I. W. W., Wm. F. Dunne; Independent Unions, J. P. Anderson; Agricultural Workers, H. M. Ware; Civil War in Labor Conflicts, Robert Minor. Labor Program of the Workers Party, Caleb Harrison.

Lectures which will be organized later are: 3 lectures on Imperialism, A. Bittleman; The American Political State, Benj Glassberg. Additional lectures will be announced later.

PARIS COMMUNE MEETING—VOLUNTEERS

Conference of volunteers for preparations for Commune Day will be held at the Local Office, 208 E. 12th St., Friday evening, 8 P. M. All are requested to be present in order to make necessary arrangements for a successful meeting.

Conference of Party Workers

The first Conference of Organizers, Literature Agents, Executive Committee representatives and Financial Secretaries was held last Friday night and was well represented, with 25 in attendance.

Williamsburg branch of Brooklyn reported most successful activity in selling literature, in educational meetings, and in keeping excellent attendance at the branch.

Conference decided that in order to increase membership branches should very carefully arrange lectures for membership, either at headquarters or in some place that can hold about 100—200, but which would not be very expensive.

That circular letter should be sent out to prospective members inviting them to join the party and attending lectures.

In order to boost for THE WORKER it was recommended that a campaign should be started to increase its sale and subscription and every branch be taxed two papers per member.

Brownsville Branch recommended that for effective distribution, the branch be divided into squads selected by the Literature Committee and that each squad be assigned to certain portion of territory to cover. Williamsburg Branch reported that they were selling 300 papers per week by assigning a number of members for this work. And that every branch should have to take care of a number of news stands in his territory and see that THE WORKER is placed on sale.

Circle 6, Harlem.

Because of lack of headquarters our activities are greatly hampered. We are now trying to get our own headquarters. The following is a list of our activities: Thursday, March 16, Discussion of Program. March 23, J. Louis Engdahl will speak on the "Class Struggle at Home."

As soon as we get a place the classes will again be started. Just now we are all busy with the big affair at Parkview Palace, on April 22, 1922. This affair will be run in celebration of the organization of a national office. Tickets are obtainable in the following places: Workers Party, 80 E. 11th St., Room 405; Y. W. L., 1258 Boston Road; Y. W. L., 61 Canal St.; Y. W. L., 1753 Pitkin Ave.; Y. W. L., 350 E. 81st St.; Y. W. L., 143 E. 103rd St.; Y. W. L., 226 Roebling St.

"Ad" blanks for our Journal may be gotten at these places also. If they are out of them please write for them and any other information to Young Workers League, 1258 Boston Road, N. Y. City.

The Swedish Branch of the Socialist Party and the Swedish Section of the Socialist Labor Party at Providence, R. I., have been united into one organization and are taking up the question of national and international affiliations.

The Independent Young People's Socialist League of Providence, R. I., met recently with the Swedish Socialist Young People's Club, and the outlook is good for the development of a local Young Workers League of all the young people.

What Does America Want?

"Why do we praise Dr. Fridtjof Nansen and only express gratitude to the American Relief Administration?"

This question was put to an extraordinary session of the Moscow Soviet this week by Leon Trotzky, Soviet Minister of War.

Trotzky answered his own question when he declared, "It is because we do not know what America wants."

American workers should begin finding out what America wants, what Wall Street and the Harding administration at Washington seek in Soviet Russia.

The American Relief Administration is feeding ten times as many famine- sufferers as all European relief efforts. But Trotzky declares that the counter-revolutionist, General Baron Wrangel, is also receiving food from America.

"From the White Sea to Baku," declares Trotzky, "the interventionist danger threatens. It is not Helsingfors, Reval, Riga, Warsaw and Bucharest, that are responsible for this, BUT PARIS, LONDON AND NEW YORK!

Thus is the United States included among the foes of Soviet Russia, among those nations that may be expected to support the new war on the Workers' Republic this spring.

The danger threatens. American workers wake up. Find out what the politicians at Washington and the profiteers in Wall Street want in Russia. Force them to tell you. And then act accordingly.

The fight of the Rand miners should not be confused with the fight on the Rand School.

The Drive for Amnesty

This week sees an encouraging revival in the drive for the release of our working-class prisoners.

Chief interest centers in the outlook for the release of Jim Larkin, one of the Communist prisoners confined in New York State.

Freedom for Larkin means that the fight for the liberation of his fellow-Communists, Charles E. Ruthenberg, Benjamin Gitlow, Isaac E. Ferguson and Harry Winitsky, will be renewed with increased vigor.

Freedom for Larkin will inspire new hope in the struggle that has been waged almost hopelessly for the freeing of the victims of the American White Terror launched against the working class since the war.

This week a hearing was also held before a congressional committee in Washington where demands were made for the release of the remaining war prisoners, especially those sent to the Leavenworth Bastille, in Kansas, as a result of the so-called "Green Corn Rebellion" in Oklahoma. This uprising of Oklahoma farmers, in the early days of the war, altho interpreted as a resistance to military service, was in reality a revolt against the oppressive tyranny of bankers and landlords. They raised their voices against capitalism and as a result were sent in large numbers by hireling judges and prejudiced juries to the horror cells of Leavenworth.

If the demand for their release succeeds, it will be as significant as the freeing of the Communist prisoners, whose sole offense is their loyalty to labor and their sworn enmity to capitalism.

In Chicago the headquarters of the Industrial Workers of the World continues its campaign for the gathering of millions of signatures on a petition seeking freedom for those members of its organization still held in prison. From California come indications of new activity on the part of the Mooney forces.

Forward, workers, to the release of all the prisoners of the class war! Help free our prisoners. Then free the workers from the heavy chains of the enslaving capitalist system.

The coal barons will meet the miners in district conferences only. They are for peace if they can have the United Mine Workers in pieces.

Controlling the "Movies".

Now we are going to have really intelligent and educational movies, for Will H. Hays, late postmaster general of the United States, has taken over this enjoyment of the American public. He will exercise his power thru a supervision of the "policy" of the organized producers and distributors of moving pictures.

The Federated Press informs us that one of Mr. Hays' ambitions in his new field of activity is to "keep the American public from getting radical."

The Federated Press declares:

> It is explained, on the highest possible confidential authority, that Hays looks upon the American people as a parent looks upon a crying baby—it must be distracted and amused, when it begins to cry and to get red because it is unhappy. To an unhappy baby a mother gives a prettily-colored rattle. To the American public the movies are serving the same purpose. The public is to look at the motion pictures, read the sentiments printed upon the screen, smile, forget its economic unhappiness, and drop its radical inclinations.
> This conception of his new job was expressed by Hays to a large group of men, under injunction of secrecy. Hays himself made public another part of the same speech—a part in which he gave no hint of the propaganda character of his new employment.

Hays will not be attempting anything new. The "movies" have always been under the control of the same power that dominates the bought press and dictates the wordy wisdom that flows from the nation's pulpit.

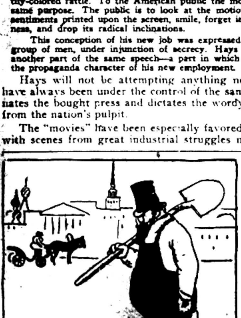
The "movies" have been especially favored during recent days with scenes from great industrial struggles now raging. No at- [illegible] to resist their masters.

There were also "news movies" of the steel strike at Newport, Ky., where tanks, rapid machine guns, armed thugs and other instruments of warfare against the workers were paraded in all their glory before the millions of working men, women and children who gain a little recreation by patronizing the picture houses in this country.

More recently we have had pictures of the bitterly fought textile strike in New England, where hot guns have blazed into the ranks of the unarmed and peacefully protesting ranks of the strikers.

The Burleson regime in the postal service during the war became infamous thru its efforts to intimidate and cow working-class editors. But it failed.

Hays' efforts to Burlesonize the "movies" will not result in crushing the spirit of the working class. It will only arouse it to greater and more stubborn resistance.



Society Note From Moscow

Grand Duke Nevawuk, who is noted for correct costumes, appeared on the Boulevard last Sunday in overalls of a new cut. The Grand Duke says that overalls will not be worn creased this year.

Logic Versus Power

According to the figures published in the American Contractor—a trade journal of the building industry—of December 3, 1921, the total labor cost in building construction is but 27.1 per cent of the whole. It is against labor, however, that the effort to reduce costs is being directed.

The contractor's profit is shown to average 8.3 per cent; contractor's overhead, 4.2 per cent; construction plant rental, 3 per cent.

We see, therefore, that for two simple little things like rent, and profit for the contractor, the industry is charged a rate of 18.5 per cent. The value returned to the industry for this outlay is infinitesimal.

The labor charge of 27.1 per cent represents actual value—indeed the only real value contributed by the three parties so far mentioned. The contractor and the landlord receive approximately three-fifths as much as the army of workers employed on a modern office building, but these two individuals return nothing of value.

It is a ridiculous condition of affairs, isn't it?

Unfortunately these little matters are not settled by the rules of reason. If they were the workers would have been freed long ago.

They are settled by the exercise of power, and just now the power is in the hands of the employing class. The reason and the right that is on the side of the workers will rule only when they are bulwarked by organized power.

In the meantime the workers have to use figures occasionally to convince themselves that they are right.

This is our only excuse for writing the above.

The Results of Division

The deadly effects of division on the industrial front were only too well displayed at the recent convention of the Rhode Island State Federation of Labor.

Two organizations are involved in the textile strike which just now is the center of interest in eastern labor circles—the United Textile workers, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and the Amalgamated Textile Workers, an independent organization.

The fact that two organizations are in existence in the textile industry was responsible for the convention not voting an appropriation for the relief of the strikers even tho the success of the strike hangs largely on the collection of sufficient funds to finance it.

The sentiment of the delegates present was for an equal division of all funds collected with no discrimination as between the two organizations while the fight was on, but officialdom as usual was on the job with the invocation of the sacred constitution.

The speeches made from the floor were proof that the rank and file is for unity in the industrial struggles; the next step is to get action for a united front.

It is useless at the present time to wrangle over the question of who is responsible for division but as a generalization it can be stated that the blame rests primarily upon an ostrich-like officialdom which has tried to maintain craft divisions in this machine age, and secondarily, upon the impatient radicals who have transferred their fight for progress from one organization to another without first having exhausted the possibilities of re-organization without division.

The harm has been done and it is but playing into the hands of the bosses to continue the policy of division.

The workers on the job are for unity and from them must come the pressure that will force the officialdom to bring about a united front or step out of the way so others can.

The fact that the Rhode Island State Federation of Labor convention, instead of sending out a call to rally the whole force of organized labor behind the textile strikers, adjourned after taking up a collection amounting to something like $70.00, is enough to show that division has already emasculated the labor movement.

He who puts any obstacle in the way of unity on the industrial front at a time like this, be he officer or rank and filer, is a traitor to the cause of labor and should be treated as such.

The labor movement of America at the present time is more a contest between unions than between unions and the employers.

Internecine warfare, in many cases aroused by no other issues than personal ambitions, has placed labor at the mercy of the best organized capitalist class in the world.

American labor can help neither itself nor its struggling comrades in other countries until the unity of labor is something more than the catch-phrase it is today, used by officialdom only to lull the workers into a suicidal policy of inaction while they hang on to their jobs just as long as members enough can be found to pay their salaries.

The whole energy of every class-conscious worker must be thrown into the fight for a solid workingclass front; neutrality in this struggle is giving aid and comfort to the enemies of labor who must laugh to see labor representatives quibbling in Rhode Island while thousands of textile workers walk the streets in a life and death conflict with textile barons backed by the full power of the state.

The Old Regime Passes

Now comes the Victor Talking Machine Co. and joins with the growing host that proclaims the old regime of the czars has passed in Russia.

In the March announcement of new Victor Records we find Feodor Chaliapin, who sang for the Russian workers, peasants and soldiers all during the revolution, featured as the attraction; Chaliapin who sings "When the King Went Forth to War," described "as an echo of old Russia, contrasting the lot of King and peasant." There are two others.

Previously the Victor Co. had issued as one of its records "The Song of the Volga Boatmen," a labor classic, a breath from that part of Russia now swept by famine and plague.

"This song is Russian history," says the Victor Co. publicity. "It is a chant of the barge hawlers, men who under the old regime did the work of draught animals."

Thus is the ascendancy of the Russian Workers' Republic admitted, in one form or another, from day to day. It is a fitting tribute on the fifth anniversary of the downfall of the czar. Capitalism has taken five years to convince itself that czardom has passed away. But it now seems to be convinced.

Smuts in South Africa, Griffith and Collins in Ireland, once rebels, now retainers of the British empire. India has yet to furnish a traitor. How backward these heathen are!

A Letter from Debs to You!

While thousands of our comrades have fought and suffered and [illegible] with a sublime heroism that has no parallel in history, where the embattled Russian revolutionists have staunchly [illegible] held their ground against the combined powers of the world's despotism and reaction in the war of the workers for liberation, there too are millions of men, women and children stricken with [illegible] hunger and writhing in the skeleton clutch of starvation. These Russian comrades of ours whose matchless valor and self-sacrifice have thrilled and inspired the workers of all nations and challenged the plaudits of the whole world now look to you, American workers, to come to their rescue in the desperate crisis now upon them and save them to humanity in the rebuilding of the ruined world.

These heroes in Russia who have immortalized their cause, our cause, who have paid in overflowing measure in blood and tears and agony unspeakable, the price of their fidelity and devotion to the oppressed and exploited toilers not only of their own land but of the whole world, now appeal to us for the food that shall save them from perishing as hostages to starvation, and shall we now fail to return in small part what we owe them for what they have suffered in the awful years of the revolution to break the fetters of labor everywhere and set humanity free from the curse of the ages?

In Russia our comrades have suffered and endured beyond the power of words to express to save us suffering; they have gone hungry and naked that we might be fed and clothed; they have bared their heroic breasts to the bayonets and bullets of a hostile and heartless ruling class world to give liberty to the human race, and shall these martyr spirits, these glorious souls and their helpless children now be permitted to die ignominiously for the want of the bread we hold in our hands?

No, a thousand times no! We should merit eternal reproach for our recreancy if we failed in this crucial hour to give and to give promptly, and to give again and again to the full limit of our power.

The starving workers and peasants of Soviet Russia cry aloud to us in the throes of their desperation and agony, and unless our hearts are of stone we can hear them by day and by night, and I appeal to every member of the American working class, to every man, woman and child with sympathy for starving fellow-creatures, to every human being responsive to human suffering within reach of my voice, to give and give at once and give freely and to the last dollar and the last penny that may be spared to the Friends of Soviet Russia, swelling the present contributions a hundredfold, for the relief as far as possible of the awful famine in the struggling Soviet Republic and for the rescue of the millions of its threatened victims whose cruel and shocking fate would forever shame our common humanity and leave a foul and damning blot on our vaunted civilization.

(Signed)

Eugene V. Debs

American workers desiring to respond to this appeal by Eugene V. Debs are called upon by the Friends of Soviet Russia to SIGN THE ROLL CALL and GIVE. A roll call of all friends of Soviet Russia is being taken by the F. S. R. New York.—Another instance of the methods by which aliens are hounded by agents of the United States government has just come to light by the discovery on Ellis Island of Carlo Costello, an Italian Swiss, who, after being kept eight months in a filthy Texas jail, was brought here for deportation.

He was originally charged with being an I. W. W., but being unable to prove that charge, the accusation was shifted to "entering the country unlawfully and without inspection."

A writ has been sued out for Costello by Attorney Rose Weiss, which will be taken into the federal court. He asserts he was naturalized about 10 years ago, but that his papers were taken from him by the Department of Justice agents.

Harding has gone to Florida to play golf. The nation still lives. The wage slaves are still on the job.

A West Virginia miner asked for ten sub cards on Wednesday, he got them Thursday, and Saturday he sent in five with cash attached. Quick work, and of the right kind.

Between Ireland, South Africa and India the British lion is having a 'ell of a time. Colonial slaves will revolt. And when the wage slaves join in, imperialism is put to the test and sees its finish.

The Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company reports it earned $5,394,712 during 1921. And still the coal barons are not satisfied. They regret that the past winter wasn't a little colder, so that the demand for anthracite would have been greater. But the weather is not yet under the domination of the profiteers. Too bad.

MOONEY DEFENSE APPEALS TO YOU

To the wage worker whose unremitting toil has not yet darkened his vision, nor blasted completely his hope nor deprived him of thirst for struggle—Greetings!

For six years we have fought a Chamber of Commerce, open-shop conspiracy which had for its purpose the throttling of militant labor on the Pacific coast. Since Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings went to their dreadful doom behind pitiless granite walls because they loved the American labor movement better than themselves, we have been revealing to the American toiler (and to him who toils beyond the seas) the ramifications of the plot which singled out two heralds of labor solidarity for a living death.

And now, fighting against gigantic odds and at a moment when we are about to force an unwilling officialdom to open the jails, we find ourselves TRAPPED—our fighting funds going, going . . . The workers who have rushed to the support of TOM MOONEY'S MONTHLY are being bruised in the open-shop onslaught of Capital. We can ask no more sacrifice of those who responded with a cheer and a generous hand —and tightened their belt until it hurt.

FOR SIX YEARS WE HAVE FOUGHT! WE SEEK TO CONTEST FURTHER. THE LIGHT MUST NOT GO OUT—MUST NOT GO OUT!

We ask for funds. It means LIFE TO US, LIFE TO OUR CAUSE!

One dollar will pay for a year's subscription to TOM MOONEY'S MONTHLY: Donations above a dollar will permit us to drive our publicity, our protest to the farthest corners of civilization.

We repeat with solemn earnestness—THE LIGHT MUST NOT GO OUT!

GOLD RULES AT WASHINGTON!

All Power Is Arrayed Against 600,000 Coal Miners Facing Strike

Big Drive on for Release of Prisoners

Representatives from the National Defense Committee, The Workers Defense Union, the Italian Defense Committee and Civil Liberties Bureau met recently and decided to form an alliance for amnesty of New York State political prisoners.

They believe that the propaganda conducted generally for the freedom of political prisoners is not sufficient to free these workers who have been sentenced as a result of the raids conducted under the Criminal Anarchy Laws by the Lusk Committee.

Among the political prisoners of whom there are nine in New York State are I. E. Ferguson, C. E. Ruthenberg, Benjamin Gitlow, Harry Winitsky and Gus Alonen. They have now been in prison for periods from 1½ to 2 years.

Merge with Sacco-Vanzetti Committee

Because of an already existing amnesty committee formed from representatives of various industrial, political and labor organizations as the Conference for Sacco-Vanzetti, the Amnesty Committee for New York State Political Prisoners will attempt to unite the two bodies in order to make a one united drive for the political prisoners.

Every labor union and every political labor organization should devote the next few months to a strenuous campaign for the freedom of these workers and for the repeal of the Criminal Anarchy laws.

Further announcements will be made of the Conference at which the organization for amnesty will be de-

MAY DAY

SPECIAL EDITION OF THE WORKER

There will be a special edition of THE WORKER for this year's May Day. It will contain just the material you want to help spread the struggle of the workers on this International Holiday.

There will be the best obtainable articles from the best writers in the World Communist Movement. There will be cartoons and sketches from our best artists.

Perhaps we shall be able to increase the size of THE WORKER for just this issue. That will depend on you. It will depend on the number of bundle orders that arrive at this office during the next week.

Take up this matter in your organization. Send in your order for a bundle of the SPECIAL MAY DAY EDITION OF THE WORKER.

Accompany each order with a remittance at the rate of $3.50 per hundred copies in lots of 100 or more. There is not a revolutionary worker in the country who should order less than 100 copies. Rush in your orders to THE WORKER, Room 405, 80 E. 11th St., New York City.

DO IT NOW!

All Out!

THE COAL STRIKE

With every indication pointing to a nationwide strike of Coal Miners on April 1, because the owners of the nation's coal, believing they have the whip-hand, have refused to even meet the miners on the matter of wages and hours, with the Federal government claiming that it can do nothing to prevent the strike, it is well to remember 1919 and the attitude of the government at that time.

Then the miners were on the offensive; they wanted a raise in wages to meet the increased cost of living, and they were met with a federal injunction and federal troops.

The strike in some districts was prevented; in others broken by government agencies.

To-day, the coal barons seek a reduction in wages, the abolition of certain working conditions and separate district agreements designed to take all power over their jobs from the workers.

No injunction has been issued against the coal barons. None will be issued.

But if and when the miners down their tools, the troops of the state and federal government will be on hand to overawe the strikers and to "protect" the scum of the earth the coal companies will bring in to take the places of the strikers.

One thing is as certain as that day follows night.

It is that when this government of coal, oil and steel acts in the coming strike it will act for those whose property it is—the industrial and finance capitalists of this nation.

The coal barons are arrogant because they know that they have at their command every weapon of the state power; because, being their own tool, they know it will not be used in behalf of the miners.

They feel as safe as any exploiting class can feel in these rather uncertain times.

The odds are in their favor if figured by the usual formula—government plus army plus press equals an enslaved working class.

It seems to us that now is the time for the workers of this nation to make a stand.

Let everything else go for a while and give the miners the solid backing of every worker in the country who knows—as he must—that the defeat of the miners means defeat for labor all along the line.

The coal barons know it, the steel trust knows it and so does every agency of American capitalism.

Working-class solidarity is the only antidote for the poisonous formula of capitalism, and if the workers will throw their whole strength into the fight the offensive of the employing class will be checked.

It is time to demonstrate once and for all that the workers have ceased to be fooled by government officials owned body and soul by the same class which retains its control on the natural resources of this country.

Miners Confronted with Money Control of Cabinet Officials

By LAURENCE TODD

(Staff Correspondent, Federated Press and The Worker)

WASHINGTON.—Mine owners have the "inside track" with the Harding administration, and there will be no effective intervention by the chief to prevent the nation-wide attack on the United Mine Workers of America April 1st unless the wrath of labor shall be powerfully stirred meanwhile.

That is the basic fact in the situation facing miners and operators a week before the crisis of their dispute.

President Harding has as his most influential adviser the same Herbert Hoover who has been inviting the newspaper correspondents to report that a finish fight in the coal [illegible]

As his attorney general he has Harry Daugherty, lifelong corporation lawyer, who has already indicated that he will go even farther than Mitchell Palmer was prepared to go in crushing "disorder" in the event of a strike.

As his host during his present cruise in Florida the president has Ned McLean, owner of the Washington Post, which has conducted a savage editorial propaganda against the United Mine Workers for years past, and which distinguished itself by its hysterical denunciation of the unions during the great steel strike of two years ago. McLean is one of the president's close advisers.

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, one of America's richest men, is a heavy owner of the securities of a large number of the industrial corporations in the Pittsburgh district, and is identified with the financial group which is seeking to smash the miners' organization this year.

Secretary of War Weeks and Secretary of the Navy Denby are even more "hard-boiled" than Mellon and Daugherty. They would probably welcome an opportunity to warn Harding against any intervention when the operators seemed to have a chance to restore feudal conditions in the coal fields of the central states. Each has slashed the wages of government employes under his control in brusque disregard of the appeals of the unions for negotiation of the issue.

Secretary of Labor Davis, who is counted as a mere hand-shaking ornament to the official family, with neither authority nor influence, is permitted to announce that the government "cannot and will not" take any step to prevent the strike, except to "suggest" that the operators meet the union spokesmen in conference before they break off relations. He explains that after the strike has gone on long enough to prove that the public is suffering for want of coal, the government will be in a position to go into court and ask for injunctions compelling a resumption of mining.

It was far different in the fall of 1919, when Judge Anderson enjoined the miners, under the Lever act, from stopping work. At that time the operators were resisting an increase in wages, and the miners had to act. Now, when the operators want to starve the miners into taking a reduction in wages and a surrender of working conditions, the administration finds itself powerless to prevent the operators from undertaking the fight, even tho such a struggle once started will be almost impossible to control.

WAGES vs. PRICES

The comparison (wage and living cost increases) is made with 100 as the base in 1913.

Year	Union wage rate	Cost of living
1913	100	100
1914	102	103
1915	102	105.1
1916	106	118.3
1917	112	142.4
1918	130	174.4
1919	191	199.3

Wage advance lagged behind, and far behind, price advances throut all this period of profiteering. * * * Normal wages may be high, but the total earnings of a laborer at the end of the week—listen to this statement—will buy less food and clothing and fuel today than they would buy before the war. Real wages have actually declined.

As [illegible] to emphasize the class character of the government at this moment, the United States supreme court dismissed the appeal of counsel for Alexander Howat and the Kansas coal miners' organization against the constitutionality of the Kansas industrial court act. The supreme court finds itself without authority to deal with the case. Howat and his organization must fight it out in Kansas.

Coal operators' lobbyists here are trying to learn the probable strength of the alliance made by the railroad labor organizations with the United Mine Workers and the Longshoremen, last month, at Chicago. They are taking precautions lest a part of the railroad workers start to throw in their lot with the coal miners after the coal strike is under way.

The miners say they do not anticipate a rail strike in connection with their own defensive suspension of work.

Debs Pledges Aid to Release of New York Class War Prisoners

In a letter to the Provisional Committee for Amnesty of New York Political Prisoners made up of all defense unions of New York—National Defense Committee, Workers Defense Committee, Italian Defense [illegible] and Civil Liberties Bureau, Eugene V. Debs called upon all workers, organized and unorganized to energetically support the drive for the freedom of our fellow workers and also stated in the letter:

"If I were only well enough I would be on the platform on behalf of the shamefully persecuted and outraged comrades of ours whose loyalty to the working class keeps them imprisoned and treated as felons.

"As soon as my physical strength is sufficiently restored, I shall be only too glad to help in your work in every way in my power.

"It is with pleasure as well as with a sense of duty to our imprisoned comrades of New York that I accept membership on the Executive Committee."

Sign the Roll Call of the Friends of Soviet Russia. And give! While the famine claims one victim in the Workers' Republic we must not rest.

Mayor Deaf to Demands of Jobless

The Council of Unemployed has endeavored to see the mayor of the city of New York, to find out whether he cannot do something to alleviate the acute unemployment situation prevalent in the city.

Electing a committee to call upon him, the Council expected that he would at least state the stand of the municipal authorities—and perhaps make a gesture of interest in the fate of 400,000 unemployed men and women in the city. It would be good politics, good policy—even to play with the problem of unemployment—if it could still be done.

Complete Disregard for Unemployed

Instead, the mayor handed the Committee of Unemployed over to his Commissioner of Unemployment, who in turn referred the matter to Mr. John Sullivan of the Industrial Aid Bureau—the City Employment Office.

In short, the mayor refuses to be disturbed in his peace of mind. He declines to have his daily routine interrupted by such a minor matter as the unemployment of 400,000 people in the metropolis!

Mere confession of interest—and of impotency, as Mr. John Sullivan admitted, will not solve the problem. WORK is what the unemployed want—but the mayor is busy with other, far more important matters.

Blithe remarks to the effect that "things are brightening up," that "the industrial situation is loosening up," and similar expressions of satisfaction with things as they are, will provide NO WORK for the unemployed.

But work MUST be provided; 400,000 jobless are a menace to all workers still in possession of a job—and they are a danger to the peace of the city. Increase in crime, increase in suicides—crime waves, prostitution, insanity—all in the wake of unemployment.

WELL, WHAT ABOUT IT?—asks the Council of Unemployed.

What about it, Mr. Mayor? Are you going to accept the responsibility—are you going to do something?

You have turned down the unemployed to-day—you will confer with them some other day. So says the Council of Unemployed.

Patriots May—Jobless May Not

The Unemployment Council is preparing for a parade of the unemployed. It is high time that the "good citizens," as Mr. Secretary of Labor Davis calls them, and the authorities be apprised of the fact and extent of unemployment.

Words in reports, newspapers and bulletins mean nothing. They need the living demonstration of masses of jobless who require work and food, in order to keep alive.

But like the emperors of old, they try to deny their existence or to forget them, by keeping them out of sight.

Knowing that there would be a parade on St. Patrick's Day, in which all patriots would participate, and that the streets are for the use of the people of the city, the Unemployment Council asked for a permit to hold a parade, demanding rights equal to those of all others.

finitely launched and at which a concrete program of action will be decided.

The Criminal Anarchy Law

These nine men were convicted under the Criminal Anarchy Law passed immediately after the assassination of President McKinley. That law makes it a felony to advocate the doctrine that organized government should be overthrown by the assassination of the executive officials of government, by force or violence or by any unlawful means.

None of these men advocated criminal anarchy in any sense—none of these men advocated assassination—none of these men advocated unlawful acts of any kind, but they did advocate industrial unionism, socialism, communism, the general strike, the establishment of a working-class government in the United States in place of the government dominated by the capitalists.

Law Used Against the Workers

The Criminal Anarchy law was passed in 1902 but never used until 1919. Then it was disentombed by the witch-hunting Lusk Committee.

It was brought into use not against any terrorists aimed at by the law but against those who advocated an orderly industrial organization based on the social needs of the whole people instead of the gigantic profits of a very small privileged class.

The radical changes needed in the law of 1902 to make it serve the Lusk Committee purposes of 1919 were freely and shamelessly made by the courts, under the guise of "interpretation."

So great was the discrepancy between the law and its application in these cases that the Grand Jury which returned seven of the nine indictments in its final report of March 3, 1921—after the men were in prison—recommended that the law be amended to put the general strike on the same basis as assassinations and force or violence.

Also they proposed that the law be changed to cover agitation against the existing government of the United States in place of the anarchy doctrine. This was a clear admission that the men in prison were wrongfully convicted under the law as it stands.

Court Especially Appointed

Justice Bartow S. Weeks was especially appointed by the governor to preside over an extraordinary term of the Supreme Court to try the cases arising from the investigations of the Lusk Committee.

The first trial was of Gus Alonen and Carl Paivio, who were sentenced to terms of four to eight years.

They were members of the I. W. W. and were charged with publishing certain writings in a Finnish industrial paper. They have been imprisoned since the summer of 1919.

Before the same court—with Justice Weeks acting as prosecutor all thru the trials—came also the cases of Benjamin Gitlow, James Larkin, C. E. Ruthenberg and I. E. Ferguson, charged with the publication, on July 5, 1919, of the manifesto of the Left Wing of the Socialist Party. These defendants were each sentenced from five to ten years.

Harry Winitsky was charged with being a member of and helping to organize the Communist Party. It is a new thing in American law to punish as a felony membership in an organization. For this crime of belonging to the Communist Party, Winitsky was sentenced from five to ten years.

Ignatz Mizher, Cortland, New York, and Paul Manko, Brooklyn, are also Communists. Mizher was sentenced from five to ten years for handing out a pamphlet containing the program of the Communist Party. Manko was sentenced to two and a half to five years for handing out a leaflet of the Communist Party.

The fight is still being made in the courts. The Left Wing Socialist cases upheld by the Appellate Division are now before the Court of Appeals. If they are lost they will be carried to the United States Supreme Court on the ground that the Criminal Anarchy Law is unconstitutional. The other cases are still to be decided by the Appellate Division.

Decisions Must Be Set Aside

It is of vital importance to the wage-workers of this state that advocacy of the general strike be not punishable as a crime. The decision of the Appellate Division must be set aside.

Experience has proven that decisions of this character, if they stand unchallenged, have a way of [illegible] of advocacy or action on behalf of the working class.

Altho the constitutionality of the law under which these men are imprisoned has never been passed upon by the highest state court bail has been refused pending the appeals. Most of the men have already been jailed more than two years, all more than one year.

Amnesty for Political Prisoners

These cases are clearly persecutions for advocacy of working-class ideals. They are a violation of the right of free speech and free press. Court procedure is slow. The way to immediate freedom is a united working-class demand for amnesty.

Mayor Hylan, of New York City, has found something to take his mind off the unemployed problem. He is now in the midst of a battle over a statue to be called "Civic Virtue" to be erected in City Hall Park. May the hungry enjoy themselves by feasting their eyes, not their stomachs, upon its beauties when completed.

More Help Needed for Starving Russia— Every Week, Ever Month

A woman sits on the sun-swept pavement of a street in Saratov. Across her knees there lies a long, thin little body. The dirty bare legs and the dirty naked arms of the infant hang listlessly. The child threw back its head and lay stretched out with closed eyes, breathing heavily, and a hectic flush on either waxlike cheek. The mother utters not a word. She merely supports the dead little body on her knees and looks beseechingly at the passers-by and cries. Sitting thus, it is as though she is offering a sacrifice to the glaring sun, the seething street and the human throng. Without sound, before the eyes of all, a terrible tragedy is being enacted.

To relieve the terrible distress the Friends of Soviet Russia has launched a city-wide campaign to secure pledges from individuals, clubs, unions, fraternal organizations, which will be asked to contribute sums ranging from $25 to 25 cents every week or every month. The immediate goal is to get more than 10,000 pledgers by May 1st.

Pledge cards, pledge stamps, and other material may be obtained at the following places: 83 East 4th Street, 250 West 25th Street, 230 East Broadway, 350 East 81st Street, 59 East 105th Street, 1403 Fifth Avenue, 1347 Boston Road, 226 Roebling Street, Brooklyn, 229 Sackman Street, Room 104. Mayor Hylan Is Deaf to Demands of 400,000 - Jobless in New York City

The unemployed have no rights in the city—less even than the workers on the job. They have no right to march in orderly ranks down the streets. They have no right to march even thru the side-streets and gather up their fellows and send a delegation to the mayor, in order that he may know that there are jobless people in the city.

NOT SO!

If there are jobless people in the city, let them keep out of sight of the good people, who have worries of their own!

Demands Right to Use Streets

The Unemployment Council demands the right to use the streets the same as other organizations. It demands that the city officials stop playing football with the question. The unemployed want to demonstrate their misery. They want the "good citizens" to learn of their struggle against hunger and lack of work. They demand that they be accorded the use of the streets the same as other patriotic, religious and similar organizations.

To demand these rights, and to report to the workers in detail what the Mayor has stated to the Unemployed Delegation, there will be held a meeting at Astoria Hall on Saturday, March 25, 2:30 P. M.

On Monday, March 27, at 11 A. M., the Council of Unemployed will hold two open-air demonstrations, one at 10th St. and Second Ave., the other at South Ferry in front of 25 South Street.

Action will be taken on the report of the Mayor and of the Police Department in refusing the parade.

An article which appeared in a recent issue of the "Industrial Unionist," the official organ of the I. W. W., in which the strike of the Lunchroom Workers of the Amalgamated Food Industries and the sympathetic strike of the Public Service Organization in the Rand School was "explained" as provoked and inspired and the members of the latter organization branded as "scabs" and their Union as "yellow" and, as we have reason to believe was written and modelled by the Editor of the Industrial Unionist himself after the fashion of the old time saying—'Convict first, investigate after"—is regarded by the majority of the members of the Public Service Organization as only an incident in the class war, wrongly applied.

We would have refrained from any action in this matter, if it was not for the reason to clear those members of our organization, who also hold an I. W. W. card, of all responsibility for the irresponsible act of this "intelligent" Editor of the "Industrial Unionist."

Summing up,—we believe to act in accordance with the sentiment of every right-thinking worker and in the interest of the Labor movement, to demand, of the Editor of the Industrial Unionist, in the next issue to either retract the (his) article in question or to state his reasons to the contrary.

Until then, we, the members of the Public Service Organization will refrain from any further action and ask the members of other organizations to do likewise.

What does America want? Soviet Russia would like to know. Let the workers of America find out what hopes the Washington [illegible] have against the Workers' Republic.

[illegible]

Would you expose it to the elements of a zero winter evening for want of a roof and a blanket to cover its little body?

Would you have it fade away to a mere skeleton, undergoing [illegible] indescribable misery, want and hunger, for the want of a piece of bread? Would you leave death claim it after weeks of untold starvation, without turning heaven and hell . . . even sacrificing your very life to obtain for it those things which would have saved its life?

And you answer most eloquently, "My very life a thousand times would I give that the child of my love shall live" . . . yet you are well fed, warmly clad, having a comfortable bed to sleep in, while nine million eight hundred thousand children, your children, the children of your class are actually starving to death in the world's first workers' republic, when a little sacrifice on your part would have saved their lives. The future, said Liebknecht, "lies with the young."

It is these young children of your class who shall bring forth into blossom, the Workers Republic which is so dear to the hearts of every class conscious rebel.

Workers of the World, Your Children Call! Answer in unmistakable tones, with the dollars that will buy the staff of life.

The future of Soviet Russia lies in its young. Due to the draught, the blockade and the mercenary invasions of the capitalist powers of the world, countless thousands breathe no more. Give all you can and more, that these fallen heroes of the Class Struggle shall not have died in vain. Give until it hurts, so that it will not be said that the First Workers' Republic was left to perish because the call of its children in need was not answered. Open Your Heart. Clear Your Conscience. Give for posterity, for your children, for the revolution.

Prepare for May Day

The call for the celebration of International May Day this year has been issued by the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party.

So far as we are aware, this is the only call for the celebration of this year's May Day that has been issued by any working-class organization.

We, therefore, wish to draw special attention to that feature of the call providing for the organization of May Day Conferences in all centers of working-class strength.

There should be a thousand such centers in this country, where the workers organizations will send their delegates to joint committees to prepare for the celebration of this year's International May Day.

This Joint May Day Committee offers an excellent opportunity to put life and spirit into a united labor front against the open shop and reduction in wages; against industrial court laws and injunctions, and for the release of all the class-war prisoners, for work or compensation at union wages for the unemployed, and for the recognition of and trade with Soviet Russia.

The Worker will do all in its power to promote the organization everywhere of such committees. It will carry on an active propaganda this month to arouse the workers everywhere to the significance of May Day. It will issue a Special May Day Edition that should receive the widest possible circulation.

Forward to May Day, 1922! Make it a day long to be remembered by the workers. Make it a day long to be feared by the profiteers and exploiters.

Irish Labor's Opportunity

If Irish labor had a program, if most of its officials were not trying to play politics with one set or another of fakirs, a Soviet republic could be established in Ireland to-morrow.

The army is ready. Its members have borne the brunt of the long conflict, and they want something more than the empty phrase of national independence.

The workers of Ireland will have to run the factories if peace ever comes; they might as well run them for themselves.

The moral effect of such a step on the British labor movement would be tremendous, to say nothing of the impetus given to the labor movement here.

The Irish workers have the power in their hands now.

Will they use it for themselves or will they continue to fight for the hopeless program of the Irish capitalists and their representatives?

Ellen Van Volkenburg and Maurice Browne, who have taken over the Greenwich Village Theatre for a repertory season and who presented Bernard Shaw's "Candida" Wednesday night as their opening bill, announce popular prices will prevail at the theatre during their tenancy. The top price, except on Saturday nights, will be $2 and will range down to 50c, there being a number of seats at the latter price. There is only one gallery in the theatre.

Pity the poor relatives and descendants of the late Viscount William Waldorf Astor. He left personal property in New York City valued at only $23,641,262. The wages of the workers on the railroads in which the Astor estate has stock should be reduced at once. Up with the rents. The rich shall not die. Not if the ignorant can help it.

Northwest Jewish Branch, Philadelphia, votes a loan of $100 to the Literature Department and decides to run an entertainment, the total proceeds to go to the National Organization Fund. The sale of Organization stamps is progressing satisfactorily.

The Bazaar

The International Bazaar, held by the National Defense Committee at the Lyceum, East 86th Street, is in full swing as we go to press.

The response to the campaign of the N. D. C. has been remarkable and the hall is filled with article of every description displayed at fourteen beautiful booths.

The catering is being handled by the Amalgamated Food Workers and the service is equal to that of the best restaurants. Classic dancing enlivened the proceedings Wednesday evening; Music is furnished by a string orchestra.

Friday and Saturday nights those in attendance will be entertained by a variety of acts arranged by the committee. Dancing will be continuous except when an act is on the stage.

Wonderful bargains are to be had at the booths in wearing apparel, books, novelties and art objects of all kinds.

The whole afternoon and evening can be spent at the bazaar without exhausting its possibilities of entertainment.

All money received goes for the defense of the class-war prisoners, and everyone who has their interests at heart should attend at least one evening.

By I. AMTER.

The latest bulletin of the U. S. Employment Service is not at all encouraging upon the question of decreasing unemployment. In fact, a survey of the different districts shows that in most of them unemployment has not at all diminished. On the contrary, altho in certain districts and states there is an increase of employment, where unemployment increased it did so at a far greater ratio than is to be noted in its decrease.

The most that the business interests can report is "optimism." This is such a flexible, convenient term that it covers almost anything.

Furthermore, it must not be forgotten that the bulletin is a governmental publication. The bias on the part of the government to suppressing all information giving a clear survey of the economic status, is well known. Not such a long time ago, Mr. Hoover stated that employment was on the increase, whereas statistics proved incontrovertibly that the situation was becoming worse. Nor shall we forget the shelving of Senator Kenyon's bill on unemployment, as a result of which the Department of Commerce was prevented from publishing figures on unemployment.

Now we have the reports of the U. S. Employment Service, and facts alone demonstrate that unemployment was never so grave in the United States as at the present moment. Steel is the criterion of economic conditions in the United States. Pittsburg reports that "winter dullness in the meantime still prevails . . . . No improvement is shown in the coal-mining industry."

There is one feature of the matter of unemployment that is generally completely forgotten. It is not only the hopelessness that confronts the workers out of a job. It is not only the fact that he daily faces the refusal of work, but that, slowly eating up his earnings, he steadily curtails his expenditures, cuts down to the bare necessities, in order that his money may last a trifle longer. Finally comes the period in which nickels jingle along in his pocket, and he begins to go without a meal.

If he is a married man with children, it means that his wife has long been looking for work. Sometimes it is to be had; more often, it is a hopeless search. The outlays for food are cut down; milk for the children does not appear so often on the table. The children go to school hungry. They return more often to a meal of bread and oleomargarine. Finally we reach the stage where parents give their children ether or some other dope to still their hunger.

In the meantime, no attempt is being made to procure work for the worker. Despite all protestations, the authorities are doing nothing. Highly concerned about taxes and the welfare of "business", the mayors and governors refuse to recommend any public works that will mean a high tax on the business interests.

Hence, with the constant "passing of the buck", with a denial of responsibility, with the shelving of every bill that is introduced in Congress for alleviating the distress of the unemployed—and with it a utilization of every department of government, municipal, state and national, to coerce the workers and labor unions and to destroy their power—the workers are beginning to lose the little confidence they have had in the government and to look to means of their own for relieving the situation.

Unemployment Councils or Councils of Unemployed are being established in all parts of the country. Seattle has formed a virile organization, and is creating Councils in the neighboring towns. A Northwest Convention of the Unemployed may be called in the near future. Salt Lake City has organized a Council, has registered the unemployed and issued membership cards.

Minneapolis is on the unemployment map. Indianapolis is organizing a Council. Milwaukee and Bethlehem are in the process of organization.

The Unemployment Council organized by the Chicago Federation of Labor has held a large number of meeting among the unions and for union members.

The most active Council is the New York Unemployment Council. In addition to carrying on a virile campaign among the Labor Unions, seeking their affiliation for the real work of organizing the unemployed, the Unemployment Council has held a large number of propaganda meetings, at which it has organized the jobless and registered them.

It is a case of "either—or" with the workers. Either they will get together to effect their demands by the very power of their numbers—or they will be crushed under the iron heels of the masters.

The government is beginning to realize, not the merit of strategy and diplomacy, but the determination of the unemployed to organize. Lacking all sagacity and filled with pride that comes from a sense of power, they are acting ruthlessly toward the jobless.

Too many of the unemployed are ex-servicemen, who have faced the horrors of war, and hence are not to be terrorized by the blue-coated policemen or platoons of police held in readiness somewhere round the corner, or scores of detectives hovering round the meetings to detect "sedition" and "nip riots" it in the bud.

The reaction has set in and set in with full force. One branch of the labor movement is on the upgrade. The Unemployment Councils represent the most determined section of the working class.

Latest dispatches, however, from Copenhagen, the Danish capital, remind us of our own struggle in West Virginia, the textile districts of New England, and in other [illegible] parts of this country.

We are told that troops have been called out to [illegible] the streets of Copenhagen where 150,000 workers have been locked out in a large number of industries. [illegible]

The lockout in Denmark, that is [illegible] labor struggle in the history of the country, [illegible] the part of the bosses to cut wages 20 per cent and increase the working hours.

Peasants are acting as strikebreakers in the loading and unloading of ships, and many cases of bloody conflicts between them and the locked-out workers have been reported. In Copenhagen the strikebreakers are lodged on board ships and receive wages three times as high as that offered the workers.

The sale of coal has been prohibited in the capital. The workers in the building trades have decided by an overwhelming majority to reject the award of the arbitration commission. These building workers hitherto not affected by the lockout have decided to go out on a sympathetic strike. The drivers and teamsters of Copenhagen refuse to transport goods handled by the strikebreakers. As a result the transport of agricultural products has come to a standstill. The police has been mobilized and has acted in various towns in a provocative manner.

How like the news of a strike in "democratic" America sounds the latest information about this struggle in "free" Denmark.

The class struggle rages on a world-wide front and capitalism everywhere fights back with the same weapons.

The inspiration to be gained from the Danish capital is the fact that the workers there are standing together in closely knit ranks. They are developing a powerful Communist movement, section of the Third International. They have a daily paper maintained at great sacrifice. They will win because they have the will to win against capitalism, not because the capitalists show signs of relenting or getting tired in the struggle.

A Contrast

The German Social-Democratic government has added one more infamy to the long list of its crimes against workingclass solidarity. The Spanish workers, Fort and Concepcion, who sought asylum in Germany after being accused of the execution of the infamous Dato, have been delivered up to the tender mercies of the Spanish courts by Radbruch, the social-democratic minister of justice.

The "socialist" government of Germany held that these workers were not political prisoners and that the crime of which they were accused was not a political crime altho even an infantile intellect knows that Spain is practically in a state of civil war; that the workers are fighting against a campaign of terror similar to that following the rise of the Horthy regime in Hungary.

There are publications in the Uunited States however, styling themselves "workingclass organs," which can still find time to apologize for a government which violates the first principle of socialism—solidarity.

In contrast to the betrayal of militant workers into the hands of the hangmen by the Social-Democratic tools of world capitalism, is the recent release of 70 workers from the dungeon of the Horthy government, a release that was forced by the revolutionary government of Russia.

These liberated workers passed thru Germany on their way to Russia at about the same time that the German Social-Democracy took up the role of bloodhound for the capitalist government of Spain.

"All The Daily Papers"

The Call, in an editorial entitled "The Communist Cults," explains that a story, "Foster League Communistic, Catholics Say," upon which this paper commented, was published because it was a news item appearing in all the daily papers. We believe it.

We have here, in a nut-shell, the finest exposition of the policy of The Call in handling news matter, that we have yet been favored with. It satisfies us. It explains the reason for the appearance of many things in the columns of The Call to which clear-minded workers have taken exception. Other dailies—the capitalist dailies—carry these stories. So does The Call.

We are a little surprised to find that we agree with The Call on even one matter, but agree we do that the chief reason for publishing much of the matter The Call carries is that it also appears in the capitalist press. Little stories about the dictatorship in Russia, about the wonderful Stinnes and his troupe of trained social-democrats, why Liebknecht deserved death, etc., strike the same note in the capitalist sheets and in The Call.

After making this explanation—for which we are grateful—The Call proceeds to prove its agreement with the agencies of capitalist government to which it kindly gives publicity—because all the other dailies—do it by launching another attack on Communists and Communism.

"All the other dailies" do it, too.

Revolution in the Rand. Insurgency in India. Eruptions in Egypt. Imbroglios in Ireland. Strikes in Scotland. Unemployment in England. The life of the lion is just one damn thing after another these days.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is establishing medical schools in China. There is a lot of oil in China, and the professors are merely the forerunners of profits.

[illegible] William J. Flynn, former Chief of the U. S. Secret Service, writing in the New York Herald of his experiences with the Department of Justice, completely exonerates Mooney and Billings of any connection with the outrage and ascribes the crime to an alleged group.

Mentioning the alleged leader of the group, Ex-Chief Flynn asserts positively:

"We know that he was in full possession of all of the facts of the San Francisco bomb plot for which Tom Mooney and others went to jail. At the time the outrage was perpetrated, he was writing for one of the numerous ephemeral newspapers he either founded or edited. That he was more or less informed regarding the San Francisco affair we gathered from one of his editorials, wherein he declared that neither Billings, Mooney, Nolan, Weinberg nor Rena Mooney was guilty.

"That statement in itself was not particularly impressive, inasmuch as newspapers of the so-called capitalistic class had said similar things about the affair. But his editorial continued to say that the preparedness parade that was bombed that day in San Francisco constituted 'a triumph of shame, of vileness, of idleness, treason and cowardice.'

"Inasmuch as I had nothing to do with the San Francisco affair, I am not in a position to hold forth thereon. But this I do know, whoever did it was well known to the editor and he knew it was about to be perpetrated and who was to do the actual work."

Commenting upon Flynn's belated revelations, the Irish World, published in New York, declares editorially:

"This testimony strengthens the many convincing proofs already given of Mooney and Billings' innocence of the crime for which they are undergoing a life imprisonment. Neither would be now behind prison bars, had it not been that they were champions of organized labor. Are the labor unions to remain inactive whilst this glaring injustice is unredressed?"

The Mooney-Billings defense committee bitterly denounced Flynn's silence over a period of six years while the two labor men were languishing in jail for a crime he declares they did not commit. Now that he can capitalize his revelations by offering them for publication at a big price, he has broken into print, the committee, headed by Mrs. Rena Mooney, declares.

United Labor Council Hits Industrial Unionist

The United Labor Council, at its recent meeting, went on record as unanimously condemning the article in the Industrial Unionist, March 10, regarding the Rand School strike, declaring it to be untruthful and unfair to the workers involved.

It was announced that the next meeting of the Sacco-Vanzetti Conference would be held on Sunday afternoon, March 26, at 83 E. 4th St., at 2 o'clock sharp.

Delegates from Inside Iron and Bronze Workers' Union reported that steps should be taken to unite their Local with the other two iron and bronze workers' unions.

Shoe Workers' Unity Committee reported that there would be a meeting of the executive boards of the Amalgamated Shoe Workers' Union, the Children's Shoe Workers' Union and the Joint Council of the United Shoe Workers' Union.

Motion to elect an organization committee for the local Council carried. The following were elected: P. J. McClellan, R. Baker, John Assel, Jos. E. Kucher, Herman Wheeler, Joseph Miller, Robert Lacker, Dan Rickert, H. J. Rubinstein, Leo Kinsello, Arthur Doyle, L. Shelley, Andrew Friedline, R. W. Rickstein, U. Cervi, A. Rosenfeld, S. Cloner, S. Chicago Central Body Issues National Call for Industrialization

CHICAGO.—The Chicago Federation of Labor, by an overwhelming majority, has adopted a resolution demanding that the executive council of the American Federation of Labor immediately call a conference of international unions to devise ways and means of amalgamating on industrial lines the many unions now operating in the various basic industries.

The resolution called attention to the ineffectiveness of the present style of organisation and the disastrous results of craft division as exemplified by the failure to resist to any appreciable extent the low wage and open shop campaign, pointing out that the finances and energies of the labor unions were now diverted into many channels from which no return is obtained.

The Chicago Federation of Labor will urge all bodies affiliated with the American Federation of Labor to inaugurate a similar campaign and help to create a national sentiment for a speedy industrialisation of the American labor movement.

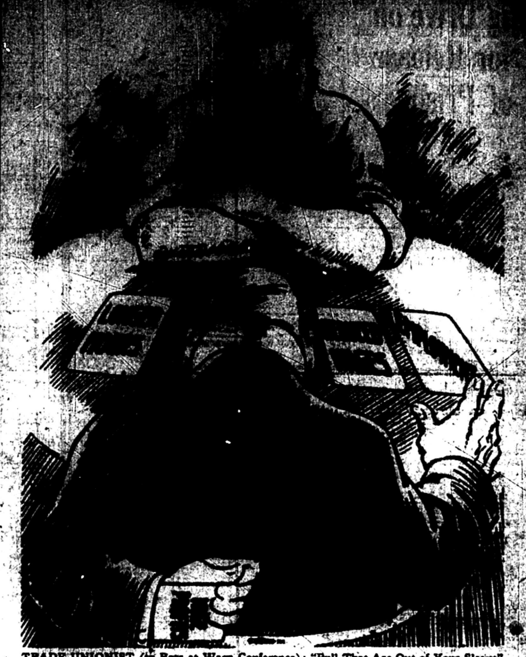
All friendly organizations are requested not to arrange any conflicting entertainments on that day.



TRADE UNIONIST (to Boss at Wage Conference): "Pull That Ace Out of Your Sleeve"

American Wage-Earners Lost Four to Ten Per Cent in Twenty Years

(By The Federated Press)

CLEVELAND.—The pay received today by American workers is less in purchasing value than the wages paid for similar labor in 1900, says Basil Manly, in a wage study entitled Are Wages Too High? published by Brotherhood Press of this city and distributed by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Manly is a former joint chairman of the war labor board.

Manly finds the worker who made $2 a day in 1900 had to make $6 in 1920 simply to "break even," and that according to the figures compiled by the bureau of census and the department of labor, the real wages of almost every important group of workers in the country have declined from 4 to 10 percent during the past 20 years.

The official figures show, for instance, that while pick miners received 52 cents a ton in 1900, 65 cents in 1913, and $1.1165 in 1921, the purchasing power of these wages in comparison with 52 cents in 1900 is but $.4485 in 1913 and $.4279 in 1921. Similarly, the pay envelopes received by railroad engineers and conductors today will buy $162 and $95 less, respectively, of the necessities of life than would the wages they received in 1900.

The only actual increase in wages has been received by those railroad employes who were paid so low in 1900 that there was no place for their wages to go but up, Manly says.

"With the exception of a few isolated and exceptionally skilled trades, the wages of American workers are insufficient, without supplement from other sources, to provide for the subsistence of a family consisting of husband, wife and three minor children, much less maintain them in that condition of health and reasonable comfort which every humane consideration demands," Manly [illegible].

"American labor has been consistently deprived of its fair share in the ever-increasing productivity of the nation's industries. It is this ever-increasing inequity that is at the root of the nation's frequent industrial depression. And it is out of this constant underpayment of labor that a large part of the great private fortunes and the huge surpluses of American corporations have been created," is another conclusion.

A MASS STRUGGLE FOR A DECENT LIVELIHOOD

In the Pawtuxet Valley of Rhode Island, where there has never before been a strike and never much of a union, 8,000 men and women are in the third month of their strike

Against a 20 Per Cent Reduction of Wages

The average wage, under this cut, would be $17 for a week of 54 hours. Sanitary and social conditions in the Pawtuxet Valley are the most unhealthful and depressing in the United States. "Rhode Island is run by the textile manufacturers to suit their own purposes," says the New York World, (Feb. 25.) "The textile industry is in possession of the machinery of government."

The cotton manufacturers contend they can not continue to operate without reducing wages, but they have refused to submit their books to investigation, so that the truth about manufacturing costs may be discovered. They have rejected arbitration. "The public be damned," is their attitude. "Ours is a private business," is what they actually say.

Eight Thousand Strikers Say It Is THEIR Business and the Public's.

Will you help the strikers to make their idea the dominant one? Only HUNGER can defeat these aroused men and women. HUNGER is the ally of economic despotism.

[illegible] Really Is Anyway

By JEANETTE [illegible]

There has been introduced into the N. Y. State Assembly a bill for the purpose of removing all civil and legal disabilities which still affect women.

The bill purports to be a "revolution" as one of its staunch defenders, [illegible] Hill, of the Woman's Party, calls it, but it is indeed far from any such description.

On the other hand, it is exceedingly important that the working women be made to understand the true significance of it and not allow themselves to be carried away by the phrases of the leaders of the Woman's Party, the protagonists of the bill.

Bill Deals With Property Rights

The blanket bill which the Woman's Party urges for the introduction in the state legislatures consist primarily of the repeal or passage of laws which would abolish restrictions which now exist regarding property rights in one way or another.

For example, "the right to acquire, inherit, control, hold, and convey property; freedom of contract, including becoming a party in any capacity to negotiable instruments or evidence of indebtedness, or becoming surety or guarantor; acting as executors or administrators of estates of decedents. Choice of domicile, residence and name."

To a certain extent, these are revolutionary measures; revolutionary in the sense of the eighteenth century revolution when the middle class rose to economic power and this change had to be accompanied by a corresponding change in the legal code.

Such movements have repeatedly occurred ever since the beginning of propertied classes. The rise of a class from one economic status to another has always been followed by a movement which legalized the possessions of this new class and put them into permanent power.

This agitation for abolishing legal disabilities for women is but another step in this age-long process. The women of the middle class have reached the point where they find themselves somewhat hampered in their activities. Many of them have quit the drawing room and have entered the professions and the business world. This has necessarily resulted in their striking out more and more on their own behalf; in the acquisition of property and then in its disposition. Their desire to do with that property what they choose is prevented by laws which reflect woman's inferior economic status.

Is this movement then a step forward or not? From the point of view of the evolution of property rights, it is undoubtedly a move forward. The fact, however, which is of interest to us is what should be the attitude of the working women toward this question.

It is true there are some legal injustices which affect the working women as well as the middle class. For instance, it is well nigh impossible for a woman to secure a divorce in some states even tho she possess the strongest evidence against her husband.

In some states, the husband has a right to his wife's earnings. Of course, such conditions are deplorable. We differ, though, from the bourgeois agitation in understanding the economic foundation underlying these inequalities.

The energy to be expended in removing these evils is being misdirected when the laws themselves are aimed at. The cause lies in a system of society which permits and continues to foster class inequalities. It is at the cause we must strike; we must destroy it root and branch.

As was pointed out above, the laws desired by the Woman's Party are mainly such as concern the middle class women and with that in mind, it is obvious that the women of the proletariat have nothing to gain from them. On the contrary there is a feature which is of great danger to them if this bill is adopted.

In spite of the fact, that the bill contains a section (a sop thrown out to the working-women) stating that this act shall not affect laws regulating the employment of women in industry, there is every reason to believe that once this law goes into effect it will be quite easy for the judges to interpret a labor law for women as being unconstitutional on the ground that it abridges her freedom of contract which the proposed bill specifically demands. The result will be that while granting to the middle class women legal rights in their capacity as property owners, the working-women may lose those few laws which they have won after years of arduous fighting.

Here is another clause to show how far removed this law is from the needs of the women of the proletariat. In addition to asking for property rights, they also ask for the right of a woman, particularly a married woman, to choose her legal residence. At present a married woman's legal residence is her husband's. It so happens that some of these women leaders can afford to maintain separate homes from their husbands and quite naturally they want to be able to vote from their own residence. This worry is one that will seldom affect the working-woman. Very few of them have occasion to worry about this feature when their main anxiety is to maintain the one home which they and their husbands must struggle to uphold.

Let the workers beware of these movements which spring from the bourgeoisie and make a pretence of being revolutionary. They are merely blinders which prevent the workers from seeing more than a piece of democratic legislation which these kind liberals are getting for the "people." There is no such thing as a bill of rights for women apart from men.

The men and women of each class are subject to institutions and law relating to their class and to try to draw a sex line and obliterate the economic cleavage is pure folly and stupidity.

Nor can these institutions and laws be changed by the democratic machinery which these bourgeoisie uphold. There is no other method other than the wiping out of all classes thru the social revolution.

Workers Protest Tyranny of So Called "Socialist" Regime of Yucatan, Mexico

The Workers Party has received the accompanying statement, sworn to before a notary, and signed by the representatives of ten different working-class organizations of Yucatan, Mexico. We have been requested not to publish the names, either of the officials, or of the organizations, fearing the resulting persecution. This declaration is probably the worst indictment so far received of the alleged "Socialist" regime instituted at Yucatan. It declares that the workers are not benefited by the rule of the "Socialists" and expresses a longing for the day when a real workers' rule will be ushered in. The statement in full is as follows:

DEAR Comrades of the United States: The workers of the State of Yucatan of the Republic of Mexico have been informed of the existence of your organization and inasmuch as the lines that you are following are like our own, we are writing you.

The workers of this state have suffered considerably for many years both from the ntaural conditions of the country and also the difficulties of the work which we have to do. We have been suffering for the past six years in a way that is almost indescribable.

First, we were the victims of the capitalists and now we are victims of the socialists.

Since the foundation of the so-called Socialist Party in June, 1916, we joined it because we believed that the leaders of said Party were honest men and truly representative of the general sentiment of the workers and peasants and we thought it best to join such a party.

But today, it is necessary to write you, in order to open the eyes of those who have been misguided concerning our affairs and the great deception that we have suffered at the hands of the leaders of the so-called Socialist Party.

They waste our money and our time, they charge $1.50 per month for the maintenance of the Party and they charge also innumerable amounts of extra fees without rendering to the membership any signed report the way the money is spent. They forced us to have "red cards" under threat of not giving us employment and should we refuse to accept the "red card", they go so far as to murder many of the workers, such as Felipe Arceo, who was killed in the city of Sotuta; Francisco Ucan of the city of Molas; Pedro Suarez, Cecilio Chan, Maria Ucand, Manuel Parra of the city of Tacchichen, and Pedro Huchim of the city of Ticul.

Do Nothing for Workers.

We could mention many more victims that the leaders of the so-called Socialist Party have actually murdered. They are not only the leaders of the Party, but to our misfortune, they are also the political power of the state. They have also the support of the President of the Republic General Alvara Obregon and his colleagues such as the minister of his cabinet, who is General Plutarco Ellias Calles and Jose Vasconselos of Public Instruction.

We say that these men have done absolutely nothing in behalf of the workers in all these years that have transpired.

At the head of this group of socialists we find Felipe Carrillo Puerto, who was an old village teamster, but today is a haughty bourgeois, who in company with his colleagues cries and whines and howls about their sacrifices in behalf of the workers, but we can prove that they have done absolutely nothing in behalf of the workers and peasants and that their published statements in many parts of the republic and abroad are nothing but lies published by the kept press of the Republic of Mexico.

Not the Apostles of Labor.

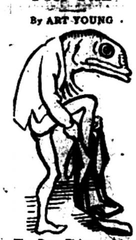
These are not the apostles of the worker, as they call themselves, because they are getting rich at the expense of the workers, not only themselves but also their relatives, and their friends, and their gangsters spending the money they collect from us, in banquets and in the entertainment of the high officials of the Nation.

They go so far as to go to the President of the Republic who gives them his assistance. The hunger and the misery that is now going on among the workers of Yucatan cannot be fully described and we beg you to cease listening to Felipe Carillo and his cohorts.

They are sucking our life blood and are becoming millionaires at the expense of the workers and peasants. We are actually starving and dying of misery, while they themselves are enjoying many luxuries, traveling in automobiles and enjoying themselves daily with strong wine and champagne, while we, the workers and peasants are actually dying of starvation.

Wisdom of the Poor Fish

By ART YOUNG



The Poor Fish says: Anybody who is making a good living ought to keep his mouth shut.

Brook no Opposition.

March 29, 1918, a congress was called in the city of Motul of the state of Yucatan. It was called "the workers' congress," but in truth the workers were not represented in such a congress and nothing was done in behalf of them, but on the contrary, many of them were roughly treated.

In August, 1920, another so-called congress of workers was called in the city of Izamal of this state and exactly as it happened before they laugh at us and they did nothing in behalf of the workers and peasants.

It is nothing but a change of tyrants and exploiters; first we had the capitalists and today we have the socialists, even Felippe Carillo Puerto and his cohorts—men who are ignorant and stupid and who are actually starving us. We can actually prove this to the workers of America.

Want Real Labor Rule.

In the city of Merida we have about 6,947 workers and peasants, as you can ascertain by the signatures at the end of this document. We beg the assistance of you, comrades, we want to establish friendly relations with yourselves in order to defend ourselves and learn how to protect our children from the so-called socialists of Yucatan, who are assassins and incendiaries, who are burning and killing men who refuse to take the so-called "red card," not because they don't want to take it, but sometimes because they haven't got the money and because of this rejection they get killed, leaving their widows, their children and their mothers behind in misery. Not only that, but they have gone so far as to burn the houses and blow them up [illegible]

[illegible]

It is true that we have already Socialist laws enacted by their party but that is all. Now it appears that the name of the Socialist Party is going to be changed in Mexico because a new political party has been organized called the "National Revolutionary Party," and as it happens the same old exploiters are controlling the new party.

Felipe Carrillo Puerto, Miguel Canton, Luis Torregrosa and Jose De La Luz Mena. They are already the representatives to the new party in Yucatan; they have for many years exploited the workers and the peasants and they seem to appear to control the new party in order to continue the exploitation. And this goes on with the [illegible] of the President of the Republic and the gods that control the destiny of the country.

If our appeals to you move you to understand our sufferings and our appeals for assistance we wish to receive from you instructions and teaching as soon as possible, by cable if necessary, as we cannot any longer waste time with these leaders. If it is possible for you to appoint Francisco A. Cano, who is our General Secretary at 604—56th St., Meridan, Yucatan, as the representative of the Workers Party with instructions in Spanish, we shall get together with the peasants and workers and we may be able to have you come and visit us in order to free ourselves from those who deceive us. The Railway Workers, 1800 of them, working in the railway shops of the Yucatan railroad, are under military control when the government was three weeks in arrears in payment the workers went to the officers and asked for their money then the government sent a regiment of soldiers with instructions to shoot to kill at the first sight if any disturbance was made by the workers. This was carried out at the command of the military leader General Alejandro Mange, who is in perfect collusion with the Socialist exploiters and those of Mexico City in order to receive the good will of General Obregon and his ministers. There is no other way but to join ourselves with other organizations of workers of other parts of the world in order to receive their help in a decisive and sincere way in order to give encouragement to the workers of Yucatan. We want the people of the United States to know these conditions and you can inform the workers of the betrayal of the socialist leaders of the state of Yucatan. The help we are soliciting from you now is that you should arouse the sentiment of all the workers of the United States to protest to the executive in behalf of the workers of Yucatan. We are hoping to receive an early reply thru our General Secretary, whose address we have already given you. We know that when you investigate the case of the so-called Socialist leaders they will deny every word, but in order to make it sure we write here with our signatures address of each union and its numerical strength.

The Woman's Place

There are wrongs that must be righted,
Evils that must be fought,
Human wreckage to be rescued,
Lessons that should be taught,
In the conflict waged by brothers,
To uplift a fallen race,
For humanity and justice,
Where is the woman's place?

In her home a mentor tells her,
Cosy and snug and warm.
Shall she then forget the homeless
The friendless, the forlorn?
Must all of her life be centred,
Within that narrow space,
While sisters slave and sin for bread
Is that the woman's place?

While a wrong remains unrighted,
While children go unfed,
While willing hands are idle,
And strong men beg for bread;
While might is right and giant greed
Enslaves the human race,
In the vanguard by her brother—
There is the woman's place.

[illegible] world imperialism was the first to participate in the armed intervention war against Soviet Russia, and that [illegible] in particular France and England. The Czecho-Slovak legions, paid by the French bourgeoisie [illegible] European capitalism. [illegible] that which in the language of diplomacy [illegible] but which in plain language would be [illegible]

The Czecho-Slovaks, led by famous democrats and republicans, invaded Kazan in 1918 and stole the Russian gold funds; in order, these [illegible] said, "to preserve it for the Russian people."

The archives of the Koltchak government contribute some clear facts regarding this wonderfully logical proceeding. The Czecho-Slovaks handed the stolen gold over to the hangman of the Russian workers and peasants—Admiral Koltchak.

We have good reason to doubt whether they delivered the whole of the Russian gold treasure to Koltchak. We do not know exactly what sum he actually received and how much the present Czech generals retained as commission, but, we do know how Koltchak employed these funds.

If these trustworthy republicans and democrats pretend to have rescued the Kazan gold for the Russian people, one glance at the following statements will make it quite clear how Koltchak contrived to use the Russian gold "in the interests of the Russian people."

At various times and in unequal amounts Koltchak paid to:

France	876	poods of gold
England	516	"
Both Countries	698	"
Japan	1,142	"
Total	3,232	poods of gold

1 pood = 36 lb.

Besides these amounts Koltchak deposited for:

	Poods of gold
Guarantee of a loan from Japan	1500
Guarantee to an Anglo-American Syndicate	3937
Guns from the American Government	100
Machine Guns (Trade Mark Gould)	50
Guns from Remington Arms Co.	50
Total	5637
In addition deposits in Shanghai	372

These are official statements from the Koltchak archives. The money stolen from the Russian people has been freely used to murder Russian workmen and peasants, to thicken the forest of gallows growing in the plains of Siberia, to transform hundreds of thousands of dessiatines of arable Russian land into a desert, with the result that after three years' devastation of Soviet Russia, its most fertile districts are for many years eliminated from the granary of the world and that as a final consequence of this there followed the famine, devouring millions of innocent men, women and children, whose sole fault is that they wanted to live free from internal and external oppression.

Many business houses and banks (Bank of the Czech Legions) could relate wondrous tales of how immediately after the arrival of the "heroic" legionaries from Siberia great amounts poured into their coffers, and we are convinced that every one of the heads of these houses would decidedly protest if anyone asserted that they had received the money from the Russian Bolsheviki for Communist propaganda. On the contrary, they would proudly declare this money to have been honestly acquired at the time when the Paris Bourse and Professor Masaryk were reconstructing the Czech State.

If international diplomacy today demands before all that Soviet Russia should pay the debts of all the Russian governments extant since the revolution this demand fully corresponds to the Kazan robbery.

If one day "the Creditors of Soviet Russia" will meet to deliberate on the contributions they demand from the proletarian state as the price of leaving it in peace, it would really be quite opportune for the Russian working people to present their bill to these precious gentlemen.

We suppose that to cover the losses Russia has suffered thru the civil wars forced upon it by world imperialism the full coffers of the Anglo-American nabobs would hardly suffice, for in this bill will figure millions of innocent human beings starved to death, murdered by the international bourgeoisie.

Clarence Lily Pinkpunty

Philadelphia, Pa.—Clarence Lily Pinkpunty dilettante, perfume expert and social light; son of George Pinkpunty, the billionaire, writes a comprehensive and learned essay on "The Errors of Radical Thought" for this month's Vanity Bag Magazine.

He says, "It would be unspeakable cruelty to deprive the leisure people of the leisure to indulge their discriminating taste and subtle perceptibility that is the exclusive birthright of those who are born in the soul-zone of refinement." He defies the leading radical thinkers to answer his arguments, and asserts that "the only cure for unrest is to teach the common people to rear their children in a highly perfumed atmosphere of luxury and refinement."

Joint Action for May Day in New York

Local Greater New York, Workers Party, at its City Central Committee meeting decided upon raising the slogan of "A UNITED LABOR FRONT AGAINST THE CAPITALIST SLAVE-DRIVERS" and has called for a preliminary conference of all industrial and political labor organizations in the City of New York, in order to form a Joint May Day Committee.

The letter sent out invited representatives from the Socialist Party, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, the International Ladies Garment Workers, United Cloth Hat and Capmakers' Union, Furriers Union, Italian Chamber of Labor, the I. W. W., The Young Workers League, the Longshoremen's Union, the Bakery and Confectionery Union, the Metal Trades, Young People's Socialist League, the United Labor Council, Amalgamated Food Workers, Farmer-Labor Party, Automobile and Vehicle Workers' Union, United Aircraft, etc., to a conference to be held March 29th, Wednesday, at the Labor Temple, 243 East 84th Street, at 8 P. M.

The letter stated as follows:

"The offensive which the organized employers of America have waged against Labor since the close of the war is still working destruction in the ranks of the working class. With the aid of their political and judicial henchmen they are breaking down our organizations, establishing the hated open shop, reducing wages and taking away the few rights and liberties which we have obtained by many years of struggle and sacrifice.

"Only a UNITED WORKING CLASS can deal with this situation. Only a united working class can halt this smashing campaign of the profit-mad exploiters—only by uniting our forces can we raise the morale in our ranks; put the workers once more on the offensive; regain what has been lost and urge them on to new victories.

"The First of May is International Labor Day, observed by the workers all over the world. This First of May presents a great opportunity to warn the 'masters' by means of a huge demonstration thruout the country that the workers are uniting to fight back. Let us all, irrespective of political or factional differences, get together on this day and give notice to the exploiters that their enslaving campaign must come to an end.

"A United Labor Front Against the Capitalist Slave-Drivers.

"Let this be our slogan for the first of May. With this slogan the Workers Party proposes that all industrial and political labor organizations in the City of New York co-operate in the holding of a May Day demonstration under the auspices of a Joint May Day Committee consisting of representatives of all organizations which take part. You are requested to send delegates to the preliminary May Day Conference to be held on the 29th of March at the Labor Temple, 243 E. 84th St., at 8 P. M. The work of this conference shall be to constitute itself as a Joint May Day Committee—draw up a program for the day and make all practical arrangements for the demonstration.

"Brothers—there is every reason why we should demonstrate on this day. There is every reason to show a united front against the Capitalists—against their open shop and wage reduction drive. Against their attempts to introduce the industrial court laws and break up our unions thru injunctions, to demonstrate for work or compensation at union wages for the unemployed; to demand the release of class-war prisoners and call for the recognition of and trade with Soviet Russia.

"Brothers—the above issues make a common ground upon which all honest workers can unite. Let us all join forces for this May Day demonstration and serve warning upon the capitalist class that the forces of labor are uniting and that their slave-driving campaign must end.

DOWN WITH THE CAPITALIST REACTION!

LONG LIVE THE UNITED WORKING CLASS!

Get Together! Fight!

By ROSE WIENER

"You can't fight the rising tide"—what a confession to make as an excuse for the reduction of wages, the lengthening of hours, the generally bad conditions now existing in the labor market.

And this from an active member of a so-called radical organization; whose membership is composed of noted labor officials, members of the Socialist Party and some liberals.

Who raised the tide? I mean this particular one of unfairness to labor, unemployment which is rampant to the extent that starvation is the watchword of many who have never known starvation in the former years of panics.

Who created this tide that is rising, ever rising, to the point where even many trade union leaders are advising the workers to bow to reduced wages and longer hours, unfair conditions—even beyond the meeting of the "so-called lowering of living costs"?

Who raised this tide which means the lowering of the standard of living to many—for (and no doubt, that is not a new thought) during the war, with its highly inflated (?) wages, the standard of living for many workers was raised, and not always to the extent of silk shirts, cheap jewelry and new, ugly furniture.

The standard was raised to the extent of a better education for their children, more cultural advantages for themselves, better looking homes (and more comfortable) to live in, and perhaps, a bit of a rest for the family away from the city and noise and heat of the hot summer months, for the family?

Who has raised the tide of reaction among the workers themselves? The black reaction which forces one body of workers to fight against another body of workers? In short, the "Cain and Abel" affair all over again.

To whose interest would this be to do this, and the many other items above enumerated and some not enumerated?

As early as the beginning of the war—when the imperialist, or capitalist, or both classes of the various countries got together for the "Grand Jamboree," they had the present situation in mind. Brother arrayed against brother, standards of living lowered to the point where they were reduced once more to their former abject condition, unemployment, starvation, homelessness, utter discouragement to the point where many have committed suicide, the "crime" wave is rising (another phase of the tide!), prostitution is becoming more a form of earning a livelihood among women grown desperate thru constant search for employment and the great desire to still hang on, by this most awful means, to life!

Constant battle to keep up with the rising tide of "misery," constant dragging of the undercurrent of black reaction among the workers themselves, constant weakening of the forces of labor, by the alignment of one group against the other.

You have a greatly weakened working class, and thus can easily be overcome—thus effecting the establishment of the open shop, the lowering more and more of the workers' standard of living, and perhaps the final defeat of trade union activity and its effectiveness. This was the dream of the imperialist-capitalist class even as early as 1914.

It is thru organization, thru absolute solidarity among the working class.—Stick together, men and women of the working class, even tho you may differ a bit on such a slight matter as tactics.

The tide is rising—and we must all work together, hand in hand, shoulder to shoulder, to keep it from overflowing and drowning us all!

It is up to you to smash the air-castles built for the future by the capitalist-imperialist class. Get together, grit your teeth, and fight.

There Is Surplus of 11,800,000 Metric Tons of Wheat in the World; Yet Workers of Soviet Russia Are Allowed to Starve

If ever there was an indictment of our much vaunted civilization, it came in the report of the International Institute of Agriculture, at Rome. The Bureau has announced that, after deducting the quantities of wheat required for home consumption until the next harvest, the wheat exporting countries would have an exportable surplus of 11,800,000 metric tons.

All this could have been averted if the capitalist governments which are so intent on strangling Soviet Russia had listened to the pleas of men who returned from Russia and knew conditions there, if they had listened to the appeals of Dr. Frietjof Nansen who, time and time again, pointed out the inhumanity, the savagery of letting a people starve to death, of letting children ask in vain for food and perish on the sun-baked steppes. But no! The capitalist governments had plans of their own—PLANS THAT SEEM TO BE MATURING AT THE PRESENT MOMENT.

The Government of the Workers and Peasants of Soviet Russia has weathered many a storm. IT WILL WEATHER THIS ONE, TOO!

But the people must be fed. The children's cry for food must be stilled. WORKERS OF THE WORLD! THE CRISIS IS COMING! SHOW YOUR COLORS!

FEED THE CHILDREN, WOMEN AND MEN OF SOVIET RUSSIA—HELP THEM THRU THIS CRISIS, THAT THEY MAY SUCCESSFULLY DEFEAT THE TRICKERY OF THE CAPITALIST GOVERNMENTS WHO STILL PLOT THEIR DESTRUCTION! GIVE OF YOUR MONEY, THAT THE STARVING WORKERS AND PEASANTS OF SOVIET RUSSIA MAY EAT OF THE TONS OF WHEAT THAT LIE IN THE GRANARIES OF AMERICA, ARGENTINE, INDIA.

Typhus Raging in Soviet Russia

Late reports from Soviet Russia indicate that typhus is ravaging the country. It is spreading westward with fearful speed and has already crossed the German border. Lack of medicines is obstructing the work of combatting the epidemic. James O'Grady, M.P., reported that thru the lack of one drug, atropine, "people, while dying of starvation, were going blind thru tracoma."

If the people of the western world would save THEMSELVES, and not Soviet Russia, they must aid Soviet Russia to the limit. Otherwise the misery of Soviet Russia will move to the west and engulf them.

WORKERS, GIVE!

How It Looks on the Volga

The Volga was the granary of Soviet Russia. When Soviet Russia was fighting against the counter-revolutionary hordes, the Volga was the salvation of the country. Whenever any crisis fell upon the country, the Volga was the refuge.

But to-day, the Volga is the home of misery. Where formerly 5,750,000 to 8,500,000 tons of wheat used to grow—the country is now bare. Bleak and burnt, the Volga valley cannot help, but must be succored.

The Soviet Government has sent there 330,000 tons of winter seed and will supply summer seed as well. It is taking care of 1,500,000 children and 1,750,000 adults, and will need 330,000 tons of corn and 300,000 tons of potatoes to execute this task.

A great part of the cattle died or was slaughtered by August of last year; 56 per cent of the horses, 59 per cent of the cattle, 70 per cent of the sheep perished.

The migration of the people began early in spring of last year. Wandering hither and thither, families drifted apart; the children were deserted and died on the steppes or wandered to the cities, where they were sheltered in children's homes. SOVIET RUSSIA, THAT AS NO OTHER COUNTRY HAS LEARNED TO CARE FOR CHILDREN, SEES HER CHILDREN DIE BEFORE HER EYES AND HARDLY CAN HELP!

Children's Homes in Russia

The German boys and girls have made it their aim to erect and maintain a home in Tcheljiabinsk. In order that there may be no question as to the proper maintenance of the home, groups are formed, each pledging itself to the payment of a certain sum to keep one or more children. Cards are issued, the sum indicated being apportioned according to the number in the group. If, for instance, 300 marks in German money is needed to keep one child, if the group consists of 30 members, each one may pledge 10 or 20 marks, such payment being accounted for by stamps. The idea has spread among the German workers and groups in factories, trade unions, etc., are adopting it.

No Flour or Seed

Party Members Support Literature Loan Campaign

By ELMER T. ALLISON

The Literature Loan Campaign for $5,000 instituted by the Workers Party to establish a great sales and publishing department in the National Office is receiving splendid support from the membership.

Locals, Branches and individual members are making remittances of 30 day loans in amounts of three to twenty-five dollars. These loans are to be repaid after 30 days in literature.

The novelty of the plan appears to appeal to the membership and as every member is a book reader, the practical side of the plan bears also a strong appeal.

The support which the party membership is giving is indicated by the list of loans received, recorded below.

These constitute the first three weeks' receipts, necessarily small in the beginning of the campaign. Up to March 10 the following locals and comrades made remittances and were placed upon the

SUCCESSFUL TOUR IN OHIO.

Chas. Baker, District Organizer, breaks ground and gets results.

From District No. 6 comes the report of the conclusion of the first extensive organization meeting tour of a District Organizer. Charles Baker, District Organizer, who made the tour, is a veteran well known to the district. Sixteen meetings held showed net collections, after local expenses had been paid, of $186.21 and literature sales of $73.50. Expenses for these meetings, excluding wages but including expenses at four towns where no public meetings could be arranged on short notice, were $108.44, showing a clear surplus. New locals were organized at practically all towns visited and the literature and "WORKER" subscriptions put in circulation represent a very real result of the tour. The Ohio towns covered were Tiffin, Toledo, Lorain, Akron, Canton, Warren, Youngstown, Niles, E. Liverpool, Barton, Neffs, Bellaire, Newark, Cincinnati, Conneaut, Dillonville, Hamilton and Dayton. In West Virginia, Huntington, Sisterville, Parkersburg.

The District Convention will be held at Akron, Saturday, April 1st, 10 a. m., at 30 South Howard Street, 3rd floor. The district office is located at the Brownella Bookshop, 27 S. Broadway, Akron; the post office address is Box 333, Akron, O. All locals are expected to send in their credentials not later than March 30.

PARTY NEWS NOTES.

JOLIET, ILL. A new English branch with 13 charter members is reported organized by District Organizer Charles Krumbein.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., two Commune celebrations were held with fair success. That arranged by the South Slavic comrades reported an attendance of 700.

CHICAGO, ILL., despite the handicap of inclement weather the Commune celebrations arranged by the German Branches of the Workers Party proved very successful.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., held a very interesting City Central Committee meeting on March 14th, with six branches represented and two reported absent. Plans for a united May Day celebration were put under way, and an extensive distribution of the Unemployment leaflet mapped out.

CHICAGO, ILL. A City Central Committee meeting held March 14, showed 26 delegates present and 13 absent. Plans for a joint May Day demonstration at Ashland Auditorium together with the District Organization and the Jewish Federation were pushed forward.

Party organizers were instructed to attend meetings of foreign branches and central bodies for purposes of closer co-operation, the use of the English language and support of the English press is to be urged upon them, and the attendance of all who have sufficient mastery of English at the regular party classes is to be particularly encouraged. This applies particularly to the younger workers and the Y. W. L. organizer is charged with responsibility to push this work in his own ranks. At these classes the application of theory to practical problems and tactics, methods of organization, etc. is to be particularly stressed.

The open letter addressed by the Workers Party to the Labor Political Conference [illegible]

[illegible] with the purpose of organizing the women. I immediately requested my branch to help organize the women. It was not an easy task, for not only were the men comrades hostile to the idea but also the bulk of the women comrades.

Work Considered "Sideline".

After many hot discussions I was granted permission to organize the women. Some of the women comrades helped in this work but they were few. The party looked at it as a sideline not of great importance.

We called a mass meeting for organization purposes. A good many of the strikers themselves went into this proposition heartily and they helped a great deal. We charged five cents to become a member. Eight hundred became members. We organized the Consumers' League with no long constitution or program but just a few words printed on their cards, "that we, the women of the Consumers' League, while we fight for cheaper foodstuffs and more sanitary conditions, recognize that we are a part of the working class and, therefore we pledge ourselves to help the workers in their every-day struggles morally and financially."

The Bronx and Brownsville followed suit and so several branches were organized.

After they were organized the Socialist Party women dropped out. The women were left to drift for themselves but they had already learned a lesson. Many leaders appeared from their own midst, and they were determined to keep up this organization.

Women Help During Strike.

In 1912 an opportunity arose for the women to prove that the workers' wives can be a great help in the class struggle and that they will play a great part in the revolutionary struggles of the working class. When the great garment-strike broke out, which lasted four months, the women of the Consumers' League did their bit and did it well. They worked like beavers. They collected money and food, established stores and kitchens to feed the strikers and their families, visited the strikers' homes, took care of their sick, saw to it that medicine and doctors be provided. They worked from twelve to eighteen hours a day. There is no question that they helped to win this strike. They did not help from the charity point of view but from the class solidarity point of view. They had already learned to despise charity. They continually helped in the workers' struggles. They swelled the May Day demonstrations. They collected funds for the Socialist Party, helped in campaigns. They filled the Socialist Sunday schools with their children. They helped to fold and distribute literature.

Later on they had some sort of split. I do not exactly know the nature of this split for I happened not to be with them at that time. The bulk of the women are with the Socialist Consumers' League which has several branches in Harlem, lower Manhattan, Bronx, Brownsville, Borough Park and East New York. The women of the Socialist Consumers' League were and are the most militant women. Up to this time they are active, helping in the workers' struggle. Their organization is a loose one but it carries a class-conscious spirit.

Urges Housewives' Union.

I believe that if there would have been from the start a good women's committee with experienced organizers who would take care of them all the time and help them we would have one of the finest revolutionary women's organizations. As it is now the membership has dwindled to much less than it formerly was. A good many joined the Socialist Party, not only the women but also their husbands. I have met them in other workers' organizations, more revolutionary than the Socialist Party.

I believe that thru well-organized women's committees, with the co-operation of [illegible]

The Convention of the Young Workers League has been postponed [illegible] will begin May 15 instead of April 15. The N. O. C. decided upon this at its meeting of March 15 and for the following reasons: Finances have been coming in very slowly. The convention assessment stamps were sent out only a few days ago, and returns will not begin coming in immediately. Conventions cost money and we do not want to put the organization so far into debt that it cannot function after the convention takes place.

Many to Send Delegates

The new Y. W. L. S. that are being organized every day want to send delegates, and many of them will be able to, if given a little more time to strengthen their organization and raise funds.

We want to have a real, a representative, convention, with as many delegates as possible. A number of the Leagues would not be able to send a representative by April 15, but can do so a month later.

Thus, while the N. O. C. is as desirous as anyone to hold the convention at the earliest possible moment, yet it feels that a postponement at this time is not only advisable but necessary for the best interest of the entire organization.

Outlook for Powerful Organization.

The Young Workers League is now a fact nationally. It is established thruout the country, and tho small as yet shows every prospect of becoming a powerful organization.

There are now over 1500 members in the Young Workers League of America with new branches being formed daily. Various organizations are affiliating with the Young Workers League and answering the convention call.

There is either a city organization or a branch of the Young Workers League in over 30 cities in this country.

Branches of the Y. W. L. have been organized in Connecticut, Ohio; the I. Y. P. S. L. of Providence, R. I., has changed its name to the Y. W. L. of that city and is affiliated with the National Office. Monessen, Pa., has organized; Rochester I. Y. P. S. L. has sent in a communication informing that they are considering affiliation. Camden and Baltimore are now organizing.

The Jugend Verein, a German speaking organization of young people which has entered the Y. W. L. with an active membership of 79 and a supporting passive membership of several hundred, is one of the newly affiliated organizations which is solidly behind the Young Workers League of Philadelphia. Bernard Glasner, the secretary of this branch of the Young Workers League sets an example to secretaries for promptness in replying to communications of the national office and in taking up matters of business.

Carlson Open for Dates.

Recently Comrade Carlson visited the Young Workers League of Philadelphia and found them alive with activity. It is hoped that we may be able to route Comrade Carlson to other cities soon; and if the branches could arrange affairs to pay for the expense, he is at their service.

We expect the Young Worker off the press now any day. Subscriptions are solicited as well as bundle orders. Recently the National Organization Committee issued a call for funds for the Young Worker, and a pledge blank was sent out. Rush them in with your signature.

Youth under Americanism, the pamphlet being gotten out, is delayed for lack of funds. Most of the funds are being used for convention purposes and other work must suffer. Advance orders should be taken for this booklet at the rate of 15 cents a copy, and the money sent in so that its quick appearance may be assured.

Chicago is doing active propaganda work in the way of issuing bulletins to its membership and young workers generally on various topics. A recent bulletin issued by the City Central Committee of that city dealt with the "Young Press." Those desiring copies of the paper and bulletin issued by the Young Workers League of Chicago should write to George Oswald, Secretary, 3303 S. Oakley Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The Genoa Propaganda Wave

Capitalism usually sends out its propaganda in waves. One wave after another has been sent against the Russian Workers' Republic during the past five years. But without avail.

Altho the Soviet officials have been asked to come to Genoa, nevertheless, we find that this conference has been made the occasion for a new propaganda attack by the publicity forces of the big bankers and industrial overloads of international imperialism.

George Tchitcherin, the Soviet Minister of Foreign Affairs, is doing his best to conduct a counter-attack against this tidal wave of misrepresentation that seeks to create the impression that insurrections are again breaking out in Russia, that the downfall of the Soviets is again imminent, as well as imputations of corruption by the Soviet Government in order to bring about the disorganization of the allied armies.

All these "stories" are declared by Tchitcherin to be false. He charges that they are directly inspired by the different "bourgeois" governments.

Tchitcherin claims to have irrefutable proof of the organization of bands hostile to Russia in the territory of neighboring states and the formation of new military alliances against the Soviet Republic. Such for instance was the secret treaty reached between Poland and Hungary, two of the most infamous of the existing "white governments" of Europe.

Under such conditions the Russians point out that they fear an attempt will be made to stack the cards against them at Genoa. It is even feared that the Genoa Conference will be the starting point for new efforts at military intervention.

The workers of the world, with the emancipated workers, soldiers and peasants of the Russian Workers' Republic, demand that a sincere effort be made at Genoa for the solution of at least some of the giant problems confronting suffering humanity today. Let the workers watch the spokesmen of capitalism at Genoa. Get the truth from the working class press. Do not be submerged by the Genoa propaganda wave.

It is not hard to ascertain who has been doing the producing when the workers go on strike.

She Finds Her Place

Emma Goldman has found her place at last.

She takes her position in the ranks of those who cannot subscribe to any dictatorship except that of the capitalist class.

She joins hands with every bloody, mercenary invader of Russia from whose lips has come the phrases of capitalist democracy.

She is for freedom just as the capitalist class and its hangers-on are for freedom—freedom in the abstract.

She is not willing to do the things that must be done to bring freedom.

She must be allowed to work and talk for freedom as she pleases, or she will do as she is doing now—betray the very people who made it possible for her to live in luxury in America—betray the workers to whom she was a kind of god.

After all, this is the fashion of gods.

At the same moment in which the hordes of imperialism are being mustered for another attack on the Russian people, at the moment when millions of them are dying because capitalism is revenging itself on those who dealt it the most severe blow it ever received, Emma Goldman, egotist, a pseudo-revolutionist all her life, a revolutionist for profit, does what all of her type may be expected to do when revolution passes from the period of propaganda to that of action.

She quits cold and sells herself like any other prostitute to the system she made a good living by denouncing.

She has found her level. It is the lowest in the scale.

She is now sister to the Koltchaks and Denikins, to the stool-pigeon and the fink, to the gunman and the spy.

She has scabbed on the workers of the world in the greatest strike in history.

We object to the phrase "coal operators." These fat gentlemen operate nothing but the political machinery that protects the property they and their ancestors have stolen.

Internationalism of Science

The international character of science is in refreshing contrast to the suicidal economic rivalries to which the present economic system gives birth.

The report recently made by the Health Committee of the League of Nations on conditions in Russia is ample evidence that to the impartial eye of a medical investigator the work of the Soviet authorities, in spite of the obstacles placed in their way by the imperialists and counter-revolutionaries, is beyond praise.

Following a visit to Russia made by the League of Nations Health Committee, an agreement has been entered into with the Soviet government and the committee in return for furnishing the Russian government with the latest information on subjects such as health and sanitation is to receive daily bulletins by the Moscow wireless on similar matters in Russia.

A portion of the report—its most important section—deals with the repatriation of "refugees" and with conditions in the famine areas. In this connection, speaking of the work of repatriation, it says:

> "The civilians consist of two groups, those who were evacuated by the imperial armies during the Russian retreat of 1915 and are only now, after six years, regaining their homes in Poland, White Russia, Latvia, Lithuania and Esthonia, and those Russians who in July and August of this year began to stampede from the famine districts. The Russian peasantry has now decided to stay and await next year's harvest. It is indeed remarkable and truly heroic, and it appears to be corroborated by all neutral observers that the peasants have used all the remainder of their corn for sowing purposes, and prefer to live thru the pending dreadful winter in the hope of seeing meagre crops next year than to abandon live seeds in the soil tilled by their own hands. The stopping of this stampede was no doubt due to very great organizing efforts of the Russian administration, which has succeeded in mobilising transport, machinery, etc., in order to throw it all into the affected districts."

The committee report states that the quarantine stations in Russia are equal to the best in Western Europe but that they are handicapped by lack of medicines and antiseptics due to the shutting off of these imports by the blockade. The blockade also prevented the importation of English and French scientific works, but scientific activity is being carried on with greater energy than ever before. The report of the League Health Committee states:

> "In fact, one may say that the Russians are perhaps overdoing themselves [illegible] zeal for establishing laboratories everywhere. The scientific researches carried out in Russia would do justice to any country."

The Profiteer: "I'm as good a friend of labor as the next man— [illegible] there is no denying the fact that workingmen do spend their money foolishly."

One can visualize the tremendous handicaps under which scientific research work labors when, as the committee emphasizes, there is a great scarcity of drugs of every description as well as a lack of laboratory, medical and surgical instruments. Even soap is almost unobtainable in the quantities needed.

The Russian Soviet government, thru its health bureau, has also agreed to assist in the internationalization of standards for antitoxins set at a recent conference held at London in which delegates from the United States and Germany participated.

Russia is admitted on an equal footing to the world of science. It is only in the political arena, where decisions are made for the benefit of a few and not for the many, that the Soviet government is unwelcome.

Reports like that of the Health Committee of the League of Nations, the members of which are scientists and not politicians, are making more and more untenable the position of the overlords of finance and industry.

In this instance the lie direct is given the organs of imperialism which since the Russian revolution, have pictured Russia as a land where science, art and literature have vanished and where scientists are butchered like wild animals.

Men of learning have been killed in Russia, but they have been killed by the invasions and by the blockade of the forces of imperialism, ready and willing to wipe out every advance made in the arts and sciences provided the control of the wealth-producing machinery of the world remains in the hands of the few.

When the coal miners wanted a raise in 1919 the government stepped in with an injunction. To-day, when the coal barons want to cut wages and break up unions the government steps out of the way so they can do as they please. Who said that government was an impartial agency favoring neither capital or labor?

The Arrest of Gandhi

The arrest of Mahatma Gandhi is the culmination of more than two years of non-cooperation and passive resistance to the British government on the part of his followers.

There is much confusion of thought concerning the doctrine preached by Gandhi, and many people think that it means merely the withdrawal of all support from British administration—a sort of strike, as it were. This is only part of the Gandhi program and, actually, a rather minor part.

Gandhi and his disciples reason somewhat as follows: Western civilization—machine industry—has been the cause of many evils, including the British occupation of India. Therefore the fight for liberty must be directed at the system of production with its railways, telephones, mills and factories; away with all modern contrivances, back to the soil and the hand-loom. Apparently the followers of Gandhi fail to see that not in the machine itself but in its ownership by a minority of overlords lie the evils of which they complain and which they hope to abolish by ignoring.

For the purpose of arousing a primitive people and embarrassing the invader Gandhi's doctrines have been of much value to the nationalist movement; to the working-class movement of India—and there is a labor movement there, altho the liberal and nationalists rarely mention it—they are now a handicap. Machine guns are impervious to the propaganda of non-resistance as the British forces have successfully demonstrated on more than one occasion. There have been rumors to the effect that many of the former followers of Gandhi have wearied of the mixture of religion and pacifism which is the basis of the Gandhi philosophy, and that a more militant program is demanded since the failure of two years of martyrdom to soften the hard heart of British imperialism.

It is entirely probable that the arrest of Gandhi will be followed by the rise of the old revolutionary party which has been waiting more or less patiently for the authorities to show that their conversion to the doctrine of universal brotherhood is but a dream of those who choose to disregard the hard facts of life.

Secret Diplomacy

Senator Borah, in his attacks on the four-power treaty, is getting very indignant in the senate over the duplicity of secret international diplomacy.

He declares that the United States has entered into a treaty with Great Britain against Japan. He claims that Paul D. Cravath, personal attorney for the financier, J. Pierpont Morgan, admitted it at a banquet in New York City.

There has always been a strong alliance between Great Britain and Japan. The four-power treaty between the United States, Japan, France and Great Britain, to maintain peace in the Pacific, was heralded as one of the achievements of Harding's disarmament conference, a herald of the end of all war.

So it is very natural that the excitable Borah, who is horrified at the consistencies of capitalism, should be moved to protest against such underhand, dagger-in-the-back policies as an American-British secret pact against the Japs.

Borah's disclosures reveal that the secret diplomacy that aided international imperialism precipitate the world blood-bath of 1914-18 is still a living reality, that it is preparing for the next, and a greater slaughter.

Of course, Senator Lodge, and Root, of the U. S. disarmament delegation, and Cravath himself, "indignantly denied" the Borah charges. Secret diplomats never admit their secrets.

That is one of the reasons world capitalist diplomacy is bitterly hostile to the Workers' Republic of Russia. When the Russian workers came into power they immediately published all the secret treaties of the deposed czar. At that time their advice to the workers of other countries was: "Get control of power in your own countries and reveal the secret pacts of your own diplomats."

Not until the workers and farmers of America finally sit in power in Washington will they [illegible] rule of duplicity and deceit [illegible]

The Labor Unions

By EMIL LYON

The labor unions of the United States have proven to be ineffective workingmen's fighting organizations because in place of waging a class struggle for the overthrow of capitalism, they have pursued a policy of attempting to come to an agreement with the capitalists upon the basis of "a fair day's pay for a fair day's work." There can be no such compromise with capitalism.

The hunger of the capitalists for greater profits drives them to seek to lower the standard of living of the workers when the capitalist position in the class struggle is strong and the workers' desire for more of the good things they produce forces them into greater demands when they are in a position of advantage.

Leadership Betrays Masses.

The gains of the workers during the war-time prosperity and their present losses indicate the futility of the hope that the class struggle can be settled thru a compromise.

In addition to this fundamental error of policy, the labor unions suffer from a leadership which continually betrays the masses of the workers who make up the union.

The record of the leadership of the American Federation of Labor is one of trickery, evasion and compromise.

The railroad brotherhoods have just passed thru an experience showing the traitorous character of the officials entrusted with leading their struggles.

The United Mine Workers is dominated by a clique of officials which sacrifices the interests of the workers at the first sign of attack from the capitalists and their government.

With only a few exceptions, the whole labor union movement of the United States is still in the grip of policies and leaders which make their struggles ineffective.

Must Revolutionize Labor.

In place of the uncompromising class struggle there is compromising and begging, which have brought upon the workers the great losses of the last year.

The labor unions must be revolutionized; they must be won for the class struggle against capitalism.

They must be inspired by a new solidarity and united to fight a common battle in place of permitting the capitalist to destroy them piecemeal.

The Workers Party declares one of its chief immediate tasks to inspire in the labor union a revolutionary purpose and to unite them in a mass movement of uncompromising struggle against capitalism.

This end cannot be achieved if the revolutionary workers leave the existing unions to form feeble dual organizations.

The work of transforming the labor unions must be carried on inside of these unions. To achieve this end the Workers Party will organize its members in revolutionary groups in every union in which it gains a foothold.

Develop Programs of Action.

It will unite these groups locally and on a national scale. It will develop programs of action within the various unions which will awaken the spirit of the class struggles among the members and bring about a reconstruction of the organization forms so as to make of the unions the powerful, organized centres of the workers' struggle for the overthrow of capitalism, which they should be.

The Workers Party declares its support of the International Trade and Labor Alliance (The Red Labor International) and adopts as its detailed program for the struggle within the unions the Theses of the Red Labor International on the American Labor Unions.

GREEKS HELP PAPER.

Monday, April 3, at 8.30 p. m., the Greek local of the Workers Party will give its annual entertainment and ball at the Palm Garden, 58th St. between Lexington and Third Aves., for the benefit of the Greek paper, The Voice of Labor.

Help Your City Raise Its Quota in the Roll Call Campaign!

Every Local Conference, every Language section of the Friends of Soviet Russia must do its utmost to make the total relief contribution to the famine stricken in Russia one million dollars by May 1st.

Towards this end we have designated a minimum quota for every city and language federation having an FSR affiliation. This quota is based upon the contributions your branch or section has made to date.

So that you may make sure of helping collect your quota, we advise that you and your branch make plans at once for your next two months activities. Your first source of income would be the contributions made by those who are in the Roll Call. Secondly, plan bazaars and entertainments for your organization, your circle of sympathisers. Make a concerted effort to reach those workers and friends who have not yet given. Tag Days and well organized house to house collections are the very best methods to use.

In this connection we desire to communicate to you the success of the New York City Conference in its recent Tag Day and house to house collection.

Saturday, March 4th, was known all over New York City as Hunger Saturday. The advertisements called upon no one to eat and everyone to give their meals this day to the famine stricken. The city was divided into sections, a section captain for each section. The section captain divided the section into blocks, a block captain for each block. For several weeks before Hunger Saturday, block and section meetings were held of all sympathizers. Speakers addressed these meetings and called for volunteers. These volunteers then went forth on Hunger Saturday and scoured the city for money contributions.

The result was a total collection of more than $12,000. This means that the city of New York has already reduced its total quota of $40,000 before May 1st to $28,000. Your branch can do equally well, in proportion, if you will organize your collection campaign properly.

COAL BARONS WILL LOSE

Capitalist Class Shows the Workers Way to Effective Organization

Coal Barons Are Stocking Ohio Arsenals

(SPECIAL TO THE WORKER)

BELLAIRE, OHIO.—On April 1st, 1922, the miners of America will enter upon the most momentous struggle in the history of the United Mine Workers of America.

For months the operators have been manoeuvering to force a strike. Thousands of miners have been jobless. During 1921 the average employment was 125 days. Their wages averaged $13.50 a week. Here is a [illegible] opportunity to smash the miners' organization for all time. The American Plan—the OPEN SHOP in the mining industry is the goal the operators hope to achieve.

Existence at Stake

The miners realize all this. They know their organized existence is at stake. Their tactic is, therefore, to stop production of coal as thoroly as possible. To that end a supreme effort is being made to call out every miner in the industry, in unorganized as well as organized, territory.

In southern Ohio and West Virginia the operators are preparing for war. In Jacksonville the operators posted a notice that on and after April 1st, that grade of work paying 90c, a ton would be cut to 47c., and that which paid 80c. would be reduced to 43c. Even at present prices a soul-destroying poverty prevails.

The miners state that the operators are laying in machine guns and high power rifles and that for a considerable period a recruiting campaign for gunmen has been in full sway. They say the militia is held in readiness at Athens to "preserve order" and to "protect the interests of the public."

Ridicule Separate Agreements

Of course it is to the public's interest that the miners' wages be cut in half. A weekly wage of $13.50 is too much for such as these; $2.75 is a more just reward for furnishing the nation with heat, light and power.

At Bellaire, Ohio, all is in readiness for the walkout. There will be no separate agreement here. Farrington's proposal of district and sub-district agreements with the operators is met with derisive ridicule. Sentiment here is to the effect that even tho they suffer defeat, they will go down fighting.

At Bellaire, Neffs, Dillonvale, at all the mines on the Ohio side of the river; and at Wheeling and the mines on the West Virginia Side, the miners are ready for any thing that comes up. There is a significant absence of violent language. But

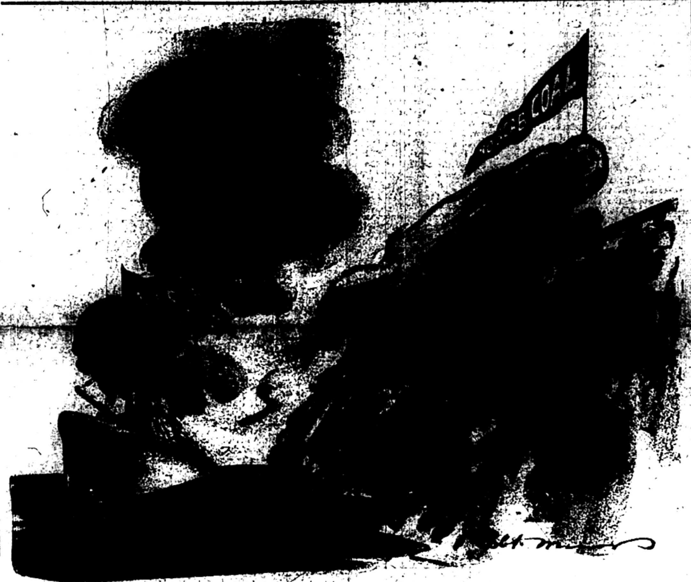
At Press Time!

This issue of THE WORKER went to the press on Thursday night, March 30, on the eve of the threatened coal-strike. Just what action the policy committee of the coal miners will take on April first, we do not know. Complete details will appear in next week's issue.



HOIST THE FLAG!

Support for Sacco, Vanzetti Urged by Garment Workers

By EUGENE LYONS

NEW YORK.—Benjamin Schlesinger, President of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union, in a letter addressed to the locals of the organization, urges generous support of the defense of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, the Italian labor men awaiting electrocution in Massachusetts.

"President Schlesinger's appeal," a member of the Workers Defense Union stated, "is very timely. The fight for the lives of Sacco and Vanzetti is at a crucial point. Under the rather oppressive lull on the surface, there is great activity. New facts, some of them astounding, have been found. Before long all newly discovered evidence will be made public and a new trial will be asked for. The investigations are costly, and the new trial, which we have strong hopes of obtaining, will be costly. We hope that the noble appeal of the Garment Workers' president will meet with the response it merits."

Schlesinger's letter in full reads:

"Greetings:

"A bigoted and prejudiced jury has returned a death verdict, last summer, against Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, two Italian labor organizers, in Dedham, Mass., on a charge of highway robbery and homicide.

"These men, whose sole crime seems to consist of the fact that they have been, from their early youth, devoted to the labor movement, both in Italy and the United States, were condemned on shaky and unsupportable evidence. The prejudice that had been created against them by sinister influences has made a fair verdict impossible.

"These two men stand today within the shadow of death, unless the inhuman verdict against them is reversed. An appeal has been taken from the death-sentence, and the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee is now making a country-wide effort to prove to the whole world that their conviction rests upon flimsy and unscrupulously obtained evidence.

"The Defense Committee will shortly appeal to you, either in writing or thru personal appearance, for funds to help defend Sacco and Vanzetti. We cordially request you, in the name of our International, to contribute liberally to this Defense Fund, as only the organized forces of this country can break down this ugly conspiracy against the lives of these young men.

"With fraternal greetings,

"Benjamin Schlesinger, President."

Amnesty Alliance Asks United Front for All War Hysteria Victims

All working-class organizations will co-operate in a monster May Day demonstration for general amnesty for class-war and political prisoners if plans now under consideration by the Amnesty Alliance mature.

From now until the first of May the Amnesty Alliance, composed of delegates from various unions, the Workers' Defense Committee, the Workers Party and the United Labor Council, will conduct a vigorous campaign for the release of New York state prisoners, among whom are Ben Gitlow, Harry Winitsky, C. E. Ruthenberg, I. E. Ferguson and Jim Larkin, in which all labor bodies are asked to join.

At the May Day meetings one demand will be made—the unconditional release of all prisoners convicted under the criminal anarchy and other statutes enacted and used to satisfy the war hysteria.

The office of the Amnesty Alliance is at 81 East 10th Street, and all organizations interested are asked to get in touch with the secretary, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn.

The coming of Communism means the going of poverty.

Foster to Speak

Wm. Z. Foster is to speak under the auspices of the Trade Union Educational League at Beethoven Hall, Friday evening, April 7th.

Forward looking labor men will have an opportunity hearing that evening the man who thru sheer fighting force and ability has come to represent the militant element in the labor movement of America on one of the burning questions of the hour—what to do with a labor movement that is all but helpless in this period of crisis.

As head of the Trade Union Educational League "Bill" Foster occupies as unique position in the Trade union movement; without official backing of any kind and in spite of the active opposition of Trade union officialdom he has rallied the radicals in the labor movement into a compact fighting machine around a program for industrial unionism which the "standpat" officialdom is forced to recognize.

As editor of the Labor Herald and a writer on labor subjects Foster is known thruout the wide world of labor. He writes simply and clearly and talks as he writes. His popularity is due to the fact that he practices what he preaches.

Everyone interested in the attempt to make the Trade union movement of America function for the workers should be at the Foster meeting.

The only indication the government has given that it knows a nation-wide coal strike is pending is the announcement by Attorney-General Daugherty that strikebreakers will be protected.

There is a great calmness at Washington. Between five and six million men are out of work, and undoubtedly the government feels that enough can be recruited, with the promise of federal protection, to break the strike.

There cannot be the slightest doubt that the role of the government has long been settled for it by the industrial and financial lords whose property it is.

Never in the history of the United States has there been an administration whose members were so unanimously the haters of labor organization and labor aims.

In the official family are such men as Mellon, said to be the second richest man in the United States, and Daugherty, a cheap politician whose life has been spent doing the dirty work with which the real rulers do not like to soil their hands.

These two individuals are representative of the types composing the Harding administration—capitalists and capitalist flunkeys.

They were placed in office by the most powerful combination of capitalists in the world led by the Standard Oil Company. None but a fool doubts that government in the United States is government by and for capitalists and that its sole interest in the masses is to squeeze from them as much surplus value as possible by any means at hand.

[illegible] slavery were as efficient as wage-slavery we would have [illegible] slavery instead of the industrial serfdom for which every agency of capitalism in the United States, including the government, is working.

More and more is capitalism here taking on the form of a military dictatorship. In every industrial dispute the armed forces of the state, if not actually used, are held in readiness for immediate action.

The capitalists as a class and as individuals are allowed full liberty for the preachment and practice of violent suppression, while any whisper of like defensive action or threat of retaliation on the part of the workers is treated as high treason to the capitalist state; and of course it is.

There is no single case on record of punishment in the courts for the innumerable violent acts, including murder, perpetrated by the thugs of capitalism upon workers and their sympathizers, but the jails hold dozens of men who were convicted because prostitute prosecutors, judges and hand-picked juries interpreted their words as "inciting to violence."

A Howat is sent to jail and a Burns is made head of the most dangerous department of government. This is what capitalism is in America to-day.

Under these conditions the miners are forced to strike to preserve their most elementary privileges of collective contract and of organization.

A basic industry must be paralyzed and 600,000 men demonstrate their unconquerable desire for some voice in fixing the conditions under which they labor because a handful of soft-handed and fat-paunched parasites, backed by a larger handful of overlords, wish to make greater profits from the toil and hardships of the men who dig the coal.

The coal barons want to increase their power over the lives of the men who make their fortunes for them from the mines most of the coal barons have never even seen. To do this they have mobilized every arm of the government; to accomplish this successfully they will not hesitate to jail and beat and kill just as they did in West Virginia. They hope to break the miners and thereby break the back of organized labor in America.

In this they may be successful—temporarily; but if the murmur of discontent, growing louder each day, and the very distinct tendency towards a closer unity of the forces of labor mean anything, the victory of the coal barons will be a costly one.

In an attempt to gain a temporary advantage they are forcing labor to close its ranks. With the gaps stopped labor in the United States will be, with the irresistible advantage of economic pressure on its side, like labor all over the world, well started on the road to victory.

Capitalism is dying. Labor is young and strong and full of vitality that comes from struggle. It can be grateful to a stupid capitalist class for showing it the way to effective organization, for compelling it to do things necessary but long neglected.

The continued offensive of the employing class in the United States has at last convinced labor that this is no passing phase of the struggle, merely the product of a sporadic [illegible], but a well-planned attack intended to destroy all labor organizations that will not bow to the will of the ruling class in all matters.

Some stimulus of this sort was needed, and the attack on the coal miners following a long period of wage reductions has furnished it.

LABOR WILL RALLY TO THE SUPPORT OF THE COAL MINERS AS LABOR HAS NEVER RALLIED BEFORE IN AMERICA. WIN OR LOSE, IT IS THE BEGINNING OF A NEW AND BETTER DAY FOR THE WORKING-CLASS MOVEMENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

THE COAL BARONS AND THEIR FELLOW CAPITALISTS ARE RISKING MUCH TO WIN LITTLE.

[illegible] to Aid Party Organ

Recognizing that the circulation of the party organ and the securing of permanent headquarters are of prime importance to the strengthening of the organization, the English Branch of the Yorkville Section has decided to concentrate its efforts upon these two points and to seek the co-operation of all the branches in the section in executing these plans.

In order to increase the circulation of THE WORKER, it has decided on a WORKER WEEK during which all members must apply at certain designated newsstands for THE WORKER. This policy is to be continued until a permanent demand for our organ is created.

At its last meeting the Branch enjoyed a very interesting talk on "The Japanese Labor Movement" by Comrade Ishigaki, and those of the comrades who were not acquainted with the Japanese labor situation were pleasantly surprised to learn that despite the disorganization and persecution of the Japanese working class by Japanese Imperialism, 4,000 class-conscious Japanese workers had built up an active Communist organization.

Comrade Briggs, the Educational Director, informed the comrades that our new form of educational work at the meetings would consist in discussions on various topics of moment and that each comrade would be given the opportunity to start the discussion each week. The next meeting is to be held Wednesday, April 5th, at 143 East 103rd St. Comrade Berg will begin the discussion on "The Dictatorship of the Proletariat and the Peasant."

ADMISSION 25 CENTS COME EARLY!

[illegible]

On March 4-5 the Friends of Soviet Russia [illegible] wide drive for the relief of the destitute sufferers of [illegible].

Previously Commissioner Bird S. Coler has been [illegible] permit to make a street collection for these wretched people.

Many months were spent on negotiation. Financial [illegible] reports of activities, a detailed description of the awful conditions facing 15,000,000 human beings,—all these facts were laid before the Commissioner.

But he denied a permit, conforming to a ruling issued by himself previously, that no street collections were to be tolerated. By a mere stroke of the pen the Commissioner has thus doomed thousands of men, women, and children to certain death.

In spite of the Commissioner's decision, however, the Friends of Soviet Russia decided to organize a House-to-House Collection, which of course involved the most arduous labor on the part of volunteers, tedious stair-climbing for hour after hour.

In spite of the rain on March 4, in spite of the prospect of the most strenuous labor, 1141 persons volunteered to help their brothers and sisters in Soviet Russia. Thru the strenuous efforts of these individuals $13,177.81 was raised for the famine sufferers in two days.

Organizations Co-operate

In every part of the city organizations of workers gave their whole-hearted support to the campaign. The number of volunteers furnished and the collections made, run as follows: Shop Delegates League, 30 volunteers, collection $321.40; Workers' Self-Educational League, 8 volunteers, $172.61; Young Workers' League, 30 volunteers, $1032.25; Workmen's Circle, Branch 620, 5 volunteers, Ukrainian Singing Society and The United Toilers of America, 80 volunteers, $748.62; Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia, 20 volunteers, $244.70; Russian Club, 79 volunteers, $264.46; Czecho-Slovak Marxist Federation, 46 volunteers, $466.46; Lettish Educational Society, 45 volunteers, $438.85; Finnish Central Committee, 50 volunteers, $553.84; Workers' Immediate Aid for Soviet Russia, 23 volunteers, $907.40; Young Workers' League, 9 volunteers, Co-operative House Collection, $221.00; Society for the Relief for The People of Soviet Russia, 60 volunteers, $484.11; Sunrise Club, 9 volunteers, Consumers' League, 5 volunteers, Bronx Branch of FSR, 27 volunteers, $363.12; Lower Bronx Branch FSR, 30 volunteers, Echo of Russia, 8 volunteers, $92.77; Young Workers' League, 14 volunteers, $83.35; Technical Aid, 2 volunteers, $9.12; Bronx English Branch FSR, 25 volunteers, $300.01; Bronx Russian Branch FSR, 40 volunteers, $466.79; Bronx Jewish Branch FSR, 30 volunteers, $390.71; Lithuanian House, 20 volunteers, $233.97; International Workers' Club, 40 volunteers, $542.81; Socialist Party, 6th A. D., Kings County, $5.00.

Volunteers Make High Record

Under the leadership of Comrade L. Landy, the Harlem Section collected $2,697.75 and received the banner for the highest collection in the city.

He was actively assisted by Comrades Peer, Millenky, Boordman, Dworkin, Linkoff and Oliverstein. The highest collections in Harlem were the following: A. Laskoy, $76.50; L. Landy, $64.00; M. Scheik, $61.57; E. Seine, $46.68; S. Limbarsky, $39.00; B. Oliver, $37.16; B. Melnick, $35.83; M. Goldstein, $27.50; A. Harfield, $26.50.

Brownsville deserves the highest praise for its unusual accomplishments on March 4-5. Under the leadership of Comrade Mark Rosenberg, and with the assistance of but 80 volunteers, $2117.39 was collected, more than twice the amount collected in the last drive.

Unusual praise is due to Comrade Esther Apar, who collected $146.68, the highest individual collection in the city. Following close in her footsteps are Comrades Anna Apar, $125.36, Elkin, $123.79, Rose Novoross, $101.40, Rebecca Angel, $74.12.

Yorkville—The various participating organizations were well knitted together under the direction of E. Allikson. $1,576.16 was collected, nearly four times the amount collected previously. The Edelweiss, Vergnugungs Verein, and the Hungarian House gave their unlimited support. Among the most active helpers were Comrades Koppel and Schoenberg.

Russian Section—The Russian comrades decided to work together on this occasion. Rose Baron, S. Assator, and M. Chorover organized their forces so well that $509.16 was collected in a section of the city that had scarcely been touched previously. S. Uzelac collected $31.05; L. Herman, $25.

Brooklyn—The various sections of Brooklyn were organized by B. Levy, with the help of S. Latterman, A. Aronson, M. Plason, G. Goldenpaul, I. Lossief, and other active workers. The total collection was $1,993.31, twice the amount collected previously. Ida Meister, who was arrested during the drive, refused bail and remained in jail until she was discharged. The following were the highest records: Mrs. Verhutens, $108; Joseph Lapidus, $54; Paul Potash, $47.40; Alex Gologner $46; Nat Blankfield, $44; Celia Nessin, $36; M. Mirsky, $23.32.

The highest records in the district were: Ida Weinstadt, $67; Celia Filbert, $54; M. Reiner, $52; A. Schas, $45; Rose Wolkowitz, $44.55; M. Forenman, $34.36.

Bronx—In the Bronx the campaign was in charge of N. Young. 176 volunteers were on the job and $2,009.36 was collected. Credit is due the following Comrades for their fine collection: M. Zak, $90; H. Goldman, $60; N. Cohen, $35; W. Fox, $32; B. Ligs, $28; S. Singer, $28; S. Taymore, $26; M. Agner, $23; M. Spector, $22.50; S. Rubin, $22.

Must Enlist Women in Cause of Revolution As an Aid to Victory

The movement for the emancipation of the workers has not always been guided by persons friendly to the emancipation of women, or to the idea that women have any notable part to play in the revolutionary struggle.

The first International was called "The International Workingmen's Association." Was the word "working*men*" to include "working*women*," or was it to mean male workers exclusively? The question came up for discussion in September, 1865, at the London Conference, held a year after the founding of the International. E. E. Fribourg, one of the original members, writes as follows in his history of the organization:

"To safeguard the freedom of the various national groups . . . the question of admitting women was left to the independent decision of each group. Regarding this matter the French . . . had already decided by a large majority: 'Woman's place is the home, not the forum; Nature has made her nurse and housewife, do not let us withdraw her from these social functions and from her true sphere in life; for the man, work, and the study of the problems of society; for the woman, the caring for children and the beautifying of the worker's home.' Consequently, to the great scandal of the advocates of the so-called emancipation of woman, they had decided against the admission of women to the International." (L'association internationale des travailleurs, Paris, 1871, p. 43.)

It would be difficult to find a more amusingly reactionary utterance than this in the whole literature of the anti-suffrage movement.

To the good Fribourg and his male friends, "the caring for children and the beautifying of the worker's home" were not work at all.

To be "nurse and housewife," as Nature had designed for women—to wash clouts, to scrub and mend, to cook and wash up, to dress children in the morning and put them to bed at night after tending them thruout the livelong day in the sort of "home" capitalist society provides for workers' wives—these things were merely play, and comprised woman's "true sphere in life."

On the other hand the bourgeois "Woman's Movement" concentrated for half a century on the demand for the vote, and for the most part had as little understanding as the manual worker, Fribourg, of the realities of women's needs.

Political emancipation, which gives women a formal equality before the law, is as unreal an emancipation as the "emancipation" which bourgeois democracy has brought to male workers.

Without a complete social and economic change (a revolution which shall inaugurate Communism), women can no more secure freedom than can men.

And no social revolution can be made a permanent success without the active participation of the wives, and the mothers, and the daughters of working men.

Why is the Russian revolution in peril today? Largely because four-fifths of the population of Russia consists of reactionary peasants. And yet such freedom as the peasants have acquired by the revolution will be lost, if the revolution totters and falls and if capitalism gets re-established in Russia.

If for "peasants" in "Russia" you read "women" in "any part of the world," you will quickly understand why the revolution will be a failure if women—more than half the human race—fail to help in achieving it, and fail to undergo that revolution in their own lives and outlooks which is an essential part of any great social change.

Without revolutionary women, and revolutionized women, the communist revolution will be but a breath on the face of the waters.

In the Third International, the spirit of those who wrote, "women's place is the home" no longer prevails.

Get Ready for May Day

While capitalism endures there will be contracts or agreements between the wage workers on the one hand and their exploiters on the other.

The power of the workers is registered by the nature of the demands they are able to make successfully upon the profiteers who transmute their agony into golden treasures.

One indication of approaching emancipation is the fact that some workers have been able to incorporate in their wage agreements provisions for making International Labor Day, May 1st, a Working-Class Holiday in their industry. This is true of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and to some extent of the International Ladies Garment Workers and other progressive labor organizations.

Labor thus establishes its own holiday, as opposed to the capitalist legalized Labor Day in September, an effort to offset the holiday of the revolutionary workers in the spring of the year.

Let the militants in every labor organization start a drive for having this clause incorporated in their next wage agreement.

"Down tools on May 1st—Labor's Holiday." Let this be the slogan. Let labor insist on having one day in the year as its own, until the whole structure of capitalism falls. Then every day will be labor's day.

Propaganda for the making of May Day a real holiday for all American labor should be part of the effort of every May Day Conference. It is work that can be done now. It is work that can be carried on after this year's May Day is history. Get to work.

Acquittal of Landlord, Slayer of Worker, Striking Contrast to Sacco-Vanzetti Case

DEDHAM, Mass.—The speedy acquittal of Caleb Loring Cunningham, the aged landowner who admittedly shot in the back and killed a workingman trespassing on his vast estate, in the very court room where Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were found guilty of murder in the first degree on attenuated circumstantial evidence, puts a period to one of the most glaring contrasts in the history of capital trials.

Cunningham was arrested on the night of January 5, 1921, after the body of John Johnson, a Quincy laborer, was found on his grounds. Johnson, a preliminary hearing revealed, has been unemployed for some time. That afternoon, because it was bitter cold, he had left his wife and young children to get some kindling wood in the neighboring forest, which happens to be the property of the Cunningham blue bloods. Finding him in the act of "poaching" pieces of wood, the landowner fired a rifle and killed him.

The "gentleman farmer," as the New England papers like to refer to the 68-year old possessor of inherited property, was not put on the stand in his own defense. Instead he availed himself of the privilege accorded in murder cases to address the jury after the close of attorneys' arguments. He read a long statement, presumably his own, in which he claimed that he shot Johnson because he "feared for his life." and that there was "no murder in his heart."

The jury accepted the plea of self-defense despite the fact that the fatal bullet entered the body of the victim in the small of the back. Cunningham's lawyer tried to show that the victim had made a motion to his hip pocket as if to draw a gun and that this had frightened the rich man into wild shooting. They also tried to show that trespassing on the estate was so frequent that it had taken on the proportions of a nuisance.

Mrs. Johnson and her two children, whose bread-winner was killed while getting wood to keep them warm, are destitute as the acquitted slayer goes back to his palatial home and estates.

The most obvious contrast in the two cases is to be found in the court room atmosphere. Whereas in the Sacco-Vanzetti trial guards, guns, precautions and searchings were always in view, creating an almost tangible "feeling" of danger and ugliness in the hall of justice, the Cunningham trial was conducted in an aura of smiles, sympathy, politeness. Everyone knew that not alone Caleb Loring, but the reputation of the numerous and powerful Cunningham family was being tried and it would take a superbly courageous jury to convict under the circumstances.

The Italian workingmen in the course of their trial had been led thru the streets of Dedham under heavy guard, hand-cuffed to one another and to officers on either side. Nothing of the sort for Cunningham. When the jury was taken to the scene of Johnson's murder Cunningham went along, practically unguarded and exchanging words with neighbors.

During the year of his imprisonment awaiting trial, Cunningham occupied the cell next to Sacco's in the Dedham county jail.

Under Communism there will be food for all.

LECTURES at PHILADELPHIA

An open forum of the Workers Party at Philadelphia, to be held Sunday evenings, 8 o'clock, at the Machinists' Temple, 13th and Spring Garden Sts., Room 501, has arranged for lectures as follows: April 2, William F. Kruse, "United Labor Front" April 9, William W. Weinstone, "Problems of the Labor Movement"; April 16, J. Louis Engdahl, "Workers Party and Parliamentary Activities," and Sunday, April 23, William F. Dunne, "Trade Unionism and the Workers Party."

"Radical Platform on Sport Adopted," declares the headline. That ought to keep Attorney General Daugherty awake nights planning new "Red Raids."

Under Communism there will be clothes for all.

An Amusing Assemblage

About twenty-five detectives and Department of Justice agents, several policemen, the nine members of the deputation, the Acting Mayor and two city officials: this was the assemblage that in its appearance spoke well for the regard that the city officials have for the workers of New York City and the fear that the unemployed inspire.

"There is a serious situation among the unemployed," said the spokesman of the jobless. "Official statistics show that there are 332,000 jobless in the city, the number having increased since the end of December."

the whole district is tense. These miners will give a good account of themselves.

Already the capitalist press is wailing about the "welfare of the public." And the miners are asking, "Who is this Public, anyhow?" They recall that when the railroad workers were about to cross swords with the General Managers' Association last fall, that the miners were part of the public. If a general strike of railroad workers was to occur, there would be no care for the miners and they, being part of the public, would suffer irretrievably. And now that their organized existence is at stake, they learn that the railroad workers are part of the public.

All Labor Concerned

They are learning the lesson which other sections of the workers must learn, namely, that the working-class IS the public, and that all the working-class is vitally concerned in the outcome of this struggle between the miners and the operators.

Here is the class-struggle in all its nakedness—crude, sordid, and cruel. The federal authorities promise to "move aginst any act of violence" on the part of the miners. The Attorney General states that scabs will be protected.

The enlightened workers know this but it is well to have the Attorney General on record. It merely emphasizes the fact that the Capitalist State is a class state and that "Government is merely the executive committee for managing the common affairs of the whole bourgeoisie."

The drive for the Open Shop gathers momentum. The Building Trades Struggle on the Pacific Coast, the Landis "award" in Chicago, the fight now on in Cleveland, the railroad fiasco last fall when the leaders of the railroad Unions surrendered without striking a blow (they could not fight the government), and now comes the turn of the miners. Ten million unemployed! A most opportune time to slash wages and smash unions!

Militancy Must Win

"A fair day's work for a fair day's pay" has come to an end. The time-honored fallacy of "Community of Interest" between exploiter and exploited stands exposed.

The Open Shop Drive means the destruction of organized labor as constituted at present. But out of the ruins will come the new forms based upon the "Community of Interest" among those who work. In the heat of the conflict new weapons will be forged. Conservatism must make way for militancy.

A new leadership—a revolutionary leadership must direct the struggle. The Open Shop Drive will be met by the fighting hosts of Labor whose battle-cry will be "The Abolition of the Wages System," or . . .

Organized Labor will cease to exist.

The treaty "to bring peace to the Pacific" now having been ratified the next order of business will be to prepare for war.

Communism will come with the abolition of capitalism.

Its particular job in Eureka was to deport Elmer Smith, one of the acquitted Centralia defendants, who was billed to speak against the criminal syndicalism law of California. This was done and the best traditions of this democratic republic upheld by the legionnaires who were heavily armed and ready for action against one or two unarmed men.

What this gang of swivel-chair defenders of democracy need is another Centralia affair to jog their memories, and as for mob victims they should remember that the constitutional right to bear arms is not confined to members of the American Legion.

The Amalgamated on Unemployment

To make the demand for an immediate reform the basis of a revolutionary agitation is the task of class-conscious labor. If, in addition to this, capitalism is attacked at its weakest point—its inability to provide a decent living for those willing to work—a demand for a permanent unemployment fund, ordinarily a pure reform, becomes revolutionary in character.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers, in a pamphlet recently issued, entitled "A Proposal for an Unemployment Fund in the Men's Clothing Industry," sets forth two points as the basis for the establishment of such a fund. They are as follows:

1. Unemployment is beyond the control of the worker; it is due to defects in the management and control of industry; its cost is, therefore, properly charged against industry as an element in the cost of production, comparing in kind to such other elements as wages, the expense of maintaining machinery, the cost of industrial accidents, etc.

2. The cost of unemployment must be met from a fund, established and supported by the industry and segregated for the purpose of meeting that cost alone. In this way only can the burden of the cost be sufficiently felt by those who take steps to reduce it. It seems to be a cardinal principle in social insurance that specific allocation of the responsibility and burden is an indispensable first step in the eradication of the evil.

The war proved that given the opportunity to work at decent wages and under tolerable living conditions the percentage of those unwilling to engage in some occupation is almost negligible; during the war period when wages were high and work plentiful the so-called "vagrant" completely disappeared; he became a worker. It must be assumed, then, that men and women are not idle because of their own desire for idleness; that unemployment is an evil of the present industrial system and as such to industry must be charged the resulting damage.

To make this principle clear, and to have this work done by a powerful organization of wage-earners in a country where idleness has always been looked upon as an individual crime is an indication that for many workers the day of passive acceptance of the evils of capitalism as incurable has gone forever.

Carried to its logical conclusion the argument of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers means, in simple terms, that industry must support the workers in periods of industrial depression as well as in prosperous periods when their labor-power is needed.

Once this principle is accepted by the mass of the workers the days of capitalism are numbered. This system thrives because in an overstocked labor market the workers, unable to separate themselves from the only commodity they have for sale—their labor-power—are forced to content themselves with a subsistence wage that allows their rulers a share of the wealth of the world out of all proportion to the services rendered. The control of this wealth makes it possible for a minority to enslave the mass, for out of it is paid the expense of armies, navies, press agencies and schools.

Looking Ahead

The Chicago Federation of Labor was one of the first working class organizations in the country to seek a solution of the jobless problem when the present industrial depression began sending millions of workers into the army of the unemployed.

It soon confessed its helplessness; admitted the futility of the remedies offered under capitalism.

While seeking to arouse the workers of Chicago to the dangers of growing unemployment, the labor movement in the nation's second city was hit severely by the open shop drive in the building trades.

It will also be remembered that the officials of the Chicago Federation of Labor have been at the head of the movements for the organization of the steel and the packing industries, as well as taking a leading part in the effort to secure the liberation of Tom Mooney and other class-war prisoners.

Out of this struggle there has now come the adoption of a resolution by the Chicago Federation of Labor calling for the amalgamation of the workers into "only one union for each industry."

A united front of the workers to the solidly united forces of the exploiters, is the demand of the Chicago Federation of Labor. The resolution was brought in by the Organization Committee, of which J. W. Johnstone is chairman, and was favored by the federation's officials, with the exception of Vice-President Oscar F. Nelson, a remnant of Gompersism in a labor organization that refuses to look backward.

In order that militants in other labor bodies thruout the country may bring this resolution before their respective organizations for adoption, we publish it in full as follows:

TEXT OF RESOLUTION

Whereas the employers throughout the nation have solidly united, being bound together by a solidarity of interest and organization which leaves no room for divided action or desertion, and moreover, they are supported by the government, the courts and the press in any union-smashing undertaking they engage in; and

Whereas they are carrying on a vicious attack upon the Labor Movement, singling out various unions and forcing them to engage in a bitter struggle for self-preservation; and

Whereas these unions, because they are divided against themselves along trade lines and are thus unable to make united resistance against the employers, constantly suffer defeat after defeat, with heavy losses in membership and serious lowering of the workers' standards of living and working conditions; and

Whereas the only solution for the situation is the development of a united front by the workers through the amalgamation of the various trade unions so that there will remain only one union for each industry; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Chicago Federation of Labor, in regular meeting, call upon the American Federation of Labor to take the necessary action toward bringing about the required solidarity within the ranks of organized labor, and that, as a first step in this direction, the various international unions be called into conferences for the purpose of arranging to amalgamate all the unions in the respective industries into single organizations, each of which shall cover an industry.

Even complete amalgamation of all workers into industrial unions will not solve the problems confronting labor. It will only give the workers a more powerful machine with which to wage their struggles against their oppressors.

It will give the workers courage in their battles; courage to attempt greater things, until they will finally enter the final struggle, the abolition of capitalism and with it the blotting out of all class rule.

The Chicago Federation of Labor is asking the workers to look in the right direction. Help it swell the numbers of those who labor and suffer today but wish to enlist in the march toward their own emancipation.

By AUGUST VALENTINE

About the first half of February the company announced that it was going to close the mines down on account of the wages being too high. It was also announced that if the men would accept a wage reduction the mines would keep on working.

The mines were closed down and the company got a few weak-hearted men to sign the individual contract or the "yellow dog" as most of the people call it.

"Supes" on the Run

Later the superintendents began to run from house to house trying to get the workers to sign up. Only a few did at first. Then the company threatened if they didn't sign that they had no job and that they would have to leave the company-owned houses at once. Of course more signed then. Many of the names were on the contracts that were fictitious, there were a few names from another town controlled by the same company.

The mines started to work. Many "dry forkers" (farmers) came to work. One scab said: "I want to work now. I get all the cars I want. I can load all the dirt that is in my coal—I can "shoot on solid," etc.

But let us look back a few months and see what went on. If the slate picker would find a few pounds of dirt in your coal you would get a lay-off. That is, the company would not permit you to work for a certain length of time. The lay-off would run from a few days to as high as 23 weeks. Yet the contract between the operators and the men reads as follows: "Section 10. It is the duty of the miner or coal loader to clean his coal in his working place, as free as possible from rock, bone, slate and other impurities, in order to insure the best marketable coal. The miner or loader violating the above by loading an unreasonable amount of impurities, in the mine car, shall for the FIRST offence be notified.

"For the SECOND offence in the same calendar month, he or they, at the option of the operator, shall be suspended for one day.

"And for the THIRD offence in the same calendar month, he or they may be suspended not to exceed two days of mine operation.

"In malicious or aggravated cases, he or they may be suspended or discharged the first or any subsequent offence."

He Gets a "Vacation"

Yet, the first time I got a little dirt in my car I got a few weeks vacation instead of being notified. A scab was bragging of how they who are working now are getting off easy. He said that nobody examines their cars and that they throw in rock as heavy as two men can lift. I would like to know why in the name of hell don't the company enforce the agreement now?

Also, when I was working the company would give a person about two weeks' lay-off if he was caught "shooting on solid." According to the contract they couldn't give you a lay-off but take you up before the Justice of Peace and make you pay a fine of $5.00 or $10.00.

Why don't the company do likewise to the scabs? Why does the company let the scabs "shoot on solid" if it is against the law?

We will say that the company would give a man a lay-off for two weeks. Then when he came back, his room fell in and covered the tracks. The boss would come in and he would give you another lay-off because the place fell in and covered up a little piece of track.

Working for Nothing

In the latter part of the year the company refused to pay for putting up the timber, moving dead work, making track, and if your place fell in you would have to move the rock without getting paid for it. Some times a person would work a day or so and not get paid for it. The only thing that the miner would get paid for was the coal he produced; and then he wouldn't get all he loaded. If a man would load 4200 pounds they would only give him 3700, and in some places they would only give 3600 pounds. Many times a man world run across a vein of sand rock and the poor fellow would be drilling away sometimes a foot an hour with a breast auger and then not get paid for it.

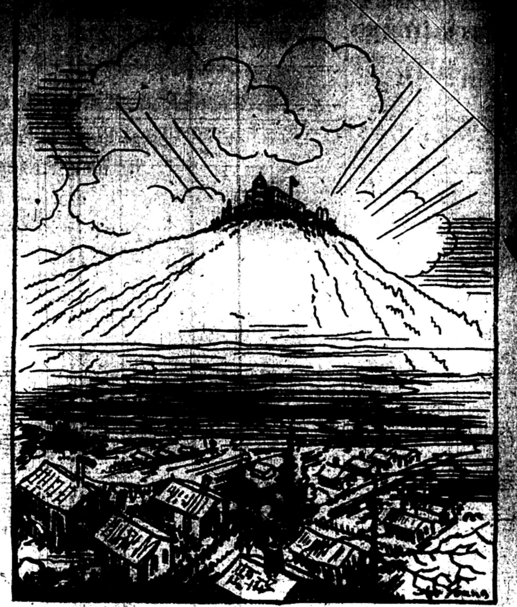
But to get back to the subject. We let the "dry forkers" work a few days. Then we saw that they were bringing always more and more in, so we went out on the picket line. Women came out with us with water, ashes and cans. In fact, the women did more than the men.

The Cossacks Are Near

The sheriff of Tucker County stayed in town a few days and was in touch with a squad of state cossacks.

So you see my friends what we miners have got to face. If we are strong enough to force the company to sign an agreement they will not live up to it. Capitalism or organized labor will have to go. There will never be peace between labor and capital.

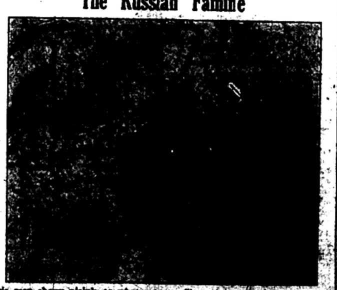
So, comrades, organize to take over the industry. Capital runs the industry for profits; we will run them for use.



Drawn by Art Young

This may be a picture of Pawtuxet Valley, or a mining town in West Virginia, or steel district in Pennsylvania. It is a common sight in most of our industrial towns. In the valley are the company-owned hovels of the workers. Above the grime, is the castle on the hill.

The Russian Famine



This map shows plainly to what extent military invasion financed by the allied powers were responsible for the famine. Only the territory inside the heavy dotted line was free from invasion. Invasions caused confiscation and destruction of crops as well as interference with the agricultural economy. Help the famine stricken by sending your contribution to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

The April Labor Herald

The April number of The Labor Herald is a bright spot in the labor publication field. Every word in it is not only of importance to the progressive and radical elements in the American labor movement but is readable.

In no labor journal we have ever seen is the matter selected with the care shown in the Herald; the articles are excellent but it is their arrangement and selection so that from the first word to the last one thing is driven home to the reader—the necessity for the solidarity of labor.

The leading article—Anvil or Hammer, Which?—says all there is to be said concerning the disastrous results of craft division in the railroad industry; it is an unanswerable argument for unity. Officialdom may ignore but it cannot refute the statements made.

The Labor Herald for April is what American labor has been waiting for—a REAL labor journal.

Pawtuxet Valley Strike Is the Vital Spot in the Cotton Workers Movement

The Amalgamated Textile Workers of America has sent out the following appeal:

To Our Loyal Old Friends and Our Interested New Friends:

The vital spot in the fight which New England cotton mill workers are making against the brutal wage cuts and the attempt to bring back the 55-hour week is the 100 percent strike in the PAWTUXET VALLEY of Rhode Island.

1. 20 percent reduction was first made in the Pawtuxet Valley, and there, on Jan. 23, the revolt began. On April 3 the strike in the PAWTUXET VALLEY entered its 11th week.

2. The strike has been from the first a 100 percent strike. Not a wheel turns in any of the 15 mills whose 8,000 workers are out. Textile workers and other workers everywhere have their eyes on the PAWTUXET VALLEY.

Food Will Prevent a Break in the Pawtuxet Valley

The Amalgamated Textile Workers of America now conducts 12 community restaurants in as many mill villages, where from 8 to 10,000 strikers and strikers' children are fed daily in the most economical way possible. Continued support is needed for these restaurants. Other relief is also given where the need is great, and the need for this will increase as the strike continues.

If the strike is lost the average wage will be $17 for a week of 54 hours.

Is the Fight a Just One?

1. The Consolidated Textile Corporation is capitalized at $40 a spindle whereas the actual value is $22.50 a spindle. The wage reductions will net $1,000,000 for dividends on watered stock.

2. In 1921 the average earnings of cotton workers, skilled and unskilled alike, fell below the level of any "health-and-decency budget" prepared by any organization, including the U. S. Government's and the National Industrial Conference Board's (an employer's organization.)

3. From 1914 to 1919 (inclusive) eight chief cotton companies average 29.6 percent on an inflated capital, after heavy interest charges and other capitalist "earnings" had been covered.

THE NEGRO PROBLEM

Several of the most prominent Negro leaders in America will participate in a symposium on the struggles of the colored race in America, Sunday evening, April 24, in Arlington Hall, 23 St. Marks Place (8th St. and 3d Ave.), under the auspices of The Liberator.

Among others will be Prof. William H. Ferris, Editor of the "Negro World," William A. Domingo, formerly of the "Emancipator," Mr. Hubert of the Urban League, and Walter F. White, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Peaple.

Jessie Redmon Fauset, Literary Editor of the "Crisis," will speak on Haitian Literature.

William Service Bell, famous Negro Baritone, will be heard in Negro spirituals. Mendel, the colored comedian, will appear in Yiddish impersonations. Sadie Cook, formerly of the Winter Garden, will present her own company in a funny sketch of colored life.

MAY DAY WAKES UP LEGION

BERKELEY, CAL.—The American Legion post of this exclusive university town is going to hold a big "patriotic" meeting the night of April 30, "in order to offset any May-day celebrations by Reds in this vicinity." It is understood the real purpose of the meeting will be to lay plans for forcible interference with any May-day parade by radicals.

Under Communism [illegible] the common ownership [illegible] and industry.

[illegible] the continued imprisonment of men sentenced for their opinions. They are [illegible] in letters to the General Council of Trade Unions; the British [illegible] Party; the British Foreign [illegible] the American ambassador; [illegible] President Harding.

Agitation for the American politicals is gathering momentum in all the big industrial centers here—[illegible], Manchester, Liverpool, [illegible], Sheffield, Leeds, Hull, [illegible], Glasgow, Edinburgh.

Twelve of the 113 war-time prisoners in America are British-born—[illegible] Brazier was a metal-worker in Birmingham; Joe Oates was a miner at Cleator Moor; Ted Frazer hails from Manchester; Sam Scarlett was a member of the old Amalgamated Society of Engineers in Glasgow. Others of English origin are Charles Lambert, Bert Lorton, J. A. Macdonald, Don Sheridan, Frederick Esmond, Harry Lloyd, Herbert Mahler and William Moran.

Spread Many Leaflets

Thousands of leaflets summing up the plight of the politicals in the United States are being circulated by the Class War Prisoners Release Committee here.

"Brutal prosecution still continues in America against workers active in defending the interests of their class," declares the committee in these leaflets. "American capitalism is the most powerful, brutal, unscrupulous and cunning in the world. The organization of the working class, belief in and teaching of the solidarity of labor is hateful and in opposition to the interests of capitalism, and is ruthlessly condemned. No stone is left unturned to railroad advocates of such doctrines to the penitentiary.

"We have had some experience in this country of individuals being prosecuted by the authorities for expressing ideas that the dominant class consider harmful to their interests. The most recent case is that of Albert Inkpin, secretary of the British Communist Party, who was sent to prison for six months. But persecution here has been nothing to what our American brothers have suffered.

Can't Understand Conditions There

"It is hard for the British worker who is used to some pretense of justice to understand conditions in the United States. There the class war is fought nakedly and ferociously; trustified capital uses all methods, legal and illegal, to prevent the workers from organizing and so gaining power.

"Union men have been murdered in cold blood, cruelly beaten, branded, tarred and feathered, kidnapped, driven insane by the fiendish punishment and torture perpetrated by the hired gunmen and thugs of Big Business.

"In 1917, soon after the United States entered the Great War, wholesale raids took place. Those suspected of not being 100 per cent in favor of the war or who were known to be opposed to the present system of exploitation were arrested. After a trial lasting 138 days in Chicago, 93 Industrial Workers of the World were found guilty by an openly biased capitalist jury of what simply amounted to class consciousness.

"The infamous laborhating Judge Landis sentenced these 93 men to a total of [illegible] years imprisonment and fines totalling $2,[illegible].

Loyal to the Workers

"What was their crime? They were educating and organizing the workers on the industrial field, were fighting for a better standard of living, were loyal and unselfish in their efforts on the part of the working class. But this was not simply a prosecution of men accused of opposing the war, preventing enlistment and organizing strikes for better conditions. Ideals and ideas were on trial, as the prosecution conclusively showed thruout the whole proceedings.

"Jim Larkin, secretary of the Irish Transport Workers' Union, is another victim of the laborhaters in the United States. Seized with other fighters in the cause of the workers he, along with Ben Gitlow of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, has been sentenced to an indeterminate sentence of from five to ten years. This indeterminate sentence is another of American capitalism's methods so far unknown in Britain. The minimum sentence expires in five years; the rest of the sentence expires at the pleasure of the authorities, and in Larkin's case the capitalists' pleasure would be to keep him in prison for life.

"Larkin was convicted of 'criminal anarchy,' a crime undefined but generally interpreted as anything which interferes with capitalist exploitation of the workers. This 'criminal anarchy,' or 'criminal syndicalism,' is not a crime under the federal laws of the United States. It is only a crime in certain states.

"It is up to you, workers of Britain, to protest against this persecution of your brothers. The cause for which these men lie in America's bastilles is your cause."

Organize "Release Committee"

Men of power and high standing in the British labor movement are heading the Class War Prisoners' Release Committee. They include Robert Williams, secretary of the Transport Workers' Federation; Tom Mann of the Amalgamated Engineering Union; George Lansbury, editor of the London Daily Herald; W. J. Webb, of the Electricians' Trade Union; Ben Smith of the Transport and General Workers' Union; Jack Tanner of the Shop Stewards' movement; and H. Pollitt of the Boilermakers' Union.

Jack Tanner is speaking at frequent meetings arranged by the committee. He spent several months in the United States last year, and tells at first hand of conditions there. Especially does he deal with California, which has sent so many industrialists to prison, and which continues to send them—under a drastic criminal syndicalism law, which makes it felony (under the interpretation given by various judges) simply to hold membership in the Industrial Workers of the World.

Ashleigh Will Help

Charles Ashleigh, member of the I. W. W., who was released from Leavenworth penitentiary in Kansas on the day when Debs was freed at Atlanta, also has agreed to speak at massmeetings staged by the London committee.

All war-time prisoners in England were at liberty within a year after the armistice. Most of the politicals here were sentenced for six months, and none were put away longer than 12 months.

Soviet [illegible] for World Problems at Genoa Conference

By JEANETTE [illegible]

None but the unsophisticated believes that the Genoa Conference will bring Europe out of her present economic and political chaos.

Some liberals who still think that [illegible] tables and conferences can make something out of nothing, cling to the hope that once the diplomats of Europe and America get together, they will pull the world out of the bankruptcy in which she finds herself.

The Genoa Conference is the outward and visible expression of capitalist imperialism in its most recent effort at self-preservation. The inclusion of Russia is a foreshadowing of the coming universal clash between the old order and the new.

If there is anything in the proverb, "Ende gut, Alles gut," then our hope lies in the end of the conference, for the preliminaries do not augur well. It was rather difficult inviting guests without offending someone.

Lloyd George, the shrewd Welshman, can see enough to understand that Germany and Russia, the keys to the economic rehabilitation of Europe must be present. He also wanted Uncle Sam to come but the rich Uncle was suspicious of the invitation. He feared that only his legacy interested Europe and he was determined not to help again unless he knew just what he was going to get out of it.

U. S. Doesn't Like Russia

Besides, there was Russia invited and with a working class government still in existence, she was no fit power to sit at the table with. Mr. Hughes informed the world that we would have nothing to do with Soviet Russia but in the meantime, he also let it be known that no concessions should be obtained by any of the foreign powers from her until America believed it the opportune time to step in and get something too. American simplicity!

The work to be accomplished at Genoa brings to the surface a state of feeling between England and France which it has long been suspected would come about as a result of the war.

It is impossible for two world powers to fight a common enemy and after defeating him overwhelmingly not to have another fight over the spoils. Such is the status between England and France.

With the British Empire trembling under the heel of revolution, France sees her opportunity of becoming the first power of Europe. Her strengthening of Poland through the unasked for gift of Silesia; her seizure of the coal and iron centres of Alsace Lorraine; her increased militarization and imperial designs have awakened England to the danger that exists across the channel.

Fight French Ambitions

Her insistence upon the reparation payments by Germany, not because she is desirous of paying her war debts to the United States but for the purpose of increasing her fighting machinery and throwing out her tentacles to grab the first place in the sun, can only be met by reprisals from England and the United States.

England, unlike France, is dependent upon Germany's industries, and the success of German economic conditions is a great determinant of business and industry in England. She is greatly concerned over the withdrawal of 350,000,000 buyers of Europe.

She must have the German and Central powers in a position where they can buy English-made goods. She cannot afford to crush Germany. Back in 1919, Lloyd George realized that to be too severe with Germany would throw her into the arms of Russia. To prevent this, the raw material and markets of the world must be open to her. In addition, he explained that "we cannot both cripple her and expect her to pay," for which reason England is not as insistent upon too severe measures being taken with regard to the payment of reparations as is France.

England to Embrace Germany?

There is cropping out in the Liberal papers of England the feeling that they must put down the arrogance of France. All the sentimental memory of France is leaving the minds of Englishmen when they see their profits endangered. They are forgetting their idealized France and their hatred for their inveterate enemy, Germany, because at present it is to England's interest to strengthen one and weaken the other. Will England and Germany yet embrace against France in some formal trade arrangement before many moons have waned?

This hostility between England and France is further complicated by the newly-acquired position of world leadership of the United States. She is the only important nation which is still solvent, and she sees where her strength lies. Indeed, it was this more than anything else which dictated America's policy with regard to the conference. She will not attend, for if she does, she will find herself assisting in the reconstruction of Europe, which some of her statesmen believe may endanger her recently won power.

Bankers Want Their Money

While European diplomats are extremely anxious that America sit at Genoa, President Harding prefers a full-fledged representative on the Reparation Commission for here will be America's most strategic point. With such a diplomat there, it is believed that payments from the German nation will be more readily secured and thus the Allies will be able to pay their debt to the United States. The American Government is not interested in Genoa—in helping to rebuild bleeding Europe. Her foreign policy is dictated by the bankers who want their money, and they will see to it that their will is carried out with regard to Germany, as it is in this country in their conflicts with the workers here.

American industry is divided on the question of trade relationship with Germany and Russia. Many of our financiers see that stagnation in Europe is stagnation here. The Chambers of Commerce are favoring participation at the Genoa conference, hoping thereby to breathe some life into America's sleeping industries. They are opposed to isolation and we hear that Messrs. Morgan have already entered into agreement with some German financiers to do business in Russia. On the other hand, there are some who are anxious to keep Germany and Russia in their present condition. They fear that with Germany manufacturing Russia's raw materials, the two powers can flood the markets with their goods. Germany's exports to this country are increasing rapidly and consequently much alarm is felt. For instance, Germany's heavy exports of potash to the United States have already crippled and destroyed this war-begotten industry here to such an extent that they are petitioning Congress for a protective tariff for the next five years. They cannot see further than their own industry; they are blind to the fact that America needs the products of Germany and Russia and that these nations need our goods.

Prelude to Next War

Here then is a complete prelude to another imperialistic war. During the last war, it was only the working class that did not know what it wanted. The capitalists were not at all confused by the phrases of patriotism or sentimental rot about democracy and Prussianism. They were all after one thing—world markets. With the defeat of Germany, it was clear that there would have to be another dispute among the victorious powers for each would be suspicious of the other. Capitalists of different lands fight together when they have a common end; they separate when the big spoils have been won and must be divided up. In both cases, the workers are their pawns and do their bidding.

With these conditions confronting the statesmen who are to assemble at Genoa, what can we expect from them? The only solution will, undoubtedly, be presented by the representatives of Soviet Russia.

[illegible] Vanzetti [illegible] stimulate hatred of Americans in Europe and are a powerful weapon in creating a world-wide revolutionary movement among the working class."

His communication in full reads:

"In view of your articles on the Sacco-Vanzetti case it occurs to me that you might be interested to hear that the movement here has reached large proportions and seems to be growing. I met here a few days ago two young Italian-Americans who gave up well-paying positions in the building trades, one in Boston and the other in New York, to come here to aid in the movement. They have been working and touring Italy, one for eight months, the other for three months, holding meetings and spreading the propaganda.

"This morning I was taken by these young men to a meeting of the building trades at which one of them spoke about the Sacco-Vanzetti case and was received with much applause. The object of the meeting was to prepare to resist a reduction of wages threatened by the employers for June 1, and the place scheduled was the People's House of Rome. The crowd, which numbered from 8,000 to 10,000, was too large for the hall and the meeting was held at the foot of the street on a hill opposite the Coliseum.

"After speeches had been made by the Secretary of the Building Trades Federation, who announced himself an Anarchist, and several others, one of the young Italian-Americans mentioned was introduced and made a fiery speech on the Sacco-Vanzetti case amid great applause. He had his facts and handled them well.

"Massachusetts and California are a long way from Rome, and the powers that be that have kept Mooney, Sacco and Vanzetti in jail may be indifferent to the opinions of the people and particularly the workers here. Nevertheless, it is becoming more and more evident to thinking people that such events help to stimulate hatred of Americans in Europe and are a powerful weapon in creating a world-wide revolutionary movement among the working class."

Workers in Italy Hold Sacco-Vanzetti Meetings

BOSTON.—Increasing anxiety all thru Italy over the fate of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, the New England radicals convicted on a capital charge, is indicated in cable dispatches and Roman newspapers just arrived here.

Sacco-Vanzetti agitation committees, it appears from the labor press of the country, are holding meetings in Rome, Milan, Turin, Genoa, Spezia, Piacenza and a score of other places.

Communist, socialist and syndicalist leaders are denouncing the Italian government as "subservient to America" in its failure to take more effective action towards the release of the two Italians.

Deputy Leone Mucci, Socialist representative from Sacco's native province of Puglia, in an address from the parliament floor demanded from the government a clear-cut statement of policy in the Sacco-Vanzetti matter.

Tosti Valminuta, the new undersecretary of foreign affairs, replied that efforts for the men have been made directly from Rome, as well as by Ambassador Rolando Ricci in Washington.

PARIS ELECTS COMMUNISTS

The Communists Andre Marty and M. Badina have been overwhelmingly elected to the municipal council of Paris.

Both Marty and Badina were elected to the council last year, but were not permitted to serve, the Council of State ruling that they had lost their civil rights thru being convicted for a part in the Black Sea mutiny, when the French sailors refused to fire on the Russian Bolsheviki at the Soviet port of Odessa.

Altho women are not eligible for municipal councilorships, Mme. Marthe Bigot, a Communist school teacher who was [illegible] charged with being an "agitator," received 352 votes, thus preventing the leading candidate in the third district from obtaining a majority, and making another ballot necessary.

In Europe deepest misery has been reached by the working masses. We are swiftly approaching the same level.

Edwin Hoernle appealing to the proletariat of Europe on behalf of their children gives the following harrowing details of the conditions now existing and towards which we are drifting:

Mortality Among Children Grows

"In the years 1914-18 the mortality of the children from the age of 5 to 15 years has in Prussia gone from 25,720 to 50,391. The Central Committee of the German Red Cross Association, Department of Mother and Child, reports that amongst 485,000 children out of a total population of 3,500,000 in Berlin:

29,000 suffer from tuberculosis.

120,000 are acutely undernourished.

"According to exact reports there are in 43 great cities in Germany 200,633 children suffering with tuberculosis, 835,000 ill and badly undernourished.

"In Kaiserslautern out of 8,214 children only 2,784 were sufficiently dressed, while the clothing of 917 consisted of nothing but rags; 8 had no shirts whatever, while 220 possessed only one each; 345 had no underwear, 438 no shoes.

Death Takes French Children

"The Bureau of Statistics of France has published figures which go far to prove that France, like the rest of the European countries records an appalling mortality of children. Out of 10,000 children, according to these figures, the following number have died: In Rouen 294, in Lille 342, in Dunkirch 507, in Halluin 509. In Paris half the number of all children die before they are weaned, the cause of this tremendous percentage being lack of nurseries and other institutions devoted to the welfare of children.

"The Bruxelles newspaper "Le Peuple" reports that in Germany there are one million sick children, that in Austria 700,000 children have died of hunger, that in Poland 1,000,000 children are suffering hunger in every sense of the word."

U. S. Government Silent

Governments do not compile figures to show its failures; and the United States government has given out no figures which would tend to show the exact conditions of the workers' children in the "free" United States.

[illegible]

THE REVISED PSALM

Harding is now my shepherd and I die in want;
He maketh me to lie down on the park benches; he leadeth me beside the free soup houses.
He restoreth my doubt in the Republican party; he leadeth me in the paths of destruction for his party's sake.
Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of starvation, I do fear evil, for thou art against me, thy policies and the profiteers they frighten me.
Thou preparest a reduction in wages before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my income with taxes; my expenses runneth over my income
Surely, poverty and unemployment will follow me all the days of this normalcy administration, and I will dwell in a rented house forever.—
Swiped

Our conditions grow worse daily. The action of the capitalist class must be forestalled, and it can only be forestalled by united action on the part of the working masses.

In the words of Edwin Hoernle: PROLETARIAN PARENTS! INTO YOUR HANDS HAS BEEN LAID THE DECISION OVER YOUR FATE AND THAT OF YOUR CHILDREN!

California Communist Trials Again Postponed

OAKLAND, CAL.—The trials of Reed, Tobey, Smith and Dolsen, former members of the Communist Labor party, charged with "criminal syndicalism," is again postponed. It has been dragging on now since 1919.

Dolsen pointed out to Judge Church that he had been tried once separately, and the jury had disagreed, and that he is at the very least entitled to another separate trial.

The Better America Federation and kindred forces, however, have their hearts set on a joint trial, in the style of the recent I. W. W. cases, and the probability is that Dolsen's contention will not be granted, but that the four named, together with Ragsdale and Snyder, will be tried together—if they ever are tried.

C. A. Tobey, Jr., is scheduled to be tried April 10. His crime consisted in selling Communist literature.

[illegible] Harrison Tours New England in Drive for Workers Party

By CALEB HARRISON, National Secretary, Workers Party

[illegible] New England cities there's [illegible] campaign of the Workers Party activity in the vicinity. Many old-timers in Socialist activity are anxious to learn just how we differ from the S. P. and the S. L. P., the I. W. W., and why the need of a new political party of labor. These old-timers very soon understand the value of the differences and begin to show appreciation of our practical program. The result is, many subscriptions to THE WORKER are taken.

Commune Day at Lawrence

In Lawrence the local comrades had arranged a Commune celebration. The Lithuanian comrades had a very good musical program arranged that pleased the audience very much.

In Peabody we had a very good meeting. This is a leather town where the Leather Workers' Union is very active, and progressive, too. The National Organizer of the Leather Workers was our chairman. The many English speaking workers in attendance appreciated the meeting very much. The prospects for a strong English branch in Peabody are very bright. At present we have only Russian and Finnish branches in Peabody.

In Chelsea the meeting was not large, due to the decision of the committee to hold the meeting in a hall distant from the place where meetings are regularly held. In Quincy we had a good meeting. Here we have a large Finnish branch, with prospects also for an Italian and an English branch soon.

Speaks to Salem Jobless

I spoke at a meeting of the unemployed in Salem. These meetings are conducted by the Central Labor Union and are well attended.

In Norwood we had an excellent meeting. The hall of the Finnish branch on Chapel St. was filled with workers of every nationality, including Americans. Here we took up a large collection, sold eleven "sub" cards and a big bundle of THE WORKER. The comrades were much pleased with the success of the meeting and hope to have a strong English branch soon.

In Providence the hall owned by the Co-operative Society was well filled. Here we have a few English speaking comrades who are old-timers in the Socialist and Labor movement; men who have been on the job all the time.

Aid in the Textile Strike

They took an active part in bringing the textile workers out on strike along the Pawtuxet valley in Rhode Island.

These comrades are also active in the Providence Local of the Amalgamated Textile Workers, which local is doing excellent work financially and morally for the strikers.

On Saturday I took a ride down to Arctic and Natick, the center of strike activity in the Pawtuxet valley. The strike is solid. The giant factories are silent and dark. The workers are in earnest in this strike, devoting all their time to maintaining the morale of the strike by taking care of the needs of everybody in a most efficient manner.

Everybody gets plenty to eat in the strikers' restaurants. Besides this, all the talented youngsters, who have good voices or ability to play musical instruments are utilized to give entertainments; games of all kinds are played and everybody has a good time between the periods of strike duty.

Physically and spiritually the strikers are better off than they ever were. Only one thing is necessary to strengthen the situation and that is, to establish connection between the workers in the two strike fields.

The officials of the two unions may not see the importance of this move but the membership should take advantage of every opportunity to get together.

Strikers Must Get Together

Nothing should be left undone to prevent the bosses of one district arranging a settlement and the other district ignored.

One thing is certain, the bosses of the two districts are conferring and the workers should do likewise to prevent being used against one another.

In Springfield, Saturday night, and Lowell, Sunday night, the meetings were like the average. In each place there is no English speaking membership, consequently foreign born workers made up the audience.

The private car of President Atterbury of the Pennsylvania was held in readiness for Cardinal Dougherty on his return from Rome. This should be encouraging news for those of the Cardinal's faith, who work for the open shop P. R. R.

Under Communism there will be leisure, pleasure and education for all.

Communism Made Easy

Fellow-worker!

You are not a Communist!

That's taken for granted, for very few of us are. Perhaps you never will be.

But, if you are a worker, a member of the working-class, that is, the class or part of the human race that works or labors to produce wealth for others; if, in other words, you happen to be one of "that large and respectable class, the men of no property," then you run a good risk of becoming a Communist some day.

Maybe you'll develop into one before the Social Revolution, or maybe you will follow the huge majority after the revolution and gradually discover that you have become a Communist in time for the Second Act, having missed the first, owing to causes which we won't discuss here.

Anyway, you aren't yet on the stage for the First Act of the greatest Historical Drama yet played. What we want you to do is to leave off sleeping or dozing and take a hand.

If the revolutionary discontent, that is shaking up your thoughts and emotions, drives you into the Workers Party, don't believe you've become a Communist, even then.

The only thing that distinguishes the usual member of the Workers Party from an outside rebel is that, he is moving more surely, and at a quicker pace to being a Communist. Nothing more!

Once you get inside and are marked fit for full membership, you are apt to think the trouble is all over.

You imagine you are a Communist and because you're one you can solve the most trying problems in the wink of an eye just because you are a Communist.

If you continue in this frame you'll never be one. You're too conceited to last. You think that the Russians are all wrong, that Lenin doesn't know what he's doing; you shout "who is this Trotzky, anyway?" and "didn't Liebknecht make a mess of things?"

But you'll get over that phase, and steady down. You don't annoy the older members—those who have been studying Communism for four or five years and yet hesitate to give a quick decision without a long debate, a thoro search, and clear thinking on it.

No! they smile, and say, "Oh, yes, I was once like that—he'll make good stuff when he gets more sense and experience."

You've drifted into the Party—forced there by some unknown motive or desire deep down in you.

The rebellious stirrings in you, the mental dissatisfaction, the primitive desire to get into a "herd" as the best way to fight for a cause,—a number of feelings, thoughts and instincts drove you in search of a movement which would respond to your desires.

At last after several trials of other "crowds," you became a Communist, —or thought you did.

After a while you understand a little about what Communism is. And this is how it looks to you.

Communists strive to overthrow the present rotten way of living and earning one's living; they strive to build up a better system of living for the workers by scrapping all that is useless and foul in this system, and by starting anew with all the good things and ways of the present on a better, more just, and more efficient foundation.

This is not as clear an idea about it as you'll have before we end this series. But leave it at that as the first inkling that the recruit gets, and we'll go along clearing it up, elaborating it, correcting it, thereby clearing up, elaborating and correcting our own ideas about it.

The Communists are always and ever seeking to perfect the instruments they use, and ever and always try to apply these tools in the best ways,—the ways that will get them home soonest.

They are not concerned about the ways, or methods, or means,—only about the end to which they aspire.

To become one who is able to wield this weapon, you must study hard, and think clear; you must take an active part in the every-day work of the Party; you must have constant experience in the every-day struggles of your own class, the workingclass.

You must study and learn from those who know more than you, who have had more experience than you.

While learning don't forget to act, —act in the Party life, reap what experience you can; and struggle on in your work-a-day life, inspiring your fellow workers in their fight against rotten conditions,—study on, struggle on, with this one hope: "I am on the road to being a Communist, quite able to lead my class in its struggle one of these days, perhaps very soon."

Literature Loan Campaign Is Reaching High Pitch

By ELMER T. ALLISON

As the weeks pass, the Literature Loan Campaign of the Workers Party, instituted for the purpose of establishing a department for the publication and sale of the Party's literature, assumes greater proportions. Increasing receipts in the form of loans reach the National Office each week. Communications from the membership compel the belief that practically all locals and party branches are watchful of the Department's development and anxious to help in its growth.

Below are published some of the most recent receipts together with the names of the comrades who have backed the Loan Campaign with their dollars.

I. Ymsen, $5; Local Richmond, Va., $3; Robert J. [illegible], $1; Finnish Branch, West Frankfort, Ill., $5; Finnish Branch, Ashby, Mass., $3; [illegible] Total to March [illegible]

One outstanding effect of the loan campaign is the appearance of the first volume of the "A B C of Communism," by Bucharin. This volume is the Party's own publication. The second volume is to follow at once. Another publication just off the press for which the funds have been furnished by the Loan Campaign, is the "Revolutions and Decisions of the Red Labor Union International." This is now on sale in the Party's Literature Department. The A B C retails at 50c. a copy, ten or more copies at 35c. each. The other booklet is a 15c. volume of nearly a hundred pages. The wholesale prize is 11c.

As the funds arrive in the form of loans, from the membership, the good work of publication by the Party of its own literature, will develop. Other pamphlets and books will be issued just as fast as funds permit. All comrades should feel the deepest interest in this vital department of Party work and make a loan to assist it to do the work of propaganda and education so necessary.

PARTY ACTIVITIES

District One, Workers' Party, Holds Convention. The first convention of District One, which includes all New England states except Connecticut, will be held Sunday, April 2, at Chelsea, Mass. Caleb Harrison, National Secretary of the Party, will attend.

In addition to the reports of the national, district, and language section organizers and the election of a permanent district committee there will be time devoted to the questions of unemployment, trade union activity, the Textile Strike, Russian Famine Relief, Political Prisoners, Press, Educational Work and the next election campaign.

New Russian Branch in Philadelphia. An application for charter was received from a newly organized branch of the Workers Party in Philadelphia. The branch will do its business in the Russian language.

Denver, Colo. Out of a mass meeting called to protest against the imprisonment of workers under the Industrial Court Law by joint action of the trade unions, and various radical political and educational organizations a movement for independent political action has developed.

A committee of 100 has been sent out to call for precinct organization and all factions are lining up to take part in the demonstration. Several arrests followed the mass meeting, but all cases were dismissed.

City Central Committee, Greater New York, Meets on Saturday, April First

Local Greater New York at the last meeting of the City Central Committee adopted the By-Laws of the local. Branches must elect the officers and committees which the By-Laws call for and of which they have been informed in the last letter sent to the organizers by the local office. There are not to be new elections, only the election of additional officers and committees. At the next meeting of the Committee on April 1st, the Labor Temple, 243—84th Street, Room 8, a new City Executive Committee of nine members is to be elected.

Branch Membership Lists

All branch organizers are advised that the list of names and addresses of the members of their branches must be filed with the local office within one week on forms provided.

Dues, Organization Stamps, Paris Commune Day Tickets

All branches must pay up their financial obligations, on dues, organization stamps, and Paris Commune Day tickets. Branches which have not made any payment will be denied representation at the City Central Committee.

All literature agents must regularly order and receive supplies of The Worker and books for sale at the halls and meetings in their territory. Call at the local office and see our literature agent, Frank Grund, to make arrangements.

Education

The local announced a series of lectures on the International and American labor movement. Registration for these courses should go on and the names of comrades sent to the local office in order to make reservations.

Unemployment

Meeting of the members of the Party who are unemployed will be held at The Toiler Building, 208 E. 12th St., on Saturday, April 8th, at 2 P. M. All branches should see that those concerned attend this meeting. Put it on the order of business at the next meeting and receive a report.

May Day Demonstration

The local will participate in a May Day demonstration for the release of political prisoners which is being arranged under joint auspices of political, labor and defense bodies of New York. In the next issue of The Worker announcement will be made of a meeting of the membership of the local to arrange for our part in the demonstration.

Foster Meeting

April 7th, at Beethoven Hall, at 8 P. M., William Z. Foster, Leader of the Great Steel Strike and Secretary of the Trade Union Educational League, will speake on the task of the radicals in the Trade Unions. He will organize the New York division of the League. All members of the Party must be present at this meeting. All militants in the Labor Movement should attend.

Volunteers Wanted

The local office is in need of clerical help—especially typists. The names of those who can devote some voluntary work are requested. Drop into the office and help.

Notice of Branch Activity in Press

All branches are requested to inform the local of their activity. Branches should send notices to the Local office and we will have them inserted in The Worker and other papers.

William W. Weinstone,
Executive Secretary.

ORGANIZE IN LOS ANGELES

LOS ANGELES.—The city central committee of the Workers Party is composed of representatives of eight branches, the English, Hungarian, Finnish, and Jewish branches being numerically the strongest. Several other foreign language branches are in process of formation, among them an Italian branch. A branch of the Young Workers' League is holding weekly meetings.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER. KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

Under Communism none will live thru the exploitation of others.

[illegible]

[illegible] that we are cowards, sneaks and yellow [illegible] little reformist [illegible] critics of Detroit (and elsewhere) are they [illegible] the same thing. [illegible] the point of view of the revolutionary [illegible] of reformistic tendencies and beliefs they [illegible] their intelligence. They do not realize the strength of our position.

It might do well to examine the characteristics of the reformists. By what signs can we point to a man (or a woman) and say: "Here is a reformist?"

Beliefs of Reformism.

The reformist believes in the struggle for immediate needs of the workers. He is to be found in the front-line of the working-class when the workers demand such little things as higher wages, shorter hours, old age pensions, workmen's compensation and the like.

They advocate these reforms because they believe that the achievement of these immediate ends will materially assist the working-class, will better the condition of the working-class.

Moreover, the reformist believes that a large number of such measures will so better the lot and condition of the working-class, will give them such a great measure of control over the capitalist that the capitalist class will be gradually and peacefully eliminated.

Here are the characteristic points of a reformist! He advocates reforms because he believes they will materially better the lot of the workers, and that a series of such measures will gradually and peacefully accomplish the revolution.

Rejects Experience As Teacher.

The reformist seems to close his eyes to all the many lessons of bitter experience. He continues his weary way, believing in the accomplishment of the workers' paradise a la minimum wages and the like. But he does not seem to see the total futility of his program. He is in the same position as the Christian who still stoutly declares that God created the world in six days and that the only cure for disease is "trust in the Lord"!

The faithful Christian (who carries the faith to its logical conclusion) will have nothing of "new-fangled" science, preferring to place his life and health in the hands of superstition! He falls an easy prey to all manner of quacks and "medicine-men" and soon "goes to his Lord."

The reformist is in just the same position. He abandons science and scientific methods, and places his trust in "peace and goodwill." Fancy John Ruskin (poor soul!) trying to lead the modern capitalist class to a change of heart and greater co-operation!

The scientist argues from cause to effect. Without the law of causation the remarkable progress of industry and commerce during the last hundred years would have been impossible.

Nothing happens without a cause. The corn on your favorite toe, the bald places on your head, the pain in your stomach—all spring from various causes. They are the natural effects of causes: And if the corn is to be removed it will be of no use simply cutting it out whilst leaving the nail in your boot, nor will it help any to take medicine unless that medicine goes to the cause of your trouble.

The same applies to the problems which afflict the working-class. These problems do not spring from the good-will of the Lord, nor are they the results of the evil temper of the devil. They do not trouble us by chance. They are the effects of certain causes, and if we are to make any progress in regard to this matter then must we apply ourselves to the causes.

To ignore the cause of poverty and seeking to remove poverty by other means is worse than futile. It is the policy of the quack, of the medicine-man of the savages in the back-woods.

This is where the reformist fails, and the reason for his failure! He is a social quack who is always seeking to remove poverty by dealing with effects and ignoring causes. He is always striving to mop the floor when the tap is turned on!

Labor in the Bread Line.

That the above is not merely good theory is shown by the bitter experiences of the workers in many countries. Despite the frantic efforts of our reformists, statesmen, editors, professors, priests and a host of other "authorities" the lot of the working-class gets worse. The legislatures pass laws by the thousand, the courts issue their injunctions, the professors and editors write long treatises and profound editorials—but all to no purpose. Altho the reformers have had their way and have succeeded in passing reform until the Statute Books of the world cannot be seen for the reforms, millions of workers are in the "bread line." Central Europe is an economic ruin, international credits are on the verge of utter collapse and the condition of the working-class is being reduced to one of the greatest servility.

These are the lessons to be learned by those who will heed! Nor are these lessons of many countries and many experiments surprising when we remember that the reformists do not go to the cause of all this misery and suffering! They ignore the cause of unemployment and then are pained when we inform them that they are quacks!

Must Remove Causes.

It is time that the workers of the world threw overboard the nostrums, pills and potions of the social and political quacks who have been trying to cure society of its diseases whilst leaving the root cause untouched. It is imperative that the workers understand the cause of their poverty and their misery, and understanding, make a concerted effort to remove the cause.

The cause of all this wide-spread misery and suffering is not far to seek. When the means of production (land, factories, mines, railroads, machinery, etc.) are owned and controlled by a small group of financiers and capitalists the great mass of the wealth-producers must work for wages. In other words, they receive only a small portion of the wealth which they have produced.

Here, then, is the root cause of poverty, unemployment, prostitution, crime and the many evils which afflict the long-suffering working-class. It must be our business to attack this root cause and remove it. That is the scientific method. It is the only method which will be productive of successful results. Capitalism must be removed if the workers continue to live.

Not Reform but Revolution.

Not social reforms but social revolution must be the policy of the future. Not bolstering up a system of society which has declared itself unable to feed, clothe and shelter the mass of the workers, but its abolition. This is the policy of the working-class in all countries.

Why, then do we participate in the every-day struggles of the working-class? Why do we throw our strength into the scale on the side of the workers who demand a little more "hay and oats" under capitalism? Are not these the tactics of the reformists whom we have just condemned as social quacks?

We do not engage in these struggles of the workers with any of the illusions of the reformists about betterment under capitalism and of peaceful evolution, thereby, into the Socialist Republic. We accuse the reformists of quackery and fraud.

But we know that these struggles serve as bases for better organization and understanding. Out of these struggles the workers come with new and bitter experiences. The weaknesses of their organized efforts are demonstrated in no uncertain manner. The methods to be adopted are clearly proclaimed by the logic of events.

Moreover, participation in these struggles for "hay and oats" enables us to gain the ears of the masses, so that we can expose the shallow sophistry of the reformers and prove to the workers the correct tactics to adopt. By such methods, we secure contact with the mass of the workers and endeavor to organize the largest possible mass of the workers for the overthrow of capitalist oppression.

We Must Not Degenerate.

At the same time we must be careful not to degenerate to the level of the reformists. Not for a moment must we lose sight of the fact that we participate in order to accomplish, not the betterment of conditions under capitalism, but the organization and education of the masses [illegible]

[illegible] Young Workers League

Report of National Organization Committee.

With the delaying of the convention to May 13 has come about a renewal of activities on a national scale to insure the success of the greatest of events in the revolutionary youth movement in this country.

Branches of the Y. W. L. who heretofore were dubious as to whether they could send delegates to the national convention are now certain that this important step can now be taken by them. This is attributed to the setting over of the date for the convention.

News from the local branches and from the newly organized sections is very encouraging.

Strong Branch at Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh has organized a strong branch of the Y. W. L., consisting of 38 members, with Agnes Peterka as secretary, who writes in saying: "Not to be over laudatory, and yet to say the least the draft (Manifesto and Program) is an inspiration to the comrades here who have made up their minds to launch this revolutionary young movement in Pittsburgh, and, in fact, the country over because the work is too capable of ideal accomplishment in the near future to be restricted to any one vicinity." We expect great things from Pittsburgh.

The State Organization of the I. Y. P. S. L. of N. J. has answered the Convention Call of the Y. W. L., to come to our convention and become part of the Y. W. L. The Labor Educational Society of Newark has done likewise.

A short but interesting letter comes from August J. Valentine, of the United Mine Workers of America, Local 4112, Cokstone, West Virginia. Comrade Valentine, tho but 17 years of age, has seen some real fighting against the master class in the coal fields. The miners in his section are now locked out by the coal barons. Valentine is organizing a branch of the Y. W. L., and if we can give him some financial aid, he will represent the youth of West Virginia at our convention. Contributions for this purpose are invited. The fact that the Y. W. L. attracts to it such elements is proof of its revolutionary spirit.

Live Branch at Frisco

In San Francisco a live bunch of young workers and students have organized a branch of the Y. W. L. which forms a worthy part of the national organization. W. T. Brown, secretary of the Workers Party in that city, writes us concerning the members of the Y. W. L. . . . "some of the answers to questions evinced in these young people of 14 and 15, an intelligence, a perception, an originality, and a spirit rarely found among adults of the larger class. . ." Marvin Sanford is the secretary of this active branch of the Y. W. L. on the Pacific Coast and reports that they already have there 20 members and are just starting.

A Branch of the Y. W. L. was organized recently in Paterson (Jewish branch) with 36 members. A successful Commune affair was held by them on March 18.

Charles Kiselis is working hard in Racine, Wis., to start an organization of the Y. W. L., and is meeting with success. The work is slow, but he is not discouraged.

The Y. W. L. in Jamestown say they like the Manifesto and Program, and are eager to see the Y. W. L. grow. Comrades in Ashtabula, Ohio, are aiding in distributing the Young Worker. Cleveland is organizing. Los Angeles writes: "We are awaiting arrival of the Young Worker with keen perception." Henre Victor Honre of L'Union Franco-Belge, Lawrence, is on the job organizing. Angora, Minn., is aiding in popularizing the Young Worker.

Benefit at Philadelphia

The Banater Jugend Verein (branch of the Y. W. L. in Philadelphia) is making arrangements to run an affair for the benefit of the national organization. Fifty per cent. of the proceeds will go to the national office, 25 to themselves and 25 to the city organization of Philadelphia.

The comrades in Aberdeen, Wash., keep steadily at the work of organization. They say their organization will be second to none in a short time. Chicago informs us that their dance and entertainment held on March 11 was a "success morally and financially."

The March-April issue of the Young Worker is just off the press. We know the distribution of this issue will proceed rapidly, and the only danger is that enough copies have not been printed, [illegible]

Lenin's Illness

The "incurable disease" from which Lenin is said to be suffering and to which the capitalist press has devoted so much space lately is apparently nothing more or less than the "horrible virus of Bolshevism" against which the Allies erected the famous "sanitary cordon" of buffer states with the result that in isolating Russia they have very nearly ruined themselves.

If Lenin and other Communist leaders could only be cured of this disease, which impels them to work for the destruction of capitalism, how happy the plunderbund would be. The next best thing of course is for the victims of this disease to die; the hope being that the Soviet government would collapse. This hope grows rather dim, however, with the increasing knowledge that Russian policies are framed and Russian affairs managed by an organization—the Communist party—in which the individual counts for less than in any organization ever constructed.

The death of Lenin would be a calamity, but it would not be the calamity for Russia that the death of Lloyd George would be for the imperialists of England for instance. The success of the Russian revolution does not depend upon any individual but upon organization.

Lenin, however, is not even seriously ill. He is tired and so is every other active worker in Russia. He is weak and so is Russia, but they are not any weaker than the capitalist system is.

He's Out Again

"Bill" Burns, the Hawkshaw Detective of the Harding administration at Washington, D. C., just can't keep out of the newspapers.

The man who caught "Lindenfeldt" is back again in the public eye with the declaration that radical activities in this country have increased greatly within the last year or two.

He is said to have made this "startling admission" to a congressional sub-committee, blaming the growth of the radical movement on the Russian Soviet Government, on the prevailing unemployment and on prohibition. He supported department of justice legislation to head off this terrible increase in "red" activities.

We invite "Bill" Burns to become a regular subscriber to THE WORKER. He will find in its columns just what is going on in the revolutionary struggle in this country, the progress it is making, and the reasons for its growth.

But that would be too simple for sleuths of the type that the United States government puts at the head of its Bureau of Investigation.

Sleuths must have MYSTERY, and there is no mystery in a publication that circulates openly thru the mails. And with the mystery gone, someone might begin to question the advisability of keeping Burns on the job. And far be it from us to rob any [illegible] of his daily bread.

Larkin's Release Held Up

Governor Miller, of New York, has refused to liberate Jim Larkin, declaring such action is premature pending an appeal to a higher court.

Alexander I. Rorke, the Assistant District Attorney who prosecuted Larkin, declares, in a letter to the governor, that:

> "It may well be that, even considering the crime he committed and for which he has been convicted, he has served a sufficient time in prison to accomplish the purpose of his imprisonment. If this be the case, I see no serious objection to commuting his sentence AND TO GRANTING LIBERTY TO HIM AND LIKEWISE TO ALL THE OTHER DEFENDANTS."

There we have two conflicting attitudes towards the release of the Communist prisoners, because what holds true for Larkin is also true of the others. The governor wants to wait on the higher courts. The prosecuting attorney doesn't mention this phase of the case. He is only worried whether the prisoners have been punished sufficiently.

It is clear that the state officialdom is planning some action. It realizes that working-class expression is on the move and demanding the release of Larkin, Ruthenberg, Gitlow, Ferguson, Winitzky and the others.

In those hours when he has time for reflection, the conscience of the prosecuting attorney must bother him. In his letter to the governor he says:

> "I have been informed that the leaders of the general strike in Winnipeg, Canada, which took place in 1916, resulting in riots, destruction of property and bloodshed, were given their liberty by the Canadian authorities after a year's imprisonment.
> "The Left Wing Manifesto cited the Winnipeg general strike as the proper method to be pursued by the proletariat of the United States to overthrow our government. The action of the Canadian government may possibly be a precedent."

There was, of course, no "riots, destruction of property and bloodshed" in the general strike that put Winnipeg into the hands of its workers, just as Seattle, for a time, was taken over by its working class.

But numerous of the strike officials were arrested, placed on trial, convicted and sent to prison. Canadian labor, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, stood by their spokesmen and they were soon released.

The case of Karl Liebknecht, who received only a few months sentence under the Kaiser, was often cited as comparison with the heavy punishment meted out to Eugene V. Debs.

The prosecuting attorney in the New York cases himself confesses the crime that was committed in sending the Communist prisoners to the bastiles of New York. They have already served a longer time than their Canadian comrades.

The New York prisoners were convicted for holding an opinion, for an idea, not for any act that they committed. The Canadian labor spokesmen went to prison for having taken an actual and prominent part in a great demonstration of the solidarity and power of labor.

The New York courts can, therefore, be construed as holding that it is more dangerous to think than it is to act.

The working class must insist on the right, not only to think for itself, but also to act for itself. It can safeguard that right to some extent by demanding and securing the immediate liberation of the Communist prisoners. If the governor of New York wants to know whether there is a demand on the part of labor for the release of its spokesmen, and that is evidently what he is waiting for, let that demand roll high and engulf the executive mansion at Albany.

Workers! Forward to the release of your prisoners. Forward with all your might.

And The World calls [illegible] staff that "Sammy" Gompers [illegible] whispering into the ears of the [illegible] many years, and that his friend [illegible] with for many a day. Lloyd George [illegible] lackeys, with their counterparts in other lands, [illegible] job for a rather long time, too. These [illegible] if The World and Emma Goldman are [illegible]. Let us turn to Monday.

MONDAY, MARCH [illegible]:

"Russian Revolution a Failure, Says Miss Goldman, and [illegible] by the Bolshevik Tyranny.

"Iron Hand of the Communist State Soon Began to Separate People from the Revolution, Which Was Their Own Work—Peace of Brest-Litovsk with Its 'Betrayal' of Russians Set Forth as First of All the [illegible]."

That ought to make Lenin, Trotsky and the Red Army lose sleep. The Peace of Brest-Litovsk was endorsed by the All-Russian Soviet at the time it was promulgated, and everyone seemed persuaded of its advisability. Now comes Miss Goldman! Her exception to the Treaty drives us all the more to its favor. We are inclined to the opinion that it saved the revolution. And that the workers and peasants stood by the Revolution is amply proven by the success with which it weathered the stormy months and years that followed Brest-Litovsk.

TUESDAY, MARCH 28:

"Russia's Peasants, Their Food Seized by the Bolsheviki, Turned Against Rule of Communism.

"'Forcible Collection,' Writes Emma Goldman, Another Cause Contributing to the Failure of the Russian Revolution—Abolition of the Co-operatives and Reduction of the Soviets to Mere Mouthpieces of the Government Other Factors in the Result."

Soviet Rule in Russia has adopted various measures in dealing with the peasants, the great mass of whom do not realize the full significance of the revolution. At first forcible collection of surplus foodstuffs was resorted to. It was absolutely necessary at the time, and the Goldman-World disclosures reveal nothing new. Later a tax in kind was levied, while at the present time free trade is permitted.

Miss Goldman's compilation for The World sounds like a repetition of the counter-revolutionary propaganda of the days that followed close upon the fall of the czar. So, too, the complaint against the "Dictatorship of the Communist Party" in Russia.

Thru Emma Goldman and The World the black flag of anarchism joins its folds with the black flag of capitalism to befuddle the minds of the workers. We shiver, fearful of the results! Three days of the Goldman-World exposures and the Russian Revolution still lives!

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29:

"Red Terror of the Cheka, Spy, Policeman, Judge, Executioner, Described by Miss Goldman.

"With Absolute Power of Life and Death, This Secret Organization, She Declares, Is Potent Factor in the Strangling of the Russian Revolution—'We Are the Representatives of Organized Terror,' She Quotes Its Chief as Saying—Its Violent Methods."

Another swat against the "Cheka," which might bring the famous words of Julius Caesar up to date and declare, "Et tu, Emma!"

Perhaps Miss Goldman will argue for the White Terror, as against the Red, in future installments. She has made a good beginning. In the meantime the Russian Revolution shows its stability by abolishing the "Cheka" and substituting other weapons in its place

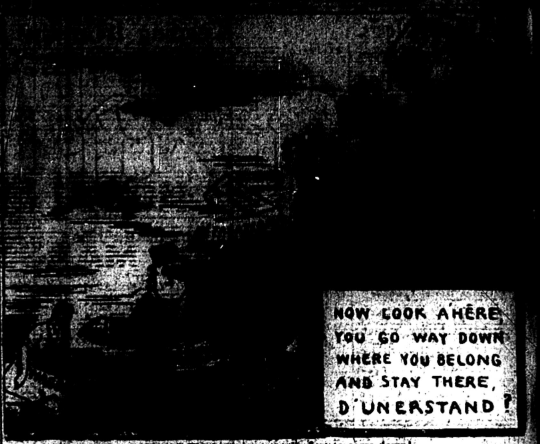
THURSDAY, MARCH 30:

"How Fares the Child in Russia? It Has Fallen into Evil Days, and Miss Goldman Tells Why.

"Crediting the Bolsheviki with Earnest Effort in Regard to Education, She Declares the Bureaucratic State Has Frustrated Best Work of the Communists—This Is Seen in System of 'Show' Schools, While in Others Children Are Ill-Fed as Well as Ill-Treated."

If there is anything that critics of Soviet Russia have been unanimous upon, it has been the opinion that the new day is dawning for the children in the Workers' Republic. But Miss Goldman must needs stand alone. That is where she will continue to stand as the Soviet Republic marches on to greater victories. The cause for which she claims to speak suffers as much as she by her alliance with the capitalist "World."

At this point we went to press, breathlessly awaiting the succeeding articles.



NOW LOOK AHERE YOU GO WAY DOWN WHERE YOU BELONG AND STAY THERE, D'UNERSTAND?

Wages! The last to go up, the first to come down!

Greetings to the Freiheit

This week the Communist movement in America, makes history with the appearance of the first issue of the "Freiheit" (Freedom), official organ of the Jewish Section of the Workers Party.

It is a great event when the working class launches a daily newspaper. It is an indication of virility, of life, of progress. It is proof that the struggle is moving forward to victory.

The appearance of the Freiheit is one of the big results achieved because of the unity brought about thru the launching of the Workers Party.

With the holding of the convention last Christmas the Jewish Section of the American Labor Alliance united with the Jewish Federation that had severed its relations with the Socialist Party and was then co-operating with the Workers' Council's groups. It was this unity that makes it possible to put out, at this time, a daily paper speaking for the most advanced section of the Jewish working class.

Freiheit will not only be compelled to struggle against the capitalist dailies in the Jewish language, but also compete with the organ of the yellow Socialists, the Forward, edited by Abraham Cahan, who supported the Russian revolution only as long as it asked for lip service.

Freiheit will speak boldly for the Jewish working class. It should win the unions in the needle trades for the American communist movement. It should be as a pillar of fire encouraging the English speaking workers to establish a daily of their own in the English language, probably the greatest need of the Communist movement in America today.

The unity of the revolutionary workers in this country under the Communist standards grows daily. Let it continue to grow until it triumphs over all obstacles, over all its enemies.

According to the very latest dope from the listening post held down by Gumshoe Bill Burns, as soon as you kick the soap-box from under a red he comes up thru a man-hole.

Bill also says that New York City is a fertile field for underground work because of its extensive subway system. The reds take advantage of the discontent caused by the congestion. Thus do the B. R. T. and the I. R. T. aid the social revolution.

Not to be outdone by his subordinate, Attorney-General Daugherty comes to bat with a proposal to do away with the civil service system. He says he would rather leave the selection of government employees to any "self-respecting committee," of either the Democrat or Republican party. This reminds us of the old recipe for rabbit soup. It begins: "First catch your rabbit."

Elections and Election Campaigns

By EMIL LYON

The Workers Party declares that the workers cannot achieve their emancipation from the oppression and exploitation of capitalism thru the election of a majority of the members of the legislative bodies of the capitalist government and its executive officers.

While the capitalist government is democratic in form, the realities of the workers' situation in this formal democracy makes the hope of winning the struggle against capitalism thru adherence to the forms of action prescribed by the capitalists for their own protection, an illusion.

Millions of workers in the United States are disfranchised under naturalization laws, hundreds of thousands who are citizens cannot vote because of residential qualifications which the necessities of earning a living do not permit them to comply with.

The capitalists control thousands of newspapers, thru which they form the ideas of the masses in their interests; they control the schools, the colleges, the pulpit, the moving picture theatres, all of which are part of the machinery for the protection of the capitalist system.

When it serves their purpose, the capitalists do not hesitate to expel members of legislative bodies elected by workingclass votes.

Even were it possible to elect a workingclass majority in the face of all impediments which the capitalists have raised against that possibility, the capitalists have already proven that they would not hesitate to use the military power of the capitalist state to suppress such a body.

While recognizing the hopelessness of elections as the means of winning the freedom of the workers, the Workers Party does not therefore refuse to participate in elections and election campaigns.

It will nominate candidates wherever possible and wage campaigns for their election.

It will use the election campaigns to expose the fraudulent character of capitalist democracy and for propaganda for the Soviets.

Its candidates, when elected to office, will use the forums of the legislative bodies for the same purpose.

INTERNATIONAL MEET

According to a Riga dispatch to the London Times, Leo. Kameneff announced at a Moscow Communist meeting, that a Conference of the three Internationals will take place in Berlin April 2. Kameneff is president of the Moscow soviet. He was formerly one of the heads of the Russian Trade Delegation at London.

The New York Times devotes one half column telling how Russian mail is being held up at Berlin thru fear of typhus contamination. It adds, however, that it is only being held up for disinfecting purposes. The capitalist press will never be able to disinfect the great example the workers of Russia are setting for enslaved labor in other lands to follow. That is really what is worrying "The Times." So it carries such stupid headlines as "Shun Russian Mail in Fear of Typhus," forgetting that its own columns carry a worse poison in that it kills the brains of men and women.

"I am sorry I cannot send more than two subs this time. All the readers of "THE WORKER" in this neck of the woods are well pleased with the same, and I surely think that with enough readers it will put a little fire [illegible] You will hear [illegible] Joe Crandall, [illegible]

STRIKE UNITES MINERS

Struggle with Coal Barons Brings Non-Unionists into Organization

An organization offensive in all the non-union fields is the big feature of the giant coal strike as we go to press. Small armies of organizers, taking their lives in their hands, working against the gun rule of state constabularies, imported thugs and guards, are bringing tens of thousands of new members into the United Mine Workers' organization, non-union miners that have never been reached before. This situation is especially true of Cossack-controlled non-union fields in Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

"Make the strike 100 per cent!" is the slogan of the miners' union, as heavy inroads are being made daily into non-union production.

Lawrence Dwyer, international executive board member for West Virginia, reports he took [illegible],000 new members into the union at one place, Sophia, with many new local unions being organized daily in the New River field, hitherto an impregnable fortress of the mine owners.

Dunne, Labor Editor of The Worker, Sees Strike Ranks Grow at Pittsburgh

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

Labor Editor of "The Worker"

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—The strike in this district has developed into an organization campaign on the part of the United Mine Workers. Dozens of organizers have been sent into the non-union districts, and the response of the non-union miners to the strike call has exceeded all expectations of those in charge of the campaign and has confounded the operators.

It is now evident that the tonnage figures from the non-union districts must be revised and that for some time at least production even in Fayette County, the heart of the non-union coking coal district, will be at a standstill.

This district, controlled by the Frick interests, has always resisted unionization, but the organization campaign has already closed the Gates, Edenborn, Ronco and Leckrone mines according to reports at district headquarters.

Frank Feeney, who worked under William Z. Foster during the steel strike, is heading a flying squad of organizers in Fayette County and the accessions to the ranks of the strikers are surprising even the most sanguine union men.

The Frick Company has offered a 20 per cent increase in the union rate to keep its men at work and has also fired 300 more coke ovens in an effort to combat the organization work.

The Oliver-Snyder Company has fired 200 additional ovens. The strikers claim that this is merely an attempt to give the impression of renewed activity, and that steam is being kept up at many mines where there are not enough men to operate the properties.

State troopers—the notorious Pennsylvania state constabulary—are patrolling the strike districts. Two hundred of them are in the Fayette County district and the operators have asked for additional detachments. The headquarters of the constabulary has issued a statement saying that no more troops can be spared for Fayette County at present.

In Greeneville County, Pa., a strong non-union field, 39 of the 45 mines are closed, and reports from the West Virginia district indicate that unlooked-for inroads have been made in all the non-union districts.

In the non-union Georges district in that state the miners have gone out almost to a man; operations in the New River and Winding Gulf district have also been suspended.

This is a 100 per cent strike as far as the unionized districts are concerned, and it is evident that the organization offensive of the United Mine Workers was something the operators had not counted on.

The political situation here is favorable to the miners as the death of Boies Penrose has left the politicians without leadership, and a bitter fight is in progress between the various factions.

None of the various groups contending for leadership are anxious to take the responsibility for turning loose the constabulary—regular and special—on the union miners.

To date there has been but little interference with the organizers of the United Mine Workers in the non-union districts; in Windber alone, where three organizers were arrested and deported, has there been any use of extra legal methods.

It is estimated that in this district are employed 150,000 miners, 45,000 are organized. The district headquarters of the United Mine Workers claims that on strike are 70,000

Genoa, Soviet Russia and the Proletariat

NOTE: Genoa, the "new hope" of world imperialism, is gathering unto itself the dollar diplomats of the world. Unlike Versailles, unlike the Washington Disarmament Conference, unlike any conference of the kind ever held in history, the workers of a great country will be represented thru their own government, the Russian Soviet Republic. The workers will for this reason alone keep a strict and interesting watch on the Genoa gathering. Under the title of "Genoa, Soviet Russia and the Proletariat," Wilhelm Koenen, the German Communist, writes of this conference for THE WORKER as follows.

By WILHELM KOENEN.

The severe crisis which makes itself felt in the drop of exports as well as of public revenues in the Allied countries, and in protracted unemployment, compels the Entente capitalists for profit's sake of course, to seek new markets for their goods and to establish profitable trade-relations.

Under such economic pressure, the Entente capitalists, headed by England, were compelled to call the Genoa conference.

The very fact that all the capitalist powers are "resigned" (even though under many sighs and groans) to negotiate officially with the Bolsheviki shows how heavily the frightful economic crisis weighs upon all the capitalist governments.

Hit By Unemployment

Western European as well as American capitalism is sorely in need of economic relations with the 150,000,000 Russians, firstly in order to increase its exports, and secondly in order to resume the exploitation of the unemployed masses, with whose taxes the empty government treasuries are to be refilled.

All of the leading Allied statesmen, particularly those of England and Italy, are agreed that there can be no talk of economic reconstruction without first opening the Russian market and raw-material resources.

Up to the present, the world revolution could only maintain one strong outpost—the Soviet Power in

SUPPORT THE COAL MINERS

Every member of the Workers Party is pledged to support the coal miners in their strike. District Six, Ohio and West Virginia, of the party, was the first to respond. Over the far-flung battle lines of the coal strike, extending from coast to coast, and crossing both borders, Workers Party members will be active, in support of this titanic struggle. The Proclamation of the party in Ohio and West Virginia is published herewith:

The capitalists of America have again launched a vicious attack against the workers. This time it is the coal miners who are forced to fight for the life of their union.

The coal miners are now getting their reward for their patriotic work during the war. Their reward is the effort of the coal operators to destroy their organization, lower their wages and take away from them their hard-won conditions.

American capitalism greatly strengthened its position during the war and immediately after it. Thanks to the patient industry and self-denial of the workers, who thought they were serving the cause of "liberty and democracy," the conscienceless parasites on industry—the so-called owners—accumulated undreamed of profits.

Now they are using these profits as a war-chest with which to fight the workers and break the unions which the workers have built up by many years of struggle and sacrifice.

The capitalists have concentrated their power for a destructvie war against organized labor.

The coal strike is only an episode in this struggle; one battle in the war. The present conditions in the coal industry put the operators in a favorable position to fight the miners, and they are taking full advantage of the situation.

They did not throw their opportunities away as the miners did during the war. The coal miners were fooled by the talk about "democracy"; but the operators are not interested in democracy. That was only bunk for the workers to believe in.

The operators are bent upon the destruction of the miners' organization and the complete enslavement of the miners. The miners were persuaded not to fight during the war when conditions were all in their favor. Now they are COMPELLED to fight!

The passing of war-time "prosperity" brought a great decline in the coal market and took away the employment of thousands upon thousands of miners. It made full-time employment impossible for many

Communists Battling for United Front

By PAUL SCHUELER

(Special Cable to the Worker and New Yorker Volkszeitung.)

BERLIN, April 6.—The Conference Committee of the Three Internationals decided today to form an organization committee of nine, consisting of three members from each international to organise united mass demonstrations for Thursday, April 20. These demonstrations are called to protest against the exploitation of Soviet Russia that will be proposed at Genoa. At the same time these demonstrations shall be held in support of Soviet Russia and a united front of labor the world over. The question of unemployment will also be taken up at these demonstrations.

Spokesmen for the Third (Communist) International are putting up the struggle of their lives to secure a united front of the world's workers thru the Conference of the Internationals, 3rd, 2nd and 2½ now being held at Berlin.

With all the ardor and enthusiasm that they put forth to win the masses back from the jingoism into which they had been plunged by the world war, the representatives of the Third International are now exerting their efforts to create a united front in labor's world battle with the exploiters.

In this effort they are again face to face with the "Socialist" cabinet ministers and social patriots of the stripe of Emil Vandervelde, of the Second International, who argued that the Treaty of Versailles is not so bad."

The provocative utterances of Vandervelde forced the Communists to use clear, sharp words. Karl Radek answered.

"Vandervelde speaks of confidence," said Radek. "We declare here that we haven't a cent's worth of confidence in Vandervelde. He it was, who, in 1913, at Basle, Switzerland, thundered with his sweet voice against a war, and who was there threatening the bourgeoisie that the workers will not go to war.

"Yet, again, later, in 1914, it was he who was leading the working class into the war. Vandervelde is forgetting the streams of blood and the unheard of suffering which are charged to him. And such a person dares speak of conditions regarding confidence.

"Considering the terrible outlook confronting the working class, we are willing to forget the past and to convene with you around the same table. Not to battle with you about the dictatorship of the proletariat, but to fight for a bit of bread for the workers. Therefore, we requested a conference of deeds and not of words.

"Vandervelde speaks with a heart full of love for suppressed peoples, not in the Belgian colonies, but in the Ukraine and Georgia.

"We can easily reply to you. The Ukraine is fighting together with Russia for Soviet power. As to Georgia, Vandervelde should first

Reaction Is Beaten Again in Chicago

By CARL HAESSLER

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press and The Worker)

CHICAGO. — Reaffirming by a vote of 103 to 14 its action in favor of amalgamation of craft unions, the Chicago Federation of Labor at its regular meeting Sunday again went overwhelmingly on record for a conference of the international unions to be called by the American Federation of Labor "for the purpose of arranging to amalgamate all the unions in the respective industries into single organizations, each of which shall cover an industry."

The indorsement two weeks earlier had been carried by 113 to 37.

The action reindorsing its position on amalgamation came as a result of resolutions by two locals of the electrical workers, who had threatened to withdraw from the central body if dissensions were to be sown by spreading "one big union propaganda." They urged that the Chicago Federation of Labor should devote itself to creating harmony among craft unions.

The resolutions of the electrical workers were first concurred in on the ground that the creation of harmony was a prime purpose of the central body and on the ground that each affiliated body had the right to express itself on any question.

That having been made clear, the resolution from the floor reiterating the stand for amalgamation was passed by an even greater majority than the original indorsement.

Violent debate raged over the advocacy of industrial unionism.

Secretary Ed. Nockels denounced the Chicago Tribune for having caused confusion in the minds of trade unionists by falsely reporting the Federation's action as in favor of the One Big Union and of I. W. W.ism. He pointed out that amalgamation would wipe out jurisdictional disputes, "the curse of labor."

Charges that amalgamation was opposed by certain union officials who might lose good jobs alternated with assertions that amalgamation would disrupt the ranks of labor.

The fight against the amalgamation resolution was led by Vice-President Oscar Nelson, who acknowledged that he was in part responsible for the interpretation placed on the resolution of the electrical workers. He attacked the Trade Union Educational League and its organ The Labor Herald for their advocacy of industrial unionism.

Delegates favoring amalgamation pointed out that the A. F. of L. recognized and dealt with industrial unions, notably the United Mine Workers of America, the brewery workers and the bakery workers.

President John Fitzpatrick recalled the position of leadership in American labor assumed in past years by the Chicago Federation of Labor.

"Who it is objects to amalgamation of craft unions?" he asked, and answered — "The Chicago Tribune. The day of craft unions is dead and gone."

The Rev. Richard Hogue, executive secretary, Church League of Industrial Democracy, was given the floor earlier in the session. His organization had inserted a half-page advertisement in the Chicago Tribune calling for justice to labor and demanding that the organized selfishness of the wealthy reactionaries now dominating the destiny of the country be fought.

"I had not been in Chicago 24 hours," said Hogue, "before I began to suspect the citizens committee. Reaction is triumphant and wants to keep labor divided. The exploitation of labor by the employers today is worse even than it was in the days of the Roman empire."

The Sign Painters, who have refused to handle any work for the so-called citizens committee, asked the executive board to request similar action by the bill-posters, so that the anti-labor propaganda of the committee could not make headway.

The support of all trade unionists was asked for the labor demonstration to be held at the Municipal pier April 29th. A parade of 200,000 workers is being planned.

Will Organized Railroad Workers Haul Scab Coal?

Here is the appeal of the Workers Party to the Railroad Workers to come to the aid of their comrades in the mining industry now on strike:

ONE of the greatest labor struggles this country has ever witnessed is on. In defiance of the [illegible] attempts of the [illegible] to annihilate their union, and establish the SCAB SHOP, the organized mine workers have struck. They have been pledged the moral support of the labor movement at large; but as yet, the railroad workers are hauling coal. This is a serious situation.

From an industry which takes a toll of thousands of lives each year, where most of the work is performed under conditions which are a constant threat to their lives, and has nothing to offer but hard work and starvation wages, the miners have come out in battle array. Every man standing solid shoulder to shoulder a display of solidarity hardly equalled before in the history of labor.

Untold sacrifices have marked the miners struggle to relieve the inhuman slavery and exploitation which has been their lot for years. The coal valleys of this country bear the scars of these battles. Miners and their families have been killed in cold blood by private gunmen armies of the coal operators and even by state and federal troops, in an effort to prevent them from organizing and improving their miserable conditions. Thousands of them have been deprived of the right to labor the biggest part of the year. They now demand a regulation of working hours that will provide, at least, a meager livelihood for all of them. They are even willing to try to subsist for another period on the present small scale of wages. The coal operators refuse to listen. They refuse to even consider a new agreement.

The lust for power, and the fathomless greed for more profit, of the employing class have brought about a closely bound unity between their forces in a huge combination bent upon the complete destruction of all working-class organizations. Their glaring display of ruthless cynicism cannot escape the attention of any thinking working man or woman. In a reckless determination, they have struck at the vitals of labors' forces with a deadly effect.

Are the workers ready to meet these onslaughts with a united front?

The unions are bending beneath these heavy blows. One by one have given way. The police, the courts, the military and the newspapers,—all the forces at the disposal of the capitalist class, have been mobilized and are ready to strike the final blow in this destructive campaign.

The miners union is one of the strongest and most militant organizations of this country. A defeat of the miners in this struggle will be a smashing blow to the railroad unions and the whole labor movement. Every pound of coal mined at this particular time, means to help bring about such defeat. Every pound of coal hauled by railroad workers means an aid to the attempts of capitalism to destroy the miners union. Every pound of coal hauled is thus a blow to the RAILROAD UNIONS also. This is true just as every pound of coal supplied to scab railroad workers during a railroad strike would help to defeat the railroad workers. Railroad union men must face this fact and find ways of strengthening instead of destroying one another.

Now is the time for labor to stand together. Every railroad workers' union should be stirred from top to bottom on this issue. All militants should take this question up in their local unions and demand consideration, it is a vital question that cannot and must not be shirked. Every railroad workers' union of the country should rally to the assistance of the miners, not only by giving lip services in the form of sympathy and moral support but in the form of rendering active assistance. This is a supreme test in the struggle between capital and labor, which the workers can face victoriously only when united. The railroad workers should refuse to haul coal during the miners strike. They should refuse to become a party to help defeat the miners strike and destroy their union.

In this crisis, the working class must stand united and fight together against the common foe. Our ranks must become unified. The solidarity of labor must be complete, or we will be doomed to destruction.

Minneapolis Labor Backs Chicago Workers' Stand for Amalgamating Unions

MINNEAPOLIS. — Amalgamation of all American Federation of Labor craft unions into one industrial union for each industry is asked by the Minneapolis Trades and Labor assembly, in a resolution which carried by a two to one vote. Similar action was taken recently by the Chicago Federation of Labor.

The A. F. of L. is requested to take steps to bring about the amalgamation by calling a conference of the international unions.

Renewed war on dual unions which divert membership from the regular trade unions and place it in unaffiliated "one big unions" is declared in the resolution, which points out that the forces of labor have been split in the past by such withdrawals of membership.

The Class Struggle

The struggle in capitalist society between capitalists and workers is a class struggle.

The capitalist system, in which a small group of exploiters own the machinery of production and carry on production to make profits, creates a sharp division of economic interests between these exploiters and the great working masses who must sell their labor power to the capitalists for wages.

The capitalists endeavor to secure greater profits from industry while the workers struggle to improve their life thru forcing the capitalists to pay higher wages and to grant better working conditions.

The struggle which ensues finds expression in strikes, lockouts, boycotts, clubbing and beating of the workers and in such open, violent struggles as that which recently took place in West Virginia.

The history of the past 40 years in the United States is a history of a succession of such struggles, increasing in bitterness.

Pullman, Homestead, McKees Rocks, Lawrence, Ludlow, Colo., Messaba Range, the Steel Strike of 1919, the Miners' Strike of the same year, are but outstanding incidents in the class struggle which is being fought daily in every industrial centre of this country.

This conflict of classes cannot be harmonized nor compromised while the capitalist system lasts. It can only be ended thru the abolition of the capitalist system. To attain this goal the Workers Party seeks to unite and organize the workers.

see to it that England punishes her generals who have murdered numerous Georgian communists.

"We are ready to present to the next congress of the three internationals documents that will convince you of the cruelties of the British against the workers of Georgia and the treacherous role of the Mensheviki.

"As to the social-revolutionists in prison. We are willing to exchange them for the Communists in German prisons.

"How dare you attack us when the Second International has the blood of 15,000 proletarians upon its conscience!

"We will never forgive you the blood of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg. No confidence to those who betrayed the proletariat so outrageously. Our actions will prove who is sincere in attending this conference of the three internationals and who only use phrases."

J. Ramsay MacDonald, of the British Independent Labor Party, joined Vandervelde in his attack on the Russian Communists. His provocative attitude nearly caused a break in the conference, and would have done so, had it not been for the soothing words of Serrati, of the Italian Socialist Party.

"Of all the terrible tragedies of the international proletariat," said Radek, in his second speech, "MacDonald can only see the tragedy of the Russian social-revolutionists who aided the Russian reactionaries against the Bolsheviki, thereby supporting the world reaction.

"The workers in foreign lands will understand and comprehend the Russian revolution only when they themselves will go thru their own.

"We did split the workers' movement. This split, however, was to us a means and not the goal. Already, at the Second Congress of the Third International, it was decided to stop these splits.

"Soviet Russia is willing to let you have as many representatives as you wish at the trial of the social-revolutionists. We would even permit Vandervelde to take up their defense. Of course, we will then expose his past in clear words.

"We also agree to the appointment of a commission to solve the Georgian problem."

Nuorteva Sends Letter to His Wife Here, Says He's Free, All's Well

The Finnish daily, "Eteenpäin," publishes the following:

"A cable from Russia was published in our paper stating that Santeri Nuorteva had been released from the prison where he was held on unknown charges about ten months, is now finally confirmed. This telegram caused much doubt in the press, and yellow socialist publications have claimed that the report was untrue.

"In a letter to his wife in New York City Nuorteva states that he was released January 27.

"The letter deals mostly with family matters. Nuorteva has been in prison about ten months. In his letter Nuorteva expresses his deep confidence in the Soviet Government, stating that all the time he has been assured that the intrigues that his enemies had woven against him would finally fail.

"The letter shows that in every respect he is assured that the charges against him were not brought by the Soviet Government but by different individual groups. Nuorteva believes that the government worked energetically for his release, finally securing his acquittal.

"Nuorteva is living in Moscow. He points out that there are certain formalities to be performed before his case is finally settled. This will take a few days. This lamentable case will then be finally dismissed.

"Nuorteva continues in his letter as follows: 'I feel an unspeakable joy now when, after ten months of unspeakable sorrow, wondering, suffering and even despair, everything is ending better than I could expect. I am not guilty of anything, not even the minutest disloyalty, and all this is now finally clearing.' . . .

"'Finally, all that awful flood of lies, base-minded rumors, intrigues of our enemies, the misunderstandings and peculiar coincidences which I was compelled to go thru is the most severe test that perhaps anybody else has gone thru.'

"We have already stated that in Nuorteva's imprisonment there must be lamentable mistakes, for we have known that Nuorteva is not a traitor, as low-minded persons have stated. We are glad of it that this case will result in the acquittal of Nuorteva and in the correction of the lamentable incident connected with this case."

Support the Coal Miners!

[illegible] THE OPEN SHOP—THE AMERICAN PLAN [illegible]

A defeat for the miners would be a defeat for all the workers. It would bring them face to face with still more difficult struggles. One of their strongholds would be lost. The position of the enemy would be strengthened.

The railroaders, who already have been forced to retreat from their war-time position, would be next in line for a frontal attack.

A victory over the coal miners would stimulate the capitalists to press their union-wrecking campaign with renewed vigor. Every worker will feel the blows dealt to the miners during this struggle.

District No. 6, of the Workers Party, including Ohio and West Virginia, assembled in convention at Cleveland, fully realizes the importance of the situation and the seriousness of the consequences that will follow if the resistance of the workers is crushed.

Separate industries and individual organizations cannot put up sufficient force against the attack by the powerful capitalist corporations. The struggle of the miners is the concern of the entire working-class.

The Workers Party urges the miners to fight to the bitter end. We call upon all workers, organized and unorganized, to support the miners wholeheartedly, with every means at their command.

The workers should seriously consider the question of a general sympathetic strike to help the miners.

We again call upon the workers to realize and remember that this is a class struggle.

The workers organization in separate industries, one by one, are being singled out by the capitalist for attack, in order to defeat the workers without too much effort and to avoid he resistance of a united working class.

The workers must be reminded of one thing—whatever differences you may have concerning political and other questions, you have one common interest as workers.

When your wages are reduced, your organization destroyed, your standard of living lowered, the working class as a whole must stand the consequences. There is no such thing as one trade or industry standing alone. The workers as a class stand or fall together.

The Convention of the Workers Party of this district, where there are large masses of workers engaged in the coal mining industry, pledges its whole-hearted support to the embattled coal miners.

The Party will send special organizers into the coal fields to carry the message of the class struggle which is the only platform upon which the miners can stand and fight successfully.

It will appeal to all workers, organized and unorganized, to rally to the cause of the miners and support them in their struggle, which is the struggle of all workers. It will spare no effort to turn the opinion of the working class favorably towards the miners strike.

British Laborites' Conflicting Opinions

By ALEXANDER TRACHTENBERG

Progressive Laborites in America are looking to the British labor movement for guidance and inspiration. The parliamentary success of the Labor Party has particularly attracted the attention of those who would have organized labor in America enter into political activity. As a result of this interest, literature on the British movement has become very popular among the progressive labor elements in this country.

It is this interest that is probably responsible for the simultaneous publication of three volumes dealing practically with the same phase of the British labor movement but approaching it from mutually antagonistic points of view.

One of the authors is W. A. Appleton, Secretary of the General Federation of Trade Unions. When Samuel Gompers says in his introduction to Appleton's book, (What We Want and Where We Are, Doran, $1.50) that "on matters of trade unionism Mr. Appleton is probably more nearly American than any other British trade union official," we need no further introduction to the author or to his work.

Like Gompers, Appleton worships at the shrine of class collaboration. "I have never accepted the assertion that Capital and Labor are essentially antagonistic," says this labor leader and "proves it" by referring to England which "already enjoys social and political democracy."

When Gompers went to Europe, Appleton was his only solace, for even the conservative labor leaders appeared to him as revolutionists. Their interest in politics ruffled him. Appleton is, on the other hand, a staunch believer in the ancient A. F. of L. adage, "No politics in the unions," which, as everyone knows, was always used as an excuse for peddling labor votes to capitalist parties.

The close affinity between these two leaders is also disclosed in the economic beliefs which they both entertain. The British Gompers holds, too, that "A fair day's wage for a fair day's work" is all towhich trade unionists should aspire.

The leaders of the British Labor Party appear as terrible revolutionists to Appleton, who dreads the idea of that party coming into power. If England, should go Soviet, the author wants to reserve the right "to seek another country." Mr. Appleton's abhorrence of Soviet rule must be great, indeed, judging by his patriotic fervor during the war or by the statement that everybody would be willing "to die for the Homeland, for its Dominions, for its Dependencies, or for its honor," if the army were only democratized a little and the wages paid to the soldiers were a bit higher.

At present the temper of official British Labor is not revolutionary. Its leadership is in the main moderate. But even in this atmosphere Appleton is an anachronism and no one, except Gompers, takes him very seriously.

One gains relief as well as new hope by turning to Robert Williams' book (The New Labor Outlook, Seltzer, $1.75). His appeal to the workers is frankly revolutionary. The mere idea of "a fair day's wage for a fair day's work" is repugnant to him.

The change which has been brought about by the war and the Russian Revolution have convinced the author, who is the secretary of the militant Transport Workers' Federation, that "Labor must turn to industrial or direct action," instead of constitutional means in order to achieve its aims. He believes, furthermore, that the workers are anxious for results now, and that with proper revolutionary education and training they could attain these results. He expresses this thought in the following manner: "Not some day—social reconstruction; not fitfy years hence—amelioration of wage slavery; not high-sounding phrasemongery; not revolution by easy, gradual and imperceptible acretions of social reform, but to-day, right now, Socialism or Communism."

Williams declares himself a believer in the principles of proletarian dictatorship and Soviet rule. He accepts the leadership of the Third International, characterizing its predecessot as having been "built not upon the impregnable rock of international working-class solidarity, but upon the shifting sands of political exigency and parliamentary expediency."

The book is full of valuable historical material showing the development of the "new labor outlook" among the British workers. The author took a prominent part in all the important labor events and his accounts should prove of interes every student of the internationa bor movement.

Williams has, however, not sq ed his beliefs as expressed in h book with his actions as official of th late Triple Alliance, when the Briti miners expected their allies, the rail way and transport workers, to com to their aid during the struggle la year. The day of the failure of th Triple Alliance to act is recorded British labor history as Black Fr day and, according to our next Brit ish author, the much-heralded lab entente has been referred to since the "Criple Alliance."

Shaw Desmond's book (Labour— The Giant with Feet of Clay, Scri ner's Sons, $3.50) is a study in pe simism and renunciation.

Altho affiliated with the Britis labor movement since 1906, th author has come to look upon it various manifestations as worthles and even harmful from the soci point of view. He derides both in dustrial and political action, believ ing that education alone is necessar to bring about the New Democrac which he has substituted for Social ism.

The class struggle is denied an instead there is offered the follow ing bit of social philosophy: "Me and women are separated, not b class, not by economic position, bu by ideal and goal, for the New De mocracy will draw its adherent from all classes."

The book is full of gossip of peo ple and events, some of which ma be valuable, if true.

All Together, Comrades! Stand By the Miners! Workers Party Appeal

Following the Convention of District No. 6, Workers Party, Ohio and West Virginia, the District Organizer, Charles Baker, sent out the following encouraging declaration to the membership thruout the district.

COMRADES:—The first convention of District No. 6, Workers Party, attended by 31 delegates, representing nearly all sections of the district, was held recently at Akron, Ohio.

No attempt will be made at this time to outline the work done by this convention, for the district office is busily engaged in the work of the party during the present coal miners' strike. A full and complete report of the convention, with resolutions, etc., will be sent to all party branches in the course of a few days.

The all-important question, that must command the attention of the entire party at this time, is the present miners' strike, for if we are really a Workers Party we must take our place side by side with the embattled coal miners in this their greatest struggle.

By the time that you receive this letter, one of our comrades will be among the miners of Belmont Co. spreading the inspiring message of Hope and Solidarity. Within a few days, another speaker will enter the coal fields of eastern Ohio. The printing press is now busy grinding out thousands of leaflets which will carry the Workers Party message into the mining camps of this district.

We must not only assist the fighting miners on the scene of battle, in this their life-and-death struggle, but we must do our part in molding public sentiment in every industrial city. Before the passing of another week, the lieing capitalist press, true to form, will begin their campaign of publicity against the miners. From the intellectual prostitutes will come the venom of the master-class. WE MUST STRIKE NOW! As a Workers Party, we must realize our duty and waste no time in molding public opinion favorable to the miners.

With this in mind, no time is being wasted. Tho the District Office is without a single dollar, dollars shall not stand between us and our duty to the miners. Thousands of leaflets will go forth by the end of the week. Your Local or Branch will receive some for distribution in your city. If you need more, order at once.

The Workers Party of this District will not stop in its work with the distribution of these leaflets, but speakers will be kept on the scene of battle, during the entire struggle, there to enthuse and inspire the miners with the message of Hope and Encouragement.

We are not waiting for you to order these leaflets; that would mean a loss of time, and there is no time to lose. You are not asked to pay in advance, but your local is expected to set the party machinery into motion at once and make it possible for the District Office to carry out the program adopted at the District Convention.

Send your contribution to the District Office to assist the miners in their struggle.

All together, Comrades!
Stand by the Miners!

Yours for a "United Front" now,
Charles Baker,
District Organizer.

Real Vacation for Mine Mules Result of Strike

Take heed, all you workers, proud of your place under the capitalist system. Take heed of this story of "The Strike and Mule." In the midst of the daily account of the coal miners' strike we find this paragraph:

"With burlap shades over their eyes, thousands of mine mules in Western Pennsylvania, thrown into idleness by the coal strike, have emerged from the pits to begin vacations on the pastures of the coal companies and on neighboring farms. Hoisted up the shafts from underground stables, most of the animals are seeing daylight for the first time in months."

While the strikers are being driven from their company-owned homes, while they are being starved with their families, because there is no Saturday night pay envelope, let them ponder over the tender care the mine owners give the despised mule. Think it over.

Imperialism is trying to capitalize the death of Ex-Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary by turning his funeral into a huge spectacle to arouse any latent nationalism among the common people. The old order refuses to give up as long as there is a single ray of hope. All the more reason to hasten the day of the Soviet Republic of Europe, and with its coming the elimination of all monarchist aspirations.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

Our Victory Already Won

In last week's issue of The Worker we carried the headline, "Coal Barons Will Lose." Some of our readers, with their eyes and thoughts on the immediate struggle, thought that the headline was premature.

The coal miners won an historic victory, and the coal barons suffered their most signal defeat the minute that the 600,000 mine workers came out on strike Friday night, March 31.

It was a Black Friday for American capitalism. It was a Red Friday for American labor. For the first time in the history of the coal industry, the mine workers acted as a unit.

The day of separate strikes, of separate agreements and separate defeats was crowded into the yesterdays, with things past and gone. The new day of united effort, of the solid front was ushered in.

That is the victory won. That is the glorious triumph already achieved. But greater struggles are ahead. The organization strength of the exploiters is still several leaps ahead of the solidarity so far achieved by the workers.

The United States Steel Corporation, Standard Oil and other allied interests, dominating the mine owners of Western Pennsylvania and Southern Ohio, are directly responsible for the national suspension of coal mining, John Moore, of the United Mine Workers, told the House Committee on Labor last week. Moore comes from Ohio, and he has a hard time seeing beyond the confines of his own state.

The steel trust, the oil trust, the railroads and the banking interests form a solid block, nationally, against the coal miners.

The mine workers have neither the active support of the poorly organized steel workers nor the well-organized railroad workers. They are alone in fighting the closely knit forces of American capitalism.

We have seen the British Triple-Alliance, in its beginnings, working ineffectively to be sure, retreating at the crucial moment when a big advance was needed, but unity under its standards was attempted, nevertheless, of the forces of the miners, railroaders and transport workers.

The struggle of the united coal miners against the combined forces of capitalism will force new and more effective alliances of American labor, an alliance of the miners, railroad workers, steel workers and transport workers, not on paper but in action.

That is the reason the "Coal Barons Will Lose." They have already lost by forcing a nation-wide suspension in the coal industry. The miners know that organized capitalism, supported by the capitalist state at Washington, is against them. In reply, they are to-day throwing their whole strength into the struggle. Whatever the result of this conflict, the coal miners will ultimately be calling all labor to their aid, a united front of labor against the united front of capitalism.

Thus we are hastening toward the final conflict, that can have but one outcome, the sweeping away of the present social system, built on the backs of enslaved wage labor, and the substitution for it of a free Communist society, where no subject class will be driven under the slave whip of a tyrannous ruling class, but where all classes will be abolished and all men and women given an opportunity to freely develop and really enjoy life for the first time in all history.

Economic Determinism in Action

"It is high time to get rid of all mistaken opinions about the use of U-boats by Germany. The U-boat war was completely justified and to say the contrary is not only false but makes for us from the military standpoint a view that is thoroughly incorrect. It is furthermore time to get rid of the belief that the employment of the U-boats by the Germans was not in accordance with the usages of the international laws of warfare. This mistaken view, which was widely spread during the war, is capable of doing great damage to our national defense in the future. From this more elevated point of view it must be recognized without reserve that the German war-leaders had every right on their side when they employed the U-boat to the achievement of their naval victory . . . . . After all it must be recognized that the employment of the U-boat as a decisive factor in the late world war, was carried out in a manner that was thoroughly correct."

No, comrades, the above is not an extract from a Hearst editorial. It is a quotation from a recent issue of "The Revue Militaire," the official organ of the French Ministry of Marine.

Remembering the horror with which the German submarine campaign was greeted by the righteous propagandists of Allied imperialism, does it seem a little strange that we should now see it justified from so strange a source?

There is nothing strange about it if we only remember that national ideologies are the result of national necessities—or rather the necessities of national exploiting classes. It is the need and the method of fullfiling the need that determines the mental attitude toward all questions including that of mass-murder of unarmed passengers on the high seas.

France and Great Britain have come to the parting of the ways. France has taken the place of Germany as the imperialistic power on the continent. Tho nominally her ally Great Britain is actually her enemy.

The submarine is the most effective weapon against the sea-power of Great Britain. The submarine therefore becomes for the French militarists a weapon whose use can be justified on high moral grounds.

This is economic determinism—the theory by which revolutionists explain the acts of individuals and groups.

Muddle-headed individuals explain them by the weather, the influence of the devil or the innate perversity of human nature.

Amnesty and May Day

The newly formed Amnesty Alliance for New York State Political Prisoners, announces that plans are well under way for a great May Day demonstration for all Class War Prisoners.

Co-operating in this manifestation of labor's solidarity, are the following organizations: The Italian Chamber of Labor, National Defense Committee, Italian Defense Committee, Socialist Party, Local Bronx, United Labor Council, United Toilers of America, Workers' Defense Union, and the Workers Party.

The outstanding feature of May Day, 1922, is that practically every element in the labor movement is represented and has agreed to co-operate on the one common platform, "Free All Political Prisoners!"

Those who are not represented we urge to co-operate in making this one clear-cut issue. Counter demonstrations will weaken all our effectiveness. A united front on one common ground is the only way to aid these men.

The Alliance has received a letter from Eugene V. Debs in which he says, "If I were only well enough, I would be on the Platform in behalf of these shamefully persecuted and outraged comrades of ours whose loyalty to the working class keeps them imprisoned and treated as felons. As soon as my physical strength is sufficiently restored, I shall be only too glad to help you in your work in every way in my power."

Patrick J. McClellan, chairman of the arrangement committee, announces that committees are visiting unions, and speakers in all languages are being recruited for this work. The Amnesty Alliance meets every Thursday evening at Casino Hall, 85 East 4th Street, City. All unions, political parties and labor groups are requested to send delegates at once.

Let us raise our voice on May Day in a ringing demand: "A United Front for the Liberation of ALL Political Prisoners!"

Russia. The [illegible] war [illegible] and [illegible] White Guard [illegible] in the North and in the South, in the West and in the East, and with untold sacrifices, it finally came out victor.

Pave Way for Transition.

Then, after the war-cries of the White Guards and Allied mercenaries had died down, and war-discipline also had to be eliminated from the economic life of Russia, and it became necessary to transform war production into peace-production, the Russian Bolsheviki were at once confronted with the difficult task of bringing the Russian industries, during this period of temporary peace, into contact with the outer world from which it had been cut off by the battlefronts.

In Germany, Austria and even in Italy the proletarian masses failed to seize and to hold fast the power that was already theirs; for this they are indebted to their reformist Social-Democratic leaders.

But Socialism or Communism cannot successfully be established in a limited territory. Even the theoreticians of the Internationals 2 and 2½ do not deny this. But even if Socialism cannot as yet be fully established, the prerequisites for Communism can nevertheless be created and under proletarian rule, the way can be paved for the transition to Socialism.

But the greatest and most important task of the Bolsheviki and of the Communist International at present is to protect and with all the means at their disposal to maintain the vanguard of the world-revolution—the Soviet Power in the first proletarian state of the world.

Strings to Concessions.

The concessions which the slow, drawn-out course of the world revolution compel the proletarian state to make to the economic forces still in existence and surrounding it, must always be examined from two sides.

The concessions must be such that they acquire for Russian economic life that which it has not or cannot by itself acquire; on the other hand, they must bind the enemy forces by agreements or active participation, and ward off the enemies of the Soviet Power, who might otherwise become a real danger to the safety of the proletarian dictatorship in Russia.

It is for this double purpose that the Soviet Government brought some relief to the peasants by introducing the tax-in-kind, and that it again left the smaller industries and some branches of the manufacturing industries to free trade, while it fortified itself as a proletarian state-power more and more upon the centralized traffic system, nationalized power resources, coal and naphta production and upon large-scale manufacturing industry which it also nationalized and with which the economic life is completely controlled.

And it is for the very same purpose that the Communists, as the rulers of Russia, agree to enter into negotiations with the capitalist world-pirates in Genoa or wherever else possible.

No Reason to Refuse.

Now is the time when they have no reason whatever for refusing to enter into negotiations, since the great economic world crisis compels the capitalists of all countries to supply the Russian market with goods and to "tolerate," for the time being, Russian conditions.

If the Soviet Power survives; it will have to be recognized; at first perhaps only de facto, but very soon officially.

But the degree in which Soviet Russia in its negotiations with the capitalist robbers will succeed in obtaining actual relief which it so urgently needs for its economic reconstruction, depends to a great extent upon the interference of the Western European proletariat.

England Prepares "Iron Ring."

The proletariat must perceive that the economic relief that Soviet Russia requires means the fortification of the only proletarian outpost of the world revolution.

But the proletariat must also be fully aware of the fact that now that war-cries have for the present died down, the Soviet Power is threatened not only by the famine catastrophe, but that a tight ring of capitalist forces of the whole world, if permitted around Soviet Russia's neck, could simply choke this first proletarian power.

The syndicate which England wants to form, and which is to unite all the European capitalists together with those of Japan for the exploitation of Soviet Russia, would be just such an iron ring of enslavement around the Soviet Power.

The proletariat of Europe must see to it that this iron ring be broken not only for Russia's sake but also for their own.

For, this syndicate is perhaps the only hope of the capitalists to alleviate the frightful economic crisis of the world and it may even help them to overcome the crisis altogether.

This could be accomplished only at the expense of the Russian and the Central and Western European proletariat. Thus the interests of Soviet Russia and those of the World proletariat coincide.

The Social Democrats Lie.

The Social Democrats therefore lie when they say that the tactics of the Communist proletariat in the Western countries are being dictated by the particular interests of Soviet Russia. The contrary is true. The strength or weakness of the international proletariat's actions is the final determinant of the policy of the Bolsheviki.

For, if the world-proletariat succeeds in rising in an energetic struggle against the exploiters of its own country, and if it succeeds in curbing its own capitalist forces, or even in overpowering them altogether, then it can and may count upon the direct or indirect aid of the Soviets, as long as the Communists are at the helm in Russia.

In the meanwhile it is necessary to make inner and outer concessions for the safety of the Soviet Power and in the interest of the revolutionary proletariat.

Let Your Voices Be Heard.

And in order that these concessions which are made for the safety of Soviet Russia may be as small as possible, and that the economic measures which shall be decided upon in Genoa may really work the salvation of Russia, the Western European proletariat must let itself be heard in an unmistakable manner.

The Worker—Its Staff—and You

By [illegible] ALLISON

NOTE TO WORKER READERS: We have just been handed [illegible] THE WORKER. We think it is necessary [illegible] for WORKER readers [illegible] Editors and Cartoonists— [illegible] ought to be, what it can [illegible]. That's why we have written these [illegible]. Each week we shall have something to say to our readers about the work of making THE WORKER [illegible] with a DAILY WORKER as our goal.

THE WORKER—an organ of revolutionary working-class [illegible]—a six-page weekly proletarian newspaper. These words to a certain extent describe THE WORKER. But to us, and we believe to you, they describe it in a limited and ineffective manner.

To us and our readers, THE WORKER is more, far more than these words say. To us it is a journal of information, an instrument of working-class education, a mouthpiece of the American revolutionary movement—and a WEAPON of the workers against the robber capitalist class of the United States. It is all these, even more than these. If we but use our organized power, THE WORKER becomes a DAILY WORKER, and a DAILY WORKER means a thousandfold increase in power for the workers against capitalism.

We think we speak for all our readers when we say THE WORKER can be, will be, ALL of these. We believe our readers are a unit with the personnel of THE WORKER in the desire to make THE WORKER an ever growing power in the greatest drama of human history, the present class war between exploited labor and robber capitalists.

Personalities—Plus

And now we are going to talk personalities. We think we are entitled to do so—because personalities of the right sort are worth talking about. And, in addition, when a workers' paper secures the services of the best proletarian talent, it is an event worth telling.

Take THE WORKER editors. There are none of more proven ability, of more revolutionary integrity, none who have rendered more valuable service to the American movement, and none who understand the American movement better than J. Louis Engdahl and William F. Dunne.

As editor of the Chicago Socialist, and as newspaper man of years of experience on capitalist papers, Comrade Engdahl stands as high as any in recognized ability as a journalist. Comrade Engdahl could serve the capitalist class with his valuable talents and experience if he chose to do so. That he chooses rather to serve the workers, to accept the pitiful wage the workers are able to pay, and to remain true to the ideals of the revolutionist, is a matter upon which we congratulate ourselves. THE WORKER staff is proud to count Comrade Engdahl as one of it.

And there's Bill Dunne. Not so well known in the East, but from Chicago to the Pacific the workers—and the capitalists—know Bill Dunne as a fighting worker who has learned the game of battle with blood-thirsty corporations, capitalist spies, thugs and hangmen. Bill Dunne, as Editor of the Butte Daily Bulletin, proved his ability as a proletarian newspaper man of the highest ability. Comrade Dunne knows how to make type talk the language of the fighting workers conscious of their rights—and with guts to take them. The capitalist class hasn't gold enough to tempt Bill Dunne from his daily grind of speaking and writing for THE WORKER.

If we are proud of our Editors, we are doubly proud of our cartoonists. ROBERT MINOR! Bob Minor grew up in Texas but has been travelling ever since. His travels once took him to Paris where he learned the technic of art. And now, wherever artists foregather, the name of Bob Minor is spoken in praise and appreciation. For no cartoonist in America draws with the power and understanding of proletarian problems as does Bob Minor. Comrade Minor doesn't have to starve on THE WORKER staff. The capitalist class would hold out many inducements (or what would be inducements to men of less revolutionary integrity) if Bob but chose to accept them. Yes, we are proud of having Comrade Minor on THE WORKER staff, for Comrade Minor can do three things exceptionally well—he can speak, he can write and he can draw daring pictures that thrill one's proletarian soul and make one see the nakedness of the class struggle—and the victory ahead.

ART YOUNG. Some say he's a humorist, but his is a humor that lays bare the workings of this exploiting system of slavery; that teaches the worker thru smiles and satire how the game of Master and Slave is played. Art Young occupies a unique place in the American revolutionary movement. That he chooses to place Humor and Satire upon the altar of revolutionary activity as his contribution to the cause of human emancipation is as distinct a service as it is unusual. True, he starves by it, but that is a small matter to a revolutionist who is also a humorist and an artist. We are as proud, as we believe our readers are glad, to have Comrade Young's contributions appear in THE WORKER.

These are the comrades whose efforts have made THE WORKER the best SIX-PAGE WEEKLY LABOR PAPER in the United States. We will boast that no working-class paper in the United States has such talent. And, thru the cooperation of our bundle agents and our subscription hustlers, THE WORKER is attaining the reputation it so well deserves—as the best proletarian weekly appearing in this country. We believe our readers appreciate THE WORKER enough to give it EXTRA support from now on. Combined efforts, yours and ours, will continue to keep THE WORKER IN THE FRONT RANKS—WILL EVENTUALLY MAKE THE WORKER A DAILY WORKER.

Next week we will introduce you to YOUR JOB as one of the workers who will help accomplish this task.

The Miners Are Out!

More than half a million coal diggers have downed tools and taken up the gage of battle with the Coal Barons—for food, for organization rights, for POWER. A stupendous phase of the CLASS WAR is being enacted in the American coal fields.

THE WORKER has sent William F. Dunne, its Labor Editor, into the heart of this conflict as its special representative to help the miners win and to report in The Worker the progress and meaning of the strike.

Textile Workers Have Struck!

Nearly 100,000 textile workers in New England have been driven from the mills by wage-cuts. The fight for living wages and unionism is on.

THE WORKER has sent Caleb Harrison to the textile battle front to help the workers form a United Front against their exploiters. He will take an active part in this momentous struggle and will report the strike in The Worker.

These two strikes are BIG EVENTS in the American class-struggle. They are pivotal points in the present phase of the class war between labor unionism and the Open Shop. They are worthy the attention of every worker.

That THE WORKER has placed its representatives in these war fronts means first hand, authentic reports of the struggles viewed from the class conscious worker's viewpoint.

As other phases of the class-struggle develop THE WORKER will have its special representatives on the ground. You will want the reports we will publish of these stirring times and events. You will want other workers to read these reports. You will want to know, and will want other workers to know the facts as they are. The best way to be sure you will do so, the best way to be sure other workers will do so, is to subscribe NOW and to get other workers to subscribe NOW for THE WORKER.

This is no criterion of the effectiveness of the strike, however, for it is significant that in the non-union districts it is the skilled and so-called "key-men" who are the first to quit and without whom production cannot be carried on.

In the unionized districts there has been no attempt as yet to resume operations; no strikebreakers have been imported and everything is very quiet and peaceful.

Many of the miners have gone into nearby cities, and if the strike was settled to-morrow it would take some time before capacity production could be resumed.

From a Reader's Note-Book

By J. B. SALUTSKY

With perfectly charming naiveté Mademoiselle Emma Goldman tells her readers of the New York World: "If only he (Peter Kropotkin) could have done something to help, to lessen the suffering, to bring the dictators of Russia to their senses. But he could not. He could not, like some of the old revolutionary guard, make common cause with the enemies of the revolution. Even had he found a way of having his protests published in the European press, the reactionaries would have used them against Russia. No, he could not do that."

But what the old master mind of the anarchists "could not do," gentle Emma Goldman did with delightful ease. Not being of the "old revolutionary guard," Emma Goldman has had no scruples to pour oil on the dying off fires of the anti-soviet forces of reaction. Or, did she realize that the world (not the World), would not overestimate the protestations of the anarchistic, drawing-room free-lancer? At any rate, those who have been easy marks for all sorts of self-appointed martyrs, prophets, master minds, saviors and the rest of the brood, will perhaps learn something even if Mademoiselle Goldman had not learned anything.

The N. Y. Globe has got pretty closely under the skin of Emma's argument. Our neighbor remarks: "Lenin acted on the conviction that the system could be improved by substituting his kind of government for the kind that had previously existed. Miss Goldman and other philosophical anarchists believe in order, but not in law. They think that people would be better if let alone—an opinion which the opponents of prohibition share with them to a certain extent."

Emma Goldman will find less fire in her system to take up the intensely human fight for free whiskey less, than she has given to her fight of denunciation of the Soviet Workers' Republic. And she will unquestionably find enough strength in her exaggerated anarchistic ego to accept prohibition rather than Communism. For prohibition even if drastically enforced merely adds another dollar or two on the price of the bottle, whereas the Communist prohibition of that old capitalistic drink (or drug)—that "free incentive" is dead in earnest. Communism enforced means comunism and Emma is not ready to give up her beloved liberty to live under capitalism and to capitalize the criticism of it.

The Globe thinks: "To expect Miss Goldman to enjoy Lenin's government was as preposterous as to expect her to enjoy the government of Sing Sing prison, and her condemnation of Lenin is worth about as much as would be her condemnation of Sing Sing Prison."

Right. No sensible person will protest the government of Sing Sing to the authorities of Sing Sing prison, who run the Sing Sing prison. And Emma is not protesting the Workers' Republic in Russia to the Workers of the world. She is doing what, in her own words, old Peter Kropotkin would not do. She is "making common cause with the enemies of the revolution." That she incidentally gets her reward for so lining up her "undaunted anarchistic, free spirit" with the world-wide counter-revolution is just a mere accident. You cannot serve Mammon without being duly rewarded. That is one of the beauties of the capitalist order, which Emma finds much preferable to the "Communist tyranny."

The crux of Emma's criticisms to sovietism and Lenin is, that Lenin has lived up to his principles. Lenin, tho a perfect gentleman, wouldn't charge Emma with the same.

Thirty intellectuals united in an effort to discover "Civilization in the United States." The result of their penetrating search, Messrs. Harcourt Brace and Co. offer to the market, in book form, for the trifling sum of $5.00. Considerable discount for those buying large quantities. But we fear it is not a bargain after all. For those intellectual brothers actually arrive at the conclusion that there "ain't no such animal!" as Civilization in the U. S. One of them thinks, even, that "America has a body, but not a soul." A terrible charge in face of Bill Bryan's fight against the theory of evolution and the success of G. Bernard Shaw's "Back to Methuselah." However, it is sad, but fact: America has a body, but no soul. And while that body is by no means a negligible quantity, none of the thirty explorers into Civilization on the North American Continent would be comedy with it. They are out for spirit, pure and 100 per cent. Yes, they feel rather blue about it all. And we don't blame them; one is bound to feel blue these days, unless he feels red. But this is just what they would just hate to feel.

DON'T BE A BONEHEAD!
A BONE
IN THE BACK'S
WORTH TWO IN THE HEAD

And Desmond Shaw of the British Labor Party recants in his latest book, The Giant with the feet of clay—

"We aimed at the belly to reach the soul of the crowd. Now the soul of the crowd has become the belly of the crowd! . . . There is no solution for labor unrest beyond the building up of human character—a slow process but the only process, and a solution which applies not only to the working man but to his employer. All other 'solutions' are snares and they prevent the real solution only wasting time and effort. And the character of Demos can only be built up by Demos himself."

Brother Desmond's complaint of the "Giant" having "feet of clay" may be right. But his lamentations against the "Soul of the crowd having become the belly of the crowd," merely betrays the fact that the feet of clay had been blessed with a head to match. The labor movement, if not boneheaded cannot "aim at the belly to reach the soul." It is to start with the human being in the worker to just bring together the soul and belly that the master skilfully managed to separate. It is [illegible] to the movement. [illegible] current of the [illegible]

Out with the Political Prisoners!

NOTE.—[illegible] so-called [illegible] Soviet Russia's [illegible] in the New York World [illegible] a similar [illegible] Workers' Republic. In [illegible] we are publishing an [illegible] "Out with the Political Prisoners," written by Paul [illegible] German Communist. It is as follows:—

By PAUL FROEHLICH

Soviet Russia also has prisons. And in these prisons there are political offenders, among them—"Socialists." There we find Social Revolutionaries who [illegible] bombs at Grand Dukes and chiefs of police.

To-day they are confined to the prisons of the proletariah state, because they wish to destroy the proletarian state with bombs. In Soviet Russia, Mensheviks are to-day confined in prison; Mensheviks who at one time worked underground and sought to undermine the Czar's government.

To-day they are imprisoned by the Soviet government because they attempt to undermine the Soviet government thru sabotaging its management, by taking advantage of the economic crisis for purposes of anti-Soviet propaganda, and by conspiring with the international bourgeoisie.

They claim to be Socialists. But what is certain is that they are enemies of the proletariat at a time when the latter is engaged in the most bitter struggle to maintain its power. That is why these Mensheviks are rendered harmless.

Yet they claim to be Socialists and for this reason all those who parade under the same mark wail over the intolerance, the crime against democratic principles, and the oppression of revolutionary fighters by the Soviet Power.

At a time when the capitalists of all countries tell the Bolsheviks: "If you want us to recognize you, you must pay up the Czar's debts!"—the so-called "Socialists" of the Internationals 2 and 2½ cry in chorus: "If you want us to cooperate with you in the formation of a united proletarian front, you must first free the political prisoners in your country!"

Reactionaries All Agreed.

At every convention and at every congress, in Leipzig, in Vienna, in Amsterdam and in Frankfurt they pass resolutions to that effect.

On this point they are all agreed, the Crispiens and Ledebours and Eberts and Noskes, the Longuets and Renaudels, the Vanderveldes and the de Brouquieres, the Renners and the Friedrich Adlers.

Friedrich Adler, too—he who once fired the fatal shot at Count Sturgkh. Perhaps he has a special right to plead for the freedom of the political prisoners in Soviet Russia because he also escaped the death penalty which the capitalist state had passed against him? Is Russia, therefore, to be more narrow-minded against "Socialists" who are threatening the Soviet state with bombs and conspiracies?

We are not in the least interested as to why Friedrich Adler's life was then spared. But the example of this man alone shows the difference between one political offense and another.

Explain Adler's Act.

Friedrich Adler's was an act of murder. But it roused no loathing in the hearts of the masses in all countries; on the contrary, the act roused recognition, approbation and enthusiasm.

However weak the voice of the proletariat was during the war, yet it rose to the defense of Friedrich Adler's life.

But last year, when Erzberger was murdered by some Nationalist officers, the German workers were swept by a wave of indignation, and they condemned those who aided and supported the murderers in Bavaria and Hungary.

With their keen and healthy intuition, the workers are able to feel that the sentencing of revolutionary fighters may be a blow to their own class, even if the victim does not belong to their party. But they are filled with disgust over the comedies of justice that are being enacted with counter-revolutionary traitors.

But wherein does the difference lie? Why do the workers differentiate between one political deed and another? Because they know that the one political act makes the perpetrator a hero, while the other makes him a criminal.

Determining Punishment.

If he serves the cause of the proletariat, and of the revolution, they cheer and exalt him. But if he serves the capitalists, they detest and condemn him.

And this alone can serve as the criterion for deciding whether political offenders should be freed or not, and which ones are to be freed.

In Soviet Russia, political offenders, among them self-styled Socialists, are in prison because they conspired against the proletarian state and because they attempted to hurt the revolution.

The Soviet power is not only the goal of the working-class in all countries, but it is to-day the only power which opposes the united international capitalist class.

It is therefore the power that sets limits to the insatiable exploitation appetite of the bourgeoisie.

He who wants to overthrow the Soviet power commits a crime against the future interests of the proletariat and against its present life-interests.

He who seeks to hamper or overthrow the Soviet Power at a time when it is fighting against the enemies of the revolution is robbing the proletariat of the whole world of its weapon and shield, and is himself an enemy of the proletariat.

The workers can test this. Who are the ones that shout the loudest for the opening of the Russian prisons?

In Germany it is the Eberts, the Noskes and Radbruchs, who shed the blood of many thousands of proletarians, shooting them after they had been court-martialed; they who are keeping thousands of political "offenders" in prison and who in their helplessness against the capitalists are assisting the traitorous counter-revolutionaries.

In France it is men like Albert Thomas and their accomplices, who, while holding portfolios, threw the heroes of the Black Sea into prison, and who are now encouraging and promoting a system of police chicanery.

In Italy, it is "Socialists" who are sabotaging the struggle against the Fascisti. In Austria, it was the Renners and Friedrich Adlers, the real rulers, that had the Hungarian fugitives arrested and who tolerated the extradition of Bavarian fugitives for political offenses, in the very same fashion that their German friends delivered our Spanish comrades over to the Spanish inquisition.

"Socialists" Serve Capitalists.

In Jugoslavia and Roumania it is the social traitors who are shamelessly profiting by the frightful White Terror, and who dare do nothing against the murder justice prevailing there. Yes, indeed, it is the jailers of the European proletariat who are braying and shouting that the prisons be opened—in Russia, of course. By so doing they are serving their masters, the capitalists.

But they are joined in chorus by all the parties of the wonderful 2½ International that are not participating in the government nor voicing any protest against the class-justice in their own countries.

The most conspicuous of these are the German Independent Socialists, who under the influence of Martov and Abramovitch let no opportunity slip by without provocating against Soviet Russia, which keeps "Socialists" in prison.

The reason for this is apparent. They realize that the Communist International is the force, the power that organizes and concentrates the revolutionary struggle against the madly increasing exploitation of the proletariat, and against the disastrous international enslavement policy of the great powers.

They Fear the Struggle.

But they are battle-shy; they are afraid of the struggle; they fear the advance of the proletarian masses.

And in order to disguise their own weakness, this weakness that leads to treason, they resort to slander and denunciations of the Soviet Power.

That is also why they label as "Socialists" those who in Russia are carrying on the struggle against the proletarian power.

They are demanding freedom for the enemies of the proletariat who are in Russian prisons, the better to be able to carry on their anti-proletarian policy in Western Europe.

The cry of "Free the Political Prisoners" should be directed not against the Soviet Power, but against Germany and France, against England and America, against Italy, Jugoslavia, and all the capitalist governments; it should be addressed to the Internationals 2 and 2½ and to the leaders of these two Internationals, who are either participating in or supporting the governments of those countries. And to this cry we add another:—

"Protect Soviet Russia! Protect the international proletariat against the counter-revolutionary gang!"

Read the Story of the Sacco-Vanzetti Case

In announcing a second edition of the [illegible] pamphlet, "The Story of the Sacco-Vanzetti Case," the Committee points to the necessity of knowing the facts of this international labor case in order to understand the sensational developments in the way of new evidence expected soon as a result of investigations now in progress. The pamphlet, written by persons present thruout the trial, gives the facts fully and in a form that is interesting as well as easy to follow.

The publication is lavishly illustrated, with pictures of the condemned men on the cover. Some idea of contents may be formed from a few of the chapter headings: "Who are Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti" "The Powers behind the Prosecution," "Testimony Relating Only to Vanzetti," "Testimony Relating only to Sacco," "Testimony Relating to Both—and to Neither."

The booklet sells for ten cents and may be had from Literature Department, Workers Party, Room 405, 799 Broadway, New York City. Rates on bundle orders are lower: for 100 copies, $8.50, for 500 copies, $40.00. Every thinking man and woman in America should read this authentic account of the attempt to electrocute two labor organizers of Massachusetts.

Jap Toilers Ask Help to Fight Terror

NOTE—We have just received an appeal from "The Joint Committee of Workers and Communists of Japan" urging the workers of this and other countries to protest against the repressive legislation launched against the Japanese working class by the capitalists of that country. Probably one effective way of protesting against the tyranny to which our Japanese comrades are subjected would be for our readers to clip out this appeal and mail it to the Japanese Ambassador, Washington, D. C., or to the Department of State, Washington, D. C., demanding that protests be made to the Japanese Government against the brutalities of this white terror. The appeal is as follows:

In Japan, capitalism has grown to maturity, and the bourgeois capitalists have firmly established a political supremacy of their own. But, here, unlike the "advanced" capitalist countries of Europe and America, the bourgeois domination does not take on the form of political democracy.

The Japanese working class, which has been struggling under the iron hand of semi-feudal militarist bureaucracy, is now brought face to face with the bourgeois dictatorship of the most infamous type.

Outlaw Workers' Organizations.

Not a thing is spared to keep down the Japanese workers. Their unions are illegal, subject to every sort of open and secret interference. Their press, meetings, demonstrations, and all the other organized activities are ruthlessly suppressed. During the last year, hundreds of strikes were crushed by the police and army and Kokusui-kai (the Fascisti of Japan).

In December, 1920, the Japanese Socialist League was ordered to dissolve on the very day of its formation. In October, 1921, the Japanese Communist Party became the victim of a sensational prosecution. In November, a Russian Famine Relief Committee was organized by 26 labor and socialist organizations in Tokio, only to be forbidden to make a single move. To crown all, the government is now trying to enact an anti-radical law of unexampled severity. It reads:

Anti-Radical Socialist Law.

1. Persons who do or intend to do propaganda for the ideas and acts of disregarding the national constitution in connection with Anarchism, Communism, etc., are liable to less than seven years imprisonment or penal servitude. Persons who induce others to do the same as well as those who are thus induced are liable to the same penalty.

2. Persons who organize, assemble, or engage in mass-movements, with the object of doing propaganda for, or of carrying out the matters defined in the preceding article, are liable to less than ten years imprisonment or penal servitude.

3. Persons who do or intend to do propaganda for changing fundamental systems of society thru riots, violence, intimidation, and other illegal methods are liable to less than two years imprisonment or penal servitude.

4. Persons who offer money and articles, or afford other facilities to other persons with a view to letting them commit the crimes defined in the three preceding articles, as well as those persons who accept such offer, knowing its intention, are liable to the penalties prescribed in the respective articles.

5. Persons who commit the crimes defined in the four preceding articles, if they surrender themselves to authority before their crimes are discovered, are subject to a reduced penalty or exemption.

6. The law applies to persons who committed the crimes both inside and outside the territory of Imperial Japan.

Comrades and Fellow-Workers!

This is what every bourgeois government is anxious to do. The law reveals, only in a most haughty, shameless manner, the brutality and ruthlessness characteristic of all exploiters.

They are "reasonable," "liberal" and "democratic" only where the strength of the working class compels them to be.

The Japanese proletariat, historically young, inexperienced and weak, has never enjoyed even the most elementary human rights—has never been free to speak, write or to come together, not to speak of organizing themselves. And now comes the law. It threatens to deprive them of what little they have.

But the chief aim of the law, as the "lawmaker" proclaims, is to smash the international movement, up to which the Japanese proletariat has marched despite untold difficulties. The law once enacted, no co-operation, no connection, indeed no contact will be possible between the Japanese proletariat and the revolutionary organizations abroad.

Comrades and Fellow-Workers:

The Japanese working class, tho fettered and handcuffed, has resolutely entered the battle against the final offensive of desperate capitalism.

Proletarians of All Countries:

Protest against the infamous law, against the brutal dictatorship of the Japanese bourgeoisie! Protest in the sacred name of international solidarity!

Party Agencies Organizing for Better Literature Sales

By ELMER T. ALLISON

A plan of far-reaching importance to the Workers Party propaganda and educational work is now being instituted by the Literature Department.

Recognizing the need of organizing all Party units for larger and more effective distribution of literature, the Department has submitted a plan to the District Offices and Party book stores which is receiving their enthusiastic endorsement.

Under this plan these Party agencies will purchase all their literature from the National Literature Department at the lowest prices possible.

Locals and branches will purchase from the Party stores and District offices of their districts, thus giving splendid support to these necessary agencies.

Thru the Party press and other advertising means the radical labor movement will be made acquainted with these stores and a larger local trade will be built up in each city where such stores are located. Endorsements of the plan have been received from the following Party units: Districts Number One, Eight and Nine. The Brownella Book Shop, owned by the English Branch and located at 310 Michigan St., Toledo, Ohio, and the Central Book Shop, 1611 Central Ave., Cincinnati owned by local comrades, have agreed to the plan. Others have written the National Office for further information regarding details.

The National Literature Department is now supplying these agencies with stocks of literature of other publishers as well as that published by the Workers Party.

Recent Literature Loan Receipts.

Receipts of the Literature Loan Campaign continue to grow. Here follow a few of the latest remittances. All comrades who wish the Literature Department to carry on the most effective work should make the Department a loan for a short period. Write the National Office enclosing any amount you may be able to spare. It will help the work along.

Party Shows Strength at Superior, Wisconsin; Aid the Party Paper

A City Central Committee has been organized in Superior, Wisconsin, with the representatives of the English and Finnish branches of the Workers Party and of the Scandinavian Socialist local.

The latter is affiliated with the Independent Scandinavian Socialist Federation which is voting on a referendum on the subject of affiliation with the Workers Party.

It is predicted that the result of this referendum will be favorable and the Superior Scandinavians are already getting into active co-operation without waiting for the results of the referendum.

A Young Workers League is being organized and judging from past experience on this field, it will be a big success. A May Day demonstration will be held and plans are being pushed for its success.

Boost Worker in Tennessee.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Here is what one of our willing railroad workers is doing on behalf of THE WORKER and of the Workers Party.

He writes: "Up to date in this section THE WORKER is going to nine engineers, eight firemen, three shop craftsmen, three trainmen and one telegraph operator. One of the engineers is chairman of our local and he is taking great interest. The chairman of the trainmen's local of this division is also a reader, he has good education and is also delegate to the next trainmen's convention.

The workers seem to be ready for united action more than ever before. The B. L. and E. appointed me on a committee to raise money for the striking miners in West Virginia.

We collected $37 and haven't got half around yet. I also filled one of those roll-call blanks sent out by the F. S. R. with $10.75. I believe this is enough wind pudding so look on the next page for another list of three six months' subs.

Reads Every Line of It.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—I have been a subscriber for your paper since November, 1921, and have thoroughly enjoyed reading every line of it. I feel that it is the one paper that everyone should read. I shall continue using all my efforts to introduce the Worker to as many persons as possible and expect to organize a branch of the Workers Party right here.

Local Los Angeles Sets Pace for All Party Locals

Local Los Angeles, Cal., of the Workers Party, with its seven branches and a live wire Young Workers League, is the life and leader of the revolutionary movement of Southern California. With classes on Historic Materialism on Monday nights conducted by Comrade E. Ettlinger; Classes on Friday nights on Industrial History, conducted by Comrade Richard Reeves; Educational work in the study of the Constitution and Program of the Workers Party and Scientific Socialism, conducted at the branch meetings of the party; Lectures and Open Forums on Sunday nights, give an idea of the Local's educational activities in preparing the workers of this part of the country for the final task of uniting the entire working class in order to bring about the establishment of The Workers' Republic.

Sunday, April 16, 8 P. M., Comrade E. Ettlinger will speak on "Imperialism—Growth and Development."

Sunday, April 23rd, 8 P. M., Comrade A. Bush will speak on "The Third International Is Bankrupt." The title for this lecture is taken from those who misunderstand the latest tactics of the Third International.

Sunday, April 30th, Open Forum. All lectures and classes are conducted at the Local Los Angeles Workers Party, Headquarters at 642½ N. Main Street.

Plan May Day Demonstration.

The Local sent out over a hundred letters to Labor Unions and political organizations inviting them to send representatives to a Joint May Day Committee to arrange a May Day Demonstration. Many labor unions have already acted upon the invitation.

Two more branches of the Party are being organized and will function soon. The workers here seem to sense the necessity and realize the practicability and soundness of the principles and tactics of the Workers Party, and this is why they are joining it in bodies, with a spirit and sense of responsibility that the pledge card, which they sign, embodie-

WITH OUR READERS

Letters for this column must be written on one side of the paper only. When typewritten they must be double-spaced and they should be typewritten if possible. THE WORKER will publish as many letters as possible and to save the labor of editing these rules must be observed.

NOT AMAZED

Editor, The Worker:—The radicals are not amazed and bewildered at the fact that Emma Goldman is writing against the government of Soviet Russia. Surely there is nothing to be surprised at. It is only natural that she should, for she is an Anarchist, who does not believe in any form of government and who believes in perfect freedom of the individual. Whereas, the Communists believe in a highly centralized government and they contend that there can be no freedom for the individual during the transitorial period from Capitalism to Communism, that the dictatorship of the proletariat is an absolute necessary means for the realization of Communism.—Sarah Rosen.

IDO.

Editor, The Worker:— A certain article under the headline "Esperanto" in the issue of March 18th of THE WORKER needs some corrections. It is a regrettable fact, that even among us radical workers, who should take great interest in the International language movement, there are so many ignorant of the same. On account of this we find so many misinformations and groundless rumors circulating. The main trouble is that when our Esperantistic brothers use the word Esperanto, they use it in the sense of "an international language in general," simply ignoring the fact, that there are several systems beside Esperanto. In this way the public is led to use the word in the same sense.

In this sense of the word, the information is correct. The countries mentioned have indorsed the international language idea in general, that is all. No government has yet adopted any certain system. The rumor of the "official" recognition of Esperanto by the Soviet government, that was so widely spread both in Western Europe and here in 1920, for instance in The New York Call, has been denied by a statement issued by Lep, secretary and deputy pro tem. of Zinoviev, President of the Petrograd Soviet, July 27th, 1920. We quote from that statement: "The Soviet government sympathizes with the idea of an international language, without favoring any particular system. It is almost impossible to adopt primitive Esperanto because of its supersigned letters, which do not exist in the Russian printing establishments. Rather than manufacture new types or new composing machines, we should certainly prefer to reform the alphabet, as we have already done the Russian alphabet. Or, we might adopt Ido, if that language proves to be simpler in that respect and equally good in all others." (I will mail a copy of the complete statement to anybody inquiring about it.) So much for this.

Yes, the members of the Young Workers League should study the International language, and we are doing so. In these days the Y. W. L. here in Pittsburgh is starting a class in IDO (Reformed Esperanto). Those interested should study these two systems from an impartial view. Comrade Max Eastman made such an investigation at the end of 1920. See the result in LIBERATOR, February 1921. We take the liberty of quoting the following part of his article. "I came to the study with a certain prejudice in favor of Esperanto, but I leave it with the opinion, that Ido is a decided improvement upon Esperanto, retaining what is best in its fundamental structure, and discarding what is cumbersome and still amateurish. It seems to me, that the unwillingness of the Esperantists to accept this improvement upon their language has been due to that devil in human nature which always tries to turn everything into a church."

If some paper would give a small space to comparative, parallel text in both systems, anybody would be able to judge, which one is the linguistically superior one. Esperanto: Karaj kamaradoy laboristaj tuj komparu tiujn chi sistemoyn de internaciaj lingvoj.

Ido: Kara kamaradi laborista quik komparez ica sistemi di lingui internaciona.—A. Rostrom, National Secretary, American Ido Society, 7616 Tioga St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

ORGANIZE IN LAUNDRIES

A very enthusiastic meeting of Laundry Workers was held recently and an organization formed. The union was organized under the auspices of the Public Service Organization and the United Labor Council.

General Headquarters of the Laundry Workers and The Public Service Organization have been moved to 1551 Second Ave.

Young Workers See Organization Grow, Convention Soon

Work is progressing more favorably than ever for the national organization of the Young Workers League. Several new leagues have been added to the list, notably Washington, D. C., which reports the formation of an English branch with one Jewish and one Junior League in the process of formation. Looks as tho there will be a revolutionary stronghold in the very center of America's parliamentary capitol.

Maynard, Mass., was organized thru the good work of Comrade L. Marks of Boston, and will be on the firing line from now on. Lynn, Lowell, Springfield, and many of the other industrial cities in New England are to be attacked next, and we expect that there will be a live and hustling bunch of Yowls in each of these cities.

Chicago, up to snuff, as always, sends thru $11 on the sustaining fund lists with promises for still more. They also report that there is a good deal of life amongst the entire membership, and that the League is growing steadily.

New York reports that its membership is now well over the 400 mark and steadily headed toward the half thousand. They are now limbering up for the open air campaign that they expect to carry thru during the coming months. The soapbox orators will soon be as thick as flies, and the millions of the proletariat of New York will become familiar with the doings of the Y. W. L. thru its many speakers.

The National Organization Committee reports that the March-April issue of the Young Worker has now been supplied to all Leagues. Every one seems satisfied with this issue considering it a great improvement over the first. The N. O. C. promises to have the May issue out in ample time for May Day. It will feature many interesting articles, and, all in all, will mark another step forward in the advance march of the revolutionary youth movement of America.

270 Communists Go to Trial in Roumania

BUKAREST, Roumania.—A court martial in this city is deciding the fate of 270 Communists who have been imprisoned for their political opinions. They are living in solitary, held incommunicado, and are maltreated by the prison guards.

Nearly all of them bear marks of violence on their bodies. Some of the prisoners are incurably ill from exposure. Two have been released, because the prison authorities feared they would die in jail. Over 1,000 witnesses are to be examined, most of them police spies and members of the old parties.

THANKS!

The National Defense Committee thanks all those who have helped in the bazaar and urges organizations and individuals who have not settled for tickets and advertising in the Souvenir Journal to do so as soon as possible. Address all communications to and make all remittances payable to National Defense Committee, Room 405, 799 Broadway, New York City.

Local Greater New York Picks Executive Committee

Local Greater New York, Workers Party, at the last meeting of its City Central Committee elected William W. Weinstone, Ludwig Lore, Alexander Trachtenberg, Thomas O'Flaherty, Cris Ware, J. Obolonsky, Bradhy, Kassoff and Heino as the City Executive Committee.

William W. Weinstone was elected Executive Secretary and also Financial Secretary and Treasurer; Cris Ware, Recording Secretary, and Kassoff, Sergeant-at-Arms.

The City Central Committee also decided to call a general membership meeting on April 16th, 2 P. M., at the Stuyvesant Casino, Second Ave. and Ninth Street, to consider the question of the United Front in the coming elections.

A resolution introduced by Comrade Verblin calls for the formation of a "temporary alliance of the Party with all working-class organizations who favor independent political action, the Socialist Party, the Farmer-Labor Party, etc., in the coming elections.

The decision the party is called to make in this question is a momentous one involving far-reaching consequences, and all members are requested to participate in the discussion and voting.

The meeting will also consider the part the Local will play in the May Day Demonstration for the release of political prisoners as well as the important organization questions of increasing the membership of the Local and building up the circulation of THE WORKER. Only those in good standing who have paid for months of January and February and who show membership cards will be admitted.

ARE YOU A SPEAKER?

All over the country our comrades are busy explaining to eager masses the principles and program of the Workers Party. In halls, from the soap box, in union meetings, in fraternal organizations, over the dinner pails, wherever workers gather—there our comrades are busy expounding our message. May their tribe increase! And as soon as warm weather enables us to further sabotage the hall owners there will be a greatly increased demand for speakers.

The national office wants to know about every speaker able and willing to take the stump. If this means you send in your name and address, and tell us your experience in the movement and what you think you can do.

You need not be able to fill a Coliseum with the power of your name and the volume of your voice. If you can make a propaganda talk on a street corner, either alone or with the help of another speaker, if you can act as chairman of such meetings, if you can deliver solid educational talks to branches, fraternal organizations, women's clubs, young workers' leagues, unions, or if you just have nerve enough to visit these organizations on behalf of one of the many projects the party always has afoot—then we want you to register for service.

The "Brains" in Management

The Pennsylvania Railroad had a bad year in 1921, but it managed to accumulate $24,307,669.00 in excess of all expenses. This is equivalent to 4.87 per cent. on stock issues totaling $499,173,400.

The interesting fact in connection with this statement of what a "bad year" means to the coupon-clippers is that while operating revenue decreased 11 per cent. operating expense decreased 25 per cent.

In other words, wages—the big item in operating expenses—were reduced more than twice as much as revenue loss; this means that in addition to making up for losses due to bad business conditions, the happy employees of the P. R. R. were called upon to contribute enough more to make possible interest payments to the investors.

They seem to have demonstrated their loyalty to their employer in a very substantial manner and everyone is well-pleased with the possible exception, of course of some disgruntled group which may believe that brainy management consists solely of playing upon the fears of the workers and getting them to accept wage-reductions under the pretense of protecting the interests of the great public.

It seems to us that if backed by the full power of the press and government any moron could do as much.

Roumania's "Relief" Work

Fridtjof Nansen has appealed to the Roumanian Premier to join in the general relief action for Russia and (to tell the truth)—the government responded. In what manner is shown in the paragraph from the Bukarest press we print below, which constitutes Take Jonescu's "Briand's diplomatic messenger," answer to Doctor Nansen's appeal.

> "Her Royal Highness, the Queen, has handed me your telegram of January 9th. Her Highness is very much gratified at your noble endeavors to relieve the suffering and desires me to inform you that Roumania has not remained passive towards the victims of the famine across her border. Approximately 100,000 refugees have been allowed to enter Roumania where they are being supported thanks to the noble spirit of our citizens. Several thousand soldiers of Wrangel's army are even now being cared for by the Government."

It is difficult to say which is basest, the hypocrisy with which it is asserted that one did "not remain passive towards the victims of the famine," or the cool admission that Roumania is a haven of refuge to Wrangel's gangs.

In its answer to Nansen the Roumanian Government merely speaks of 100,000 counter-revolutionists and only mentions the Wrangel Army in passing. Why be so modest? It is a well-known fact that the Roumanian Government supports the various bands of Petlura, Makhno, etc., who have been driven out of Russia, and provides them with Roumanian and French weapons.

Really, an excellent famine relief campaign!

Mob Law in the Courts

Mob law is a peculiar American institution. During the war it became part of the legal machinery of capitalism, when courts tried to outdo the savage outrages of gangs of hoodlums and super-patriots.

There is no other explanation for the long-term sentences imposed by the courts on the war prisoners. Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, now retired to the baseball arena, was chief among these judicial mobsters, glorying in sending working-class spokesmen to 20 years' penal servitude.

The judicial mobsters after the war, urged on by frightened war profiteers cowering before the brilliant spectacle of the growing Russian Revolution, tried to outdo their war records. Special forms of heresy-hunting were invented for the purposes of the after-the-war Communist trials.

Thus we find that Communist prisoners in Great Britain usually received six months, in Germany, Austria and Czecho-Slovakia the maximum sentences reached only two and three years.

But in New York State the Communist prisoners, not on the basis of speeches made or of agitation they had carried on, but merely because of views that they held, were sentenced to prison for from five to ten years. Close to two years has already been served by most of these prisoners.

The fight for the liberation of the Communist prisoners is a fight against judicial mob law. Let the workers join in this struggle with all their power. If mob law is justified in these political cases, it may be used just as effectively against the workers in their industrial struggles. Remember: the release of the prisoners now means the repudiation by the workers of this judicial tyranny under capitalism. On whose side are you?

Sedition in Our Colonies

The dispatches from Manila, dealing with certain manifestations of unrest among the Filipino beneficiaries of the blessings of American democracy as interpreted by Mayor-General Leonard Wood contain considerable humor of the unconscious variety.

It seems that some time ago the general vetoed sixteen bills passed by the the last Filipino legislature. This wholesale exercise of the veto power appears to have convinced the younger element of the Filipino population that the voice of the people in their own affairs was not supposed to be raised above a whisper. During the absence of General Wood on an inspection trip to Mindanao, the Phillipine Herald published a cartoon showing, in the words of the dispatch, a big bully labeled "Wood" stabbing a female figure labeled "P. I. Autonomy" thru the heart with a big dagger labeled "Veto Power."

The dispatch further states that "the picture is considered libelous by American legal authorities, some declaring it seditious." Knowing as we do the rights and privileges of subject nationalities under American imperialism we have not the slightest doubt that in addition to be being libelous and seditious it will be also declared treasonable just as soon as the general gets on the job again.

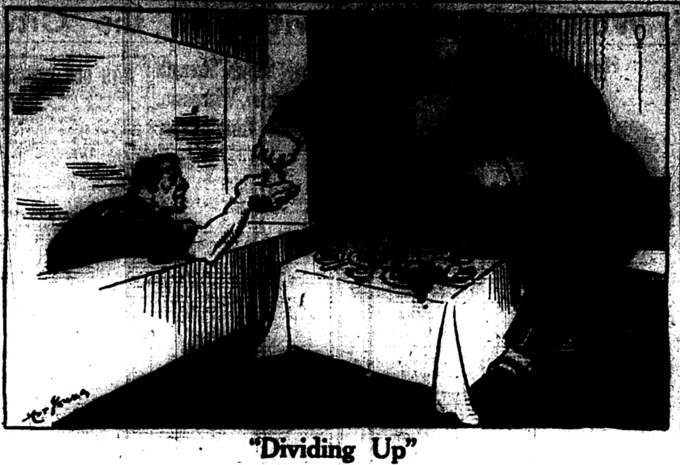
The American community is aroused to a high pitch "of resentment and indignation" according to the dispatches. To quote further "some fear General Wood will take drastic action when he returns. A majority feel that such activities cannot be passed over without adequate corrective action."

This is the true spirit of Americanism which has done so much to consolidate our far-flung empire. To every true American it must give a thrill to hear of the self-sacrificing manner in which the merchants, clerks and school-teachers of the American bureaucracy in the Phillipines have flung themselves into the struggle in behalf of their beloved leader who has been so vilely attacked by ignorant savages one of whom, according to the dispatches is Dean of the College of Liberal Arts in the University of the Phillipines.

We may rest assured that the author of the libel, who, the dispatch regretfully states, neglected to sign his name to the cartoon, will be dealt with according to the best traditions of the American colonial service as exemplified in Haiti, Porto Rico and Santo Domingo.

In this connection we cannot help referring to the welcome news cabled in to Washington by General Mont Reily of Porto Rico; he says that since his arrival the opposition to his appointment has entirely "subsided." The casualty list of the natives, as a result of which this desirable settlement has been obtained, will probably be disclosed in a year or two when another congressional investigation occurs.

Nothing in General Wood's record would indicate that he will permit himself to be outdone in "pacifying" unrest by the governor of a smaller dependency.



"Dividing Up"

Exchanging Deportees

The Canadian government has deported Hulet M. Wells back to the United States. The United States government has deported George Hardy to Canada. That ought to make capitalism in both these countries happy.

Wells was formerly president of the Seattle Central Labor Council. He was sent to prison during the war. Hardy was formerly secretary of the Industrial Workers of the World, but has now been expelled from that organization for taking a stand with the Red Trade Union International. Both were speakers for Russian Famine Relief. They have both been in Russia, and their deportation is a tribute to the effectiveness of the good work they were doing.

The spirit of Herbert Hoover, that proclaims no good word shall be said on behalf of Soviet Russia while famine funds are being solicited, has no doubt penetrated to Canada.

The result is an even exchange of deportees. And in this exchange of deportees we hope that those we send to Canada may be of as good a calibre as those who are returned to the United States of America.

Turning the Tables

The Baltic states have been the jumping off place for counter-revolutions and efforts at intervention launched against Soviet Russia.

Now the tables have been turned. The Soviet Delegation to Genoa stopped at Riga, Latvia, and met with the representatives of Poland, Latvia and Esthonia. They agreed they all desired peace, which must surely be sad news for the dollar diplomats at Paris, London and Washington.

The conference was called by Soviet Russia on a few days' notice. Had there been more time other countries, surely Finland, would have had delegates present.

Thru this conference Soviet Russia is developing a block of her own that will make itself felt at Genoa. She has loosed the grip of the imperialist allies on the policies of the Baltic states. She has started a waye westwards more powerful than the march of her Red Armies.

"Peace" was the first demand of the Russian Revolution. It is now carrying that demand successfully to the workers of Western Europe. May the triumph at Riga be followed by new victories at Genoa, victories over the profit-mad forces of world capitalism.

American capitalism has organized a "Roll Call of America" to raise a fund to perpetuate the memory of Woodrow Wilson's services to American imperialism. Let the workers remember that they have a Roll Call, the Roll Call of the Friends of Soviet Russia, to increase the Famine Fund for their starving comrades in Soviet Russia. It should not be hard to choose between these two roll calls.

Burns "Shakes Down" Congress

We now get the reasons for "Bill" Burns' recent discovery of new "red plots" and his heralded increase in the strength of the radical movement, that it is "more active and dangerous than ever."

The chief of the Bureau of Investigations, Department of Justice, Harding Republican administration, wept for the safety of capitalism because he wanted to shake down Congress for an increase in the appropriation for his department. He had $2,400,000 for 1921. He wants $500,000 more this year, and he uttered his lament and made his plea before the House Committee on Appropriations.

He confessed he had 10 super-sleuths who were each drawing $4,000 per year, 11 at $2,800, and 4 at $1,200, beside great numbers at an average of $7 per day and expense allowances. Burns thinks this army ought to be increased.

The average Congressman is so gullible that the additional appropriation may go thru. If it has hard sledding Burns will probably offer jobs to amateur sleuths among the pie hunters in some of the Congressional districts. This will surely win him his $500,000 appropriation. Thus will "law and order" have won another victory.

The Bankers Discover Marx

Perhaps the most astounding of the varied phenomena to which an insane economic order gives birth is the attention paid to what may be properly called the death-bed statements of financiers and diplomats concerning the criminal mistakes of the last eight years by well-informed organs of liberal opinion.

The weighty pronouncements now being made by the banking fraternity concerning the impossibility of ever collecting the German reparations merely reiterate certain fundamental truths known to every school-boy in the Marxian school of economics; these truths were explained in the revolutionary working-class organs while the Versailles pact was in process of negotiation and working-class editors were able to predict at that time the exact consequences of a plan to make Germany pay the cost of the war, consequences so disastrous that they have at least been brought home to the most stupid flag-waver by the world-wide break-down of production and exchange.

It appears that the National City Bank of New York for reasons best known to itself, has lately been giving some publicity to the utterances of certain influential British financiers and that these gentlemen have at last been forced to recognize realities by the pressure of events. We quote one of these gentlemen—Mr. F. C. Goodenough, chairman of the Board of Directors of Barclay's Bank—and his attitude toward the financial situation is typical:

> Under the terms of the treaty, payment is required to be made in gold; but Germany has at present only a comparatively small stock of gold—with which she may perhaps be able some day to start to reform her currency—and the whole stock of gold in the world would not suffice to enable Germany to make her payments in gold, even if she should possess it. She must, therefore, import raw materials; and, in order to pay for them, must export her manufactures. This is a first charge on her exports. Then she must sell still more goods abroad, and render other services so that she may buy gold, or its equivalent in value, in order to make reparation-payments.
> The question must, of course, arise whether the world can absorb so large a quantity of goods as will have to be sold in order to realize the amount that is required as quickly, as it is at present proposed; or at all events, whether it can do so without dislocation to trade and, consequently, injury to itself.
> The problem of reparation-payments turns, therefore, not only upon the ability of Germany to pay, but also upon the world's ability to receive payment according to the plan as it now stands.

The above is sound economic doctrine to which any Marxian can subscribe. We knew it all the time. The statements of the economic effects of the German reparations were just as true when the arrangements were made as they are to-day. Why this belated recognition of the fact that capitalism operates under certain laws which cannot be ignored with impunity?

Go over the files of any working-class publication whose editor has even an elementary knowledge of the construction of capitalist society and the laws governing capitalistic production and circulation and you will find article after article, written in the pedantic style so dear to the heart of the Marxian, showing that the one thing which the Allies should avoid as they would the plague if they really want to stabilise the capitalist system is to fasten the cost of the war upon Germany or any other nation.

Indemnities, like other obligations, can only be paid in commodities or in gold, as a standard of commodity value. This means that in order to pay the indemnity Germany must displace with her commodities the commodities of all other nations in the world markets; unless she does this she cannot pay. If she does this industry in all other countries is ruined.

We have commented from time to time upon the stupidity of the ruling class in general; the remarkable "discovery" of an economic law, heralded by the liberal press as a sign of an awakening conscience, only confirms our opinion that rulers do not need to know anything as long as the great mass knows still less.

Those familiar with the contradictions in capitalist society, in view of the dire straits of the system due to the ignorance of its chief beneficiaries, can afford to pardon the bankers for stealing their thunder.

Viewing the capitalist world as it is to-day one hardly needs to be an incurable optimist to say in the words of the good old melodrama—"The pardon comes too late!"

Capitalism Is Resourceful

In their struggles with the workers, the exploiters call every resource at their command to their assistance.

We are not surprised, therefore, by facts that have just been brought to our attention in connection with the New England textile strike.

We have it on reliable information that the work stopped by the New England strike is being performed across the sea by labor in Germany and Czecho-Slovakia, working in three shifts, at high speed and at low wages.

We have even been given the names of the cities where this work is being done: at Leipzig, Crefeld, Barmen, Erfurt, Chemnitz and Elberfeld, in Germany, and at Brunn, Olmutz, Reichenberg, Iglau, Humboletz and Warrensdorf, in Czecho-Slovakia.

Great stocks of cotton and wool are loaded on board ships at American ports and sent across the seas with the samples and designs. In Germany and Czecho-Slovakia the finished product is turned out and shipped back to the United States, or sent to any foreign market in the possession of the American capitalists.

Let the workers, not only in the textile industry, but in every other industry, learn a lesson from their exploiters. International organization, of the closest kind, is needed by labor in its struggle with capital. That is the hope that the Red Trade Union International brings to them. What are they going to do about it?

What Is Wrong with th Public Schools?

Note:—Kate Van Eaton, formerly a public school teacher, i the State of Ohio, gives the fol lowing in answer to "What is th matter with our public schools?:

By KATE VAN EATON

Most of the criticism of o schools is unsatisfactory because is too superficial. At intervals som changes have been made in o schools which make them look "di ferent."

An effort has been made to mak school work more interesting by re lating the various subjects to th child's life. City children comput in terms of plate glass windows an prices of vegetables,—country chil dren in terms of cows, eggs an fences.

Quicken Child's Interest

Local history, current events loca geography, etc., all have been intro duced into the schools in order t quicken the child's interest in th various subjects.

Handwork and trade classes pla an important part in our schools o today. Gardens, book-binding, dress making, cooking-classes, etc., hav succeeded to a large extent in cor recting one nearly fatal fallacy o the public school system of twenty five years ago: that so-called brain work is more important and mor dignified than manual labor. Bu fundamentally our schools have th same basis today that they had in th beginning. And that basis is un sound.

Our schools are established on a false theory of education. They are founded on the assumption that education is something alien to the human young, but acquirable by most of them, or have the resourcefulness and charm to make it attractive to them. "Education" is regarded as something that can be imposed upon one person by another.

Adult Imposed Education

A child learns to read, write spell, and "figure," that is the beginning of the popular idea of education. He is advanced to the stage of learning facts of one sort and another, to completing certain tasks under direction. He works when commanded to work, plays when told to play.

His work is judged and marked by another according to arbitrarily imposed standards which he does not understand, even when he attains them, for they are handed down by an adult world which is as alien to him as it is to any South Sea Islander.

One of New York's large trade schools has on display products of the pupil's work,—"for sale." That display is a terrible indictment of our public schools: it is excellent work—but it is all equally good and equally devoid of individuality.

The work of one child is exactly like the work of every other child—uniformly conventional and saleable. This is the highest attainment possible to our present system: the same quality of saleable workmanship uniformly attained by numberless equally efficient children; countless children learning the same facts, copying the same designs, adopting for their own the same commercial standards of art and work, acquiring with equal skill and precision the various crafts and trades which will make them useable parts of our industrial civilization.

Training Not Education

By means of marks, examinations, rewards and punishments the colorful variety of young children's potential powers is reduced to one saleable mediocre monotony of accomplishment at fourteen or sixteen. Training is mistaken for education.

That is what is wrong with our public schools. We regard a child as a piece of clay which we may mould according to our will or as a trick animal to be trained as circus-dogs and horses are trained. We can make a useful beast out of a horse or dog—that is training.

But we not only are unable to make a horse out of a puppy dog—we cannot even make a horse out of a colt. We can only provide the necessary conditions for growth and let it grow.

Away With "Stunt" Factories

When we have sense enough to realize that a child, just as definitely as a colt or pup possesses within himself individual qualities which require only an environment favorable to growth for their development, then, and only then will we begin to understand the real significance and purpose of education.

Then we will change our schools from "stunt" factories into educational institutions.

MINERS! STRIKE TO WIN!

"Hold Labor's Front Line Trenches!" Urges Proclamation of the Workers Party

With a solidarity never before equalled in labor history, the great mass of coal miners is out on strike.

They have come from underground, from pit and shaft, where they have spent so many years in dangerous racking toil. The coal diggers have accepted the challenge flung in their teeth by the organized coal operators.

This fight is only a part of the general drive initiated by the combined capitalist employers of the country to smash all working class organizations, reduce wages below the level of subsistence and establish the SCAB SHOP, with a return to conditions more abhorrent than absolute slavery.

Coal operators, railroad owners, bankers and all the other representatives of big business have completely united their forces in a bold attempt to wipe out, what they term, the last remnants of labor unionism. They are advocating and using every weapon at their command, and openly boasting of their success in coercing labor back to the former slave conditions.

In the steel industry, the twelve-hour day has been re-established. In the textile and packing industries, the workers are being clubbed into submission. In the railroad and transport industry, they have reduced wages and attempted to destroy working conditions gained by labor in the past. In the building industry, they have declared for the so-called "Open Shop," and have hired gunmen to protect scabs and keep union men off the jobs. And in Pennsylvania, Ohio and elsewhere, the coal operators have already posted notices of wage reductions as high as 40 per cent, and have threatened to operate the mines on [illegible]

Their goal is more profit and cheap submissive labor, which means increased poverty and misery for the workers. Hence their determination to destroy the coal miners' unions.

This strike can be defeated ONLY if the miners fail to stand solid shoulder to shoulder, It will bring certain defeat if the miners' ranks weaken and crawl back to accept the dictates of the mine owners.

The operators have refused even to consider a new agreement. They have refused to regulate working hours so that the mine workers may all be assured of jobs. Their heavy profits, gained from the coal diggers' toil, have made them drunk with power. In 1921, miners were paid on an average of $1.97 for producing a ton of coal, while it was sold for $10.41. In the same year, miners earned an average of approximately $13.50 per week. Untold millions went to the operators.

The mine workers and their families were condemned to starvation conditions while the operators revelled in luxury at the pleasure resorts

The capitalist class is spreading its poisonous propaganda and has its agents amongst the miners in an effort to demoralize their ranks. Many of the miners' officials were asleep at their posts and neglected to organize the unorganized fields during the war.

Consequently the miners now have to suffer, for if all the fields had then been organized the miners' union would now be able to win its demands without a strike. All such officials should and must be relegated to the rear and kept safely out of office. The fight to clean the union has to be kept up.

But it must not interfere with the common struggle against the mine owners. The miners are in this fight to win and they cannot NOW waste time and energy in useless wrangling among themselves. Unbroken solidarity against the mine owners must be preserved at all costs.

In November, 1919, the mine owners called upon the federal government to break the miners' strike, for fear that they might win. The government rallied to their assistence and the infamous injunction was granted against the workers.

In the present struggle the miners may depend upon them to invoke the same interference in every possible way. The soldiers, the courts, the police, the newspapers and every arm of the capitalist class will be used against the workers. The only supporters the miners can depend upon are themselves and the mass of labor in other industries.

The mine owners believe that they can lick the mine workers to-day. They have the active backing of Wall Street and of all the captains of industry—Labor's bitterest enemies. Their properties and organizations are solidly interlocked. They have become more aggressive and more militant. The fields of West Virginia have been soaked in the blood of militant mine workers.

Not alone miners, but millions of other working men and women have been thrust into the desperate position of being deprived of the right to labor by which alone they can live.

The whole working class is being starved by unemployment, browbeaten by gunmen and cossacks, and harrassed by injunctions and industrial court laws—the most loathesome of all oppressive laws. The workers are staggering under the heavy blows of the rapacious capitalist regime.

The miners are called upon to fight against such slavery.

In complete organic unity with the rest of the labor movement, they must carry on the fight for their common needs, defeat their common enemy and march forward to the only true solution of the evils of capitalism—the Workers' Republic.

THERE MUST BE NO WAVERING IN THEIR RANKS, NO SEPARATE AGREEMENTS AND NO SEPARATE UNDERSTANDINGS.

THE LABORING MASSES OF THE UNITED STATES ARE DEPENDING UPON THEM TO HOLD THE FRONT-LINE TRENCHES.

Judge Is Scab Procurer for Coal Barons; Miners on Strike Refused Citizenship Papers

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—(Special to The Worker.) If it never does anything else, the coal strike has uncovered another 100 per cent American judge in the person of Judge C. P. Orr of the United States District Court here.

When Stanley Casper and Stanley Kosloske, of Belle Vernon, members of the United Mine Workers of America, appeared before him on their final application for citizenship papers, with the required number of witnesses and all papers properly filled out, Judge Orr ask them if they were union men and if they were on strike.

They replied in the affirmative and the judge then told them that he would not grant them citizenship papers, that public sentiment was against the strike and, apparently to satisfy his steel bosses that he was on the job, told the two applicants that if they returned to work he would grant them citizenship papers whether they had any witnesses or not.

The officers of District Number Five, of which the men are members, have put the matter up to their counsel for advice, feeling that an appeal to the United States Attorney-General would be useless.

It is said here that this is the first instance of a Federal Judge acually trying to procure strikebreakers thru the pressure of his office, but those familiar with the record of Judge Orr express but little surprise claiming that he has always been for sale to the highest bidder, and that in this case the coal operators happen to be the purchaser.

Demonstrate May Day for Prisoners

The Amnesty Alliance for New York State Prisoners, with headquarters at 81 East 10th St. N. Y. City, announces that plans are now completed for a monster demonstration for amnesty for all political prisoners on May 1st, as an opening of its intensive local campaign on behalf of New York State Prisoners.

At a conference held at Casino Hall, delegates from the Italian Defense Committee, National Defense Committee, Workers Defense Committee, United Labor Council, locals of the Socialist Party, Workers Party, United Toilers and other organizations participated.

It was decided to arrange the mass-meeting and demonstration at 110th St, and Park Circle, Monday, May first, at 2 P. M. Speakers in English, Italian, Russian, Jewish, German and other languages representing every phase of labor opinion have been invited to participate and many prominent speakers have already accepted. A similar demonstration is planned for Brooklyn.

The Amnesty Alliance requests all organizations which have already arranged concerts or May Day celebrations, to make amnesty for all political prisoners an issue of the Day.

Resolutions on General Amnesty; Sacco-Vanzetti and Mooney; and the New York State cases will be prepared by the Amnesty Alliance for use at all such meetings.

Petitions are already prepared for use at once and on May Day as well as general literature on the political prisoners for distribution at May Day gatherings.

Workers Party Calls on British Labor to Support the Coal-Miners' Strike Here

Calling for the greatest co-operation possible between the workers of Great Britain and the United States, in the coal strike now raging in this country, the Workers Party of America has sent a cablegram to the British Communist Party as follows:—

New York City, April 13, 1922.

Albert Inkpin, Secretary,
British Communist Party,
16 Kings St., Covent Garden,
London, England.

COMRADE: — The Workers Party of America, speaking for the militant elements in the American working class, calls upon the Communist Party of Great Britain to exert every effort possible to secure complete co-operation between the workers of these two countries in support of the great coal miners' strike in this country, in which 600,000 workers have laid down their tools and are now idle. All British coal miners, railroad workers, longshoremen and seamen must be persuaded not to mine or handle coal for shipment to the United States. British workers must not scab upon their American brothers. The victory of the American coal miners, in their present epoch-making struggle, will not only be a triumph for them, but for all the workers of this country and of the international labor movement. Long live the solidarity of the workers of the entire world!

Workers Party of America,
James P. Cannon, Chairman.

Cossack Whips of Pennsylvania Constabulary Help Drive Unorganized Workers on Strike and into the Growing Ranks of Miners' Union

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE
Labor Editor of THE WORKER

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Charging into a parade of 7,000 striking miners in Masontown, twelve miles from West Brownsville, district headquarters of the United Mine Workers, clubbing with the loaded whips that justify the name of Cossacks, riding down men, women and children, a detachment of the Pennsylvania State constabulary has probably done more to unite the miners and close the mines in the non-union districts than a thousand organizers.

No sooner had the parade in Masontown been re-formed after being disorganized by the attack, than Pete Fagan, Vice-President [illegible] had the forty less seriously injured men and women speeding in every vehicle that could be commandeered into the adjoining non-union camps.

In every coal mining town in the district the victims of the cold-blooded brutality of the constabulary, in their blood-stained bandages, were greeted with cheers, and from the pits the miners came pouring forth.

They have not yet gone back, and to-day they are members of the United Mine Workers of America; the coal barons are wondering at the failure of the old terroristic methods.

Never in the strenuous history of labor struggles in the United States have the employers been caught off their guard and outgeneralled to the extent they have in this district—the storm center of the strike of the men who dig the coal for this nation.

Believing that the non-union fields were immune to all persuasion from the organizers of the United Mine Workers, the operators apparently staked their all on the probability of these fields riding over the crisis with the help of the stored coal.

The exodus of the miners from the non-union fields has upset all the carefully prepared plans and figures of the operators, and to-day a prominent steel company official (whose name is withheld by the operators' news bureau) is quoted as saying:

> "Unless a settlement is reached in the next two weeks in the coal strike the iron and steel industry of the country will be hit a harder blow than it suffered in the steel strike of 1919."

It should be understood that the fight in this district, on the part of the miners, is to stop the production of coking coal. This coal is produced almost exclusively in what is called "the Connelsville district," and upon this output depends the operation of the steel industry which has just begun to profit from the increased domestic demand for steel products after a slack period dating from before the world war.

The Frick interests control the coking coal properties, and those who remember the Homestead strike, in which an army of private detectives were first used in a labor dispute in the United States, can see the working of a poetic justice in the strike of the non-union miners employed by this concern and—their organization into the United Mine Workers—the union hated by the Frick corporation as badly as the devil is said to hate holy water.

The steel mills here, after hoping against hope for a return to normal production, are closing: Thursday the Shoenberger works of the American Steel and Tinplate Company, employing 1,100 men, and the Mingo works of the Carnegie Steel Company, employing 1,500 men, shut down. The Republic Iron and Steel Company of Youngstown and the Carnegie Steel Company of Etna have blown out two blast furnaces each. It costs a lot of money to blow out blast furnaces and just as much to blow them in; steel corporations do not shut down for fun, but the joke is on them even tho they cannot see it.

The miners claim that 30,000 men, formerly non-union, are on strike and have joined the United Mine Workers of America, and the operators do not dispute these figures. More than 80 per cent of the mines in the non-union districts are down and more are closing every hour as the organizers reach them and bring to the diggers the message of solidarity.

The Berwind-White properties—the most vicious interests in their fight against unionism and from whose territory union organizers were deported at the point of guns a few days ago—are all down. Two locals of the United Mine Workers of America have been formed among

Soviet Rule Thru Terror

The trial of a number of Russian social-revolutionaries at Moscow, that was the subject of bitter controversy at the Berlin Conference of the three internationals last week, has been "postponed" until after Easter. This postponement was in response to a request from "Socialists" of Western Europe.

In connection with this approaching political trial, that will no doubt create world-wide interest, the reminiscences of Lydia Konopleva, recently published in the "Pravda," and of Semenov, published in Berlin, are attracting enormous interest.

Launch Terrorist Campaign

Both, according to their own stories, were among the leaders of a small terrorist group of Social Revolutionaries. The "S. Rs," it will be remembered, have always approved assassination as a political weapon—while both Bolsheviks and Mensheviks condemned and forbade it.

At the beginning of 1918, says Semenov, he came to the conclusion that the Soviet organization could be broken by central terrorist blows at leading members of the Government. He decided to organize a campaign of assassination, and approached the Central Committee of the Social Revolutionary Party.

Meanwhile Konopleva had already, she says, asked and obtained sanction to arrange for the assassination of Lenin.

Crimes Repudiated

The plans went forward. But while they were being prepared Volodarsky was murdered by the "S. R." Sergiev—and the "S.R." Central Committee repudiated the murder.

This, says Semenov, was very disconcerting, for half the value of the assassinations would be lost if they were regarded not as the acts of a great party but as the acts of obscure individuals of doubtful motive.

He received assurances, he says, from Gotz that the assassination of Lenin, "in view of its high political importance," would not be disavowed and would, after a certain interval, be openly acknowledged as the work of the party.

On the strength of this assurance Fanny Kaplan carried out her attempt on Lenin's life with poisoned bullets. It failed—and the Central Committee repudiated the deed.

"Fighting Group" Dissolves

Semenov says that he reproached the Committee bitterly. Whereupon Douskoy explained that "the Central Committee considers it has no right to subject the party to being crushed by the Red Terror." Nevertheless, Novikov, Kaplan's accomplice, was asked to furnish a report of the attempt for the party archives.

This was the end of the "fighting group." Konopleva and Semenov both declare that the group broke up and went out of business, angry and disillusioned at having been used as mere tools by a body which was afraid even to acknowledge responsibility for the assassinations which it arranged or approved.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.—Textile strikers gathered at a mass meeting accepted the offer of Thomas Cheetham, local real estate owner, giving them free use of a lot 1,800 by 200 feet for erection of tents to be occupied by workers ejected from their homes for failure to pay rent.

It is some little task that those responsible for the conference have set themselves, a task to which the cleaning of the Augean stables—similar in more than one respect—was child's play. Nevertheless, the Genoa conference is the first honest attempt of the European rulers to repair the damage of the war, and no matter what its results may be, it warrants more than passing notice for the reason that its existence is a confession of the bankruptcy of capitalism, a confession that the revolutionists of the world are right and the imperialists wrong.

Every writer whose mind is not warped by the propaganda of imperialism or who has not prostituted his talents has contended ever since the signing of the armistice that European capitalism could never get back to the status quo ante—to us a favorite phrase of the late Woodrow Wilson; that the rulers must make such concessions to the exigencies of the situation that only the shadow of capitalism would remain. The concessions have not yet been made, but the disintegration of the system has progressed more rapidly than the most pessimistic capitalist is willing to admit.

We now witness the spectacle of Germany at Genoa—the nation that was to be forever outlawed by all self-respecting capitalists and their followers—and, in addition, those arch-criminals of history, the Bolsheviki, are not only present but will actually dominate the gathering.

Russia, you see, has, with the exception of the United States, the only supply of raw materials accessible to the European nations, the raw materials that must be had before there can be a restoration of European economic life. The Bolsheviki have held power in Russia against all the force and treachery that capitalism could muster. They have proved that a government gaining power on the basis of the destruction of capitalism can, in this stage of the world's development, force recognition from its enemies.

The emphasis laid on the statement that the conference at Genoa will deal only with economic questions will bring a smile from everyone aware of the fact that economic and political problems cannot be separated in this day and age. Political rulers deal with economic questions from the political angle; no other attitude on their part is possible; the only delegates who can truthfully say that they represent the economic interests of their country are the Russians, and they hold the trump cards in the shape of the natural resources of Russia—the stake for which the allied imperialists have been gambling since Russia withdrew from the European war.

No one dare predict the outcome of the conference because no sane person can follow the mental processes of lunatics, and most of the delegates to Genoa are slowly recovering from an attack of insanity. Full recognition of and arrangements for unrestricted trade with Russia should be one of the results, but imperialistic rivalries may prevent the consummation of this proposal—the only thing that will rescue the European peoples from the abyss of starvation and misery as long as the present system obtains.

European capitalism is playing with fire. Russian recognition will tend to stabilize capitalism, it is true, but at the same time it will give a new impetus to the revolutionary movements in all countries.

There are the paper currencies of the European governments yet to be deflated and the war debts to be paid. Given a working-class movement with new hope and courage that the forced recognition of the Soviet government will bring and capitalism will be unable to stand the strain.

It is a humble group of imperialists that gather at Genoa.

First Blood at Genoa

Lloyd George calmed the temper of the Genoa Conference on its first day with the assurance that, "Nothing is quite so explosive as a peace conference." And of course the particular form of explosive in vogue at Genoa is oratorical hot air.

Thus, the first day's pyrotechnical display was being graciously received when Soviet Russia's delegation let loose with a loaded shell in the shape of a speech by George Tchitcherin, foreign minister for the Workers' Republic.

"What is the first need of Europe?" Lloyd George had asked, and then answered himself, "Peace—real peace!"

The Russians were ready to meet that need. That is why they had come all the way to Genoa. They considered the Genoa Conference as the forerunner of a universal conference where all serious problems confronting humanity could be discussed.

"Russia is willing to talk disarmament," said Tchitcherin. "She is willing to reduce her army providing other nations reduced theirs and promised to let Russia alone."

That brought the Frenchman, Barthou, to his feet. Treason to the Versailles Peace, and to the League of Nations to discuss disarmament, and a universal conference. And so Barthou wanted to know of Lloyd George if it hadn't been agreed to forget about the question of disarmament, and he wanted a ruling. But first Tchitcherin spoke again:

"We know that at Washington, Briand told Mr. Hughes that France could not cut down her army because Russia had a big one. We thought that if we offered to disarm then France could do so, and we would be helping all around. We are very sorry if we were wrong, and since we have been invited to confer, of course we will abide by the rules."

And then Lloyd George ruled, after making a little speech telling how hard it was to bring the Conference together, and his ruling was:

"Don't let's break it up yet," and so ended the first day.

The Russians got the first blood at Genoa. They unmasked the imperialist diplomats. They exposed the hypocricy of the claim that capitalism's spokesmen are seeking at Genoa "equity, justice and solidarity among the nations."

The Genoa Conference will break up. But the representatives of working-class Russia will let the workers of the world know, in clear language, why it failed.

Four hundred correspondents attending the Genoa Conference will help confuse the newspaper readers of the world as to what it is all about.

[illegible] of the Trade Union Educational League, Author and Leader of the Great Steel Strike, delivered a very interesting address to the militants called together by the New York Branch of the Trade Union Educational League.

The speaker told of his many years' experience in the American unions and described that the unions today, conservative and outworn, suffering under the attack of Capital can be saved only by the militants, whose task it is to stay in the conservative unions and revitalize them. "Many radicals," he stated, "maintain that the struggle against the reactionary machine is futile and the way out for the unions is for the radicals to leave them and build up revolutionary industrial unions."

Close Experience of Miners

"This position is false. The American unions are reactionary, because the radicals have left them. This is brought out by the experiences of the Western Federation of Miners.

"This organization at one time was the most revolutionary in the country. It fought battles that make dramatic reading. Its strikes were pitched battles with the state authorities. They considerably worried the capitalists.

"And yet, hardly more than five per cent were declared revolutionists. But this minority held all the strategic positions in the unions and thru their activity exercised a controlling influence over the masses of that organization.

"Today, the W. F. of M. has sunk down to insignificance. How did this come about? When the I. W. W. was formed the W. F. of M joined the organization. But hardly a year passed, when the Miners left the I. W. W. But the leaders, Haywood and other radicals, remained with the I. W. W.

"The organization was left in the hands of the conservatives and went more to the right until it died out.

Labor Leadership Ossified

The radicals do not seek "jobs." They are genuinely interested in the development and strengthening of the trade union and working class movement. They have vision and a program. Under such circumstances they can and will win the confidence of the unionists. "The leaders of the unions today," said Foster, "are ossified. They are intellectually frozen over. Not a bit of life extends above the hard frozen surface of their minds. They are confused and are at their wits end in the present crisis of labor. The militant reads, understands, is intelligent, has idealism, can sacrifice and has a program, is a dynamic force and if he really applies all this to the struggle of the workers, he cannot help but win."

The problem of the militants is not so much to win the unions, that will be easy enough. It is, what will he do with his control? The American militant is most inexperienced. He has never dealt with masses. He does not even know how to arrange a meeting properly. He believes that the workers can be won over with talk. If he did less talking, if he kept his seat, and his mouth shut more often, and would do more work, his task would be easier. He must participate in the unions, and thru the day-by-day detail work thru close association with the masses, convince the masses that he is a good union man, interested in their welfare."

Re-organize Thru Education

"The idea upon which the League is based, is working within the unions for the reconstruction of the unions thru the education of the workers within, by literature and by example.

"The conservative, reactionary boss of the unions was able to defeat the militant by raising the cry that the latter want to break up the union. He can do so no longer. The politicians of the Chicago Federation of Labor tried to do this last week, against a resolution to amalgamate the unions, but they were defeated and the resolution carried by about 100 to 30. Their attempt to defeat it by reconsideration lost by 114 to 17.

"The American workers are ripe for radical ideas. If the militants get control of the unions they can put their radical philosophy across very easily.

"The American worker will accept it by some complex form of reasoning something like this: He will say, 'Well, John has got nutty ideas, but John is a good union man. He went to jail in the last strike. He works hard in the union. And if his ideas are good enough for him, they are good enough for me.'

Must Offer Practical Program

"Let the militants offer a practical program, participate in labor's everyday struggles with concrete demands, let them learn how to handle masses and his task of radicalizing the unions will be accomplished soon.

The provisional secretary of the Branch, S. Zimmerman, announced that a conference would soon be held of representatives from the Left Wing of the Labor Unions of New York in order to form the League in this city.

[illegible] JOB!

By ELMER T. ALLISON

This article is addressed to the readers of THE WORKER. We are talking to the readers because of their relation to THE WORKER.

The relation of our readers to THE WORKER is, we think, a very definite one; and one which is not expressed in the simple relation of buyer and seller. That relationship is one wholly incompatible with Communist principles or ethics. Indeed, a simple relationship of buyer and seller between THE WORKER and its readers is unthinkable.

As you read this issue, we are sure you do not feel that you merely hold something in your hands which you have paid a bit of money for. To you this issue of THE WORKER is something else than so much printed paper, so much reading matter, so much entertainment and interest.

We believe that you feel that this paper, THE WORKER, is a great deal more than that; that it is something which REPRESENTS YOU and the CAUSE you favor. We believe it speaks FOR YOU—for your class, the working class. It is your voice made articulate to many thousands. It says the things YOU WANT SAID. It does the things you want done. It stands for what you stand for. THE WORKER IS YOUR REPRESENTATIVE. Your working tool. Your fighting weapon.

That, we believe is the true relationship between the vast majority of our readers and THE WORKER.

It's a relationship we want to continue. It is one we want to develop and to see take root in the mind of ever more and more thousands of readers. It is the true revolutionary and communist relationship that should exist between the revolutionary workers and their own press.

True communists, true revolutionists must accept this relationship as a logical one, a necessary one. It is a relationship without which WE AS REVOLUTIONISTS CANNOT WIN.

And Now—What To Do About It.

And now, that we are agreed on the foregoing, our duty is plain. Nothing less than 100 per cent support for THE WORKER is possible from each and every reader—for YOU. Every reader who agrees with the premises stated above, must proceed at once to render MORE SERVICE, MORE SUPPORT to THE WORKER. He must step more aggressively to the fore, find more and newer ways to develop WORKER support, get new readers, spread THE WORKER farther and wider in the ranks of the workers. He must watch for every opportunity to make it possible for THE WORKER to carry the message of communism to the masses of exploited workers.

Ways to Help.

There are so many ways to support THE WORKER, it is quite impossible to enumerate them all here. We will name but a few knowing that in your work you will develop many new good ways which will add much to the sum total of accomplishments.

One unfailing way to render substantial support to THE WORKER is to see that your subscription NEVER EXPIRES. Pay in advance and keep paid so. No unpaid subscription ever helped pay a printer's bill, nor made a paper grow.

Another way is to order a bundle for weekly sales to shopmates and fellow workers. There is scarcely a worker who cannot do this. No more effective work for communism is possible than this. No method promises more for future growth of THE WORKER. Every comrade who takes a bundle of WORKERS and sells them is to be classed as a number one communist worker. THE WORKER now has scores of such comrades on the mailing list, but we need hundreds. Just sit down now and figure up about how many WORKERS you can sell by really trying, then order that many and join the number one class.

Every bundle purchaser must have subscription cards for sale. By doing so he is always prepared to nail a subscriber on the spot. By getting a subscription, he is enabled to pass on to new lists of workers. Subscription cards are printed in three denominations, one year $2.00; six months, $1.00; three months 50s. Order a bunch of them. And while you are ordering, just add to your good work by paying for them in advance.

And there ARE possibilities to make donations to THE WORKER. Now and then even communists have a few spare dollars. Sometimes they waste them, in ways they regret. That's bad. If they would give them to THE WORKER regrets would never assail them. That's just between you and us. As a matter of fact a good many donations DO arrive at THE WORKER office. They come from comrades who realize the usefulness of the paper in this Cause, and who are willing to even sacrifice a bit to make this Cause grow.

And now, pay up your subscription. Order a bundle for sale. Get a bunch of sub cards on hand. Do these and you will have made a good start in the direction WE ARE ALL GOING—toward the revolution. Better "work your way" and have the joy of doing necessary, useful communist work as we near the goal.

Next week we shall deal with concrete methods of work of Workers Party units and THE WORKER.

Famine Scouts

By ROSE PASTOR STOKES

"Are you a Famine Scout? Have you done any twin-scouting yet?

These are questions which are being put to every boy and girl of school age by every friend of Soviet Russia, for the Friends of Soviet Russia are making a drive for the starving children in Russia among the workers' children of America.

The Famine Scout club is the latest thing in children's organizations. So if you find yourself approached by two little highwaymen who "hold you up for money or your pencil stub (pencils are as precious in Russia as the clothes on your back) first make sure that they're twin scouts, then give! That is, if they wear buttons announcing they are famine scouts and can show credentials on blue cards signed Bob Hardy, Famine Scout chief, stamped with the seal of the Friends of Soviet Russia, you may safely give them your nickel, your dime, your dollar, your pencil or your overcoat, confident that its value, without the loss of a penny, will go to feed and clothe and meet the needs of the children in famine-stricken Russia.

Or, if you are a girl or boy who wants to join a Famine Scout club you ask the twin-scouts about it. They are a bright lot of youngsters and they are sure to give you intelligent answers.

First of all they will ask you to write to Bob Hardy, Famine Scout chief, F. S. R., 102 W. 13th St., New York City. Then they will tell you how to organize and to work almost as well as the chief himself could.

From four to any number of boys, or boys and girls, or all girls, may form a Famine Scout club. The members choose their scout leader, the leader writes the scout chief, sending the names, ages and addresses of the members. The chief sends famine scout buttons, credentials for each member, with instructions for work.

The famine scouts go to everybody they know, and to a lot of folks they don't know; in short, to everybody who eats a square meal and to many who don't, and "hold them up" for all the way from 1 cent to $100.

Child Education

By KATE VAN EATON

It is the duty of a school, as one modern educator, "to provide an environment in which the child may get hold of himself as a creative human-being."

We must give our children freedom. Order and discipline, report cards and "assignments" must give way to free-moving about, self-discipline, self-direction, self-criticism. The teacher will provide materials for work, and create an atmosphere of affection and interest and contact with reality. He must be genuinely interested in the children and in his work or, unsustained by the fictitious authority of age and position which enable many indifferent teachers to "get by" now, he will be a complete failure. In such a school, the child, assured of a genuine interest in his work, undeterred by fear of unfavorable criticism, works for the love of the task. He chooses his own work and decides for himself the degree of excellence with which it must be finished.

The completed product is, therefore, really his work—not his effort plus the teacher's standard of perfection, but wholly his. He does not need to sign his name,—any who knows him can recognize him in his work.

It is difficult for us to give up the tradition that because we have lived longer, we know, better than the children, what they should and should not do.

It behooves us, therefore, to look at our present chaos squarely, and acknowledge humbly that children couldn't have made a worse mess of the world.

Then we may turn to them with a hope that if we leave them to develop freely their latent abilities, they may do better. There are schools in which the children work and play and grow, in which the teachers work with the children and learn from them. When our public schools realize that the development of the child is the real aim of education, we may see all of our children growing joyously—not, primarily, into dressmakers and printers, altho they may be dress-makers and printers, too,—not into fearful followers of precedent like ourselves, but first of all, into individuals, self-dependent, self-directing, creative human beings.

[illegible] fate of organized labor as a whole hangs in the balance in the miners' strike.

If this great struggle is won, it will seriously check the "open shop" drive and give the workers a breathing spell in which to organize their scattered and demoralized forces.

But if it is lost the backbone of the labor movement will be broken and the capitalists will have little trouble in demolishing the remaining organizations.

Anti-Labor Forces in California Open New War on Radicals

(By The Federated Press)

OAKLAND, Cal.—The reindictment of six former members of the old Communist Labor party of California by the grand jury here marks the opening of a state-wide fight on radicalism by the Better America Federation.

This organization, with headquarters in Los Angeles, is the most notorious anti-labor group of big business men in the state. It is the driving force behind the perversion of the judiciary in this state.

In November, 1919, a convention was held in this city to establish in California a branch of the Communist Labor party. About a week later nine men, prominent in its formation were arrested on an indictment charging violation of the criminal syndicalism law of the state. Shortly afterwards Charlotte Anita Whitney was arrested separately for the same offense.

Early in January, 1920, Miss Whitney was tried and found guilty. The appeal has been before the appellate court over two years. Miss Whitney has been out on $10,000 property bail.

J. G. Wieler, a member of the boilermakers' union, was next tried and convicted. The appeal was decided adversely by the state supreme court a month ago. He is now in the state penitentiary at San Quentin.

James H. Dolsen, assistant editor, The Rank and File (San Francisco), who had been elected state secretary-Treasurer of the party, was then tried. After five weeks his jury was unable to agree.

Nearly a month later, John C. Taylor, formerly state secretary, Socialist party of California, was convicted under the same indictment. He was released from San Quentin on parole several months ago, his appeal having been denied.

The five other defendants, J. A. Ragsdale, E. B. Smith, C. A. Tobey, F. G. Reed and J. E. Snyder, former editor of the Socialist weekly, The Oakland World, had their cases postponed over two years at the request of the district attorney.

Meanwhile, at the instigation of the district attorney in Oakland, the legislature passed an amendment to the criminal procedure act under which defendants charged in an indictment with the commission of the same offense must be tried jointly.

On Feb. 21 of this year the district attorney acted under it in these cases. That pressure from the Better America federation brought about the new indictment at this late date is certain.

A contributing factor is the coming on of the fall election. Not only is there a governor to be elected, but in Oakland a district attorney to succeed Ezra De Coto, under whose direction the former trials were held.

Objections by the defendants to surrendering their right of trial separately under the old indictment were overruled. Even the fact that James H. Dolsen had already been tried under the former indictment had no effect.

The defendants will act as their own attorneys. The trial date has not yet been set. Every defendant is a native-born American, with an ancestry in this country going back many generations.

Three years ago, in the big steel strike, union labor had its last great struggle with the United States Steel Corporation, the industrial monster that the miners are now fighting.

At that time the workers were on the offensive, plunging straight at the heart of that immense organization, the very citadel of non-unionism in this country.

Victory would have wrecked the "open shop" forces, and it would have been easily won by a little display of solidarity.

But the trade union leaders proved utterly unequal to the occasion. They had no understanding or appreciation of the issues involved.

When the supreme test came, they and their organizations, especially the miners and railroad men, stood aside indifferent and allowed the steel workers' unions to be cut to pieces. It was a great opportunity lost, a great defeat suffered.

Now the penalty is being paid for this criminal stupidity. This time the fight against the steel trust is purely a defensive one, and fought under incomparably worse economic circumstances than was the steel strike.

Organised labor is in a corner, fighting desperately against great odds. And if in this crisis it shows the same stupid shortsightedness that it did in the steel strike, the miners' union will be surely crushed.

BUT THIS MUST NOT BE.

LABOR MUST AROUSE ITSELF.

IN THIS STRUGGLE IT MUST ADOPT AS ITS SLOGAN, "THEY SHALL NOT PASS."

Every resource of the entire labor movement must be put at the disposal of the miners.

The railroad men must refuse to haul scab coal, the other trades must give their moral and financial support.

The miners' strike must be won at all costs. Its loss would mean the ruin of the labor movement for decades to come and the definite victory of the industrial autocracy.

IN THIS GREAT COAL MINERS' STRIKE, THE VERY EXISTENCE OF THE LABOR MOVEMENT IS AT STAKE.

The Public and the Miners

Coal miners in the Pittsburgh district earned an average of $762.00 in 1921. They were allowed to work only 123 days but they had to be ready for the call of the whistle the year around. Many people do not know that a miner is never allowed to know whether he is to work or not until the whistle of the mine blows "work" or "no work" in the morning.

In Ohio the miners averaged 119 days and earned $550.00. In West Virginia they averaged 80 days and earned $500.00 for the year. In Tennessee one-third of the miners averaged less than a third of the working time and their average earnings were $105.00 per month.

Incomes of this size ensure only the most miserable existence at the starvation level and yet the miners are always spoken of by the capitalist press as "highly paid workers."

Let us now look at the incomes of some of the coal companies in the Pittsburgh and other districts. "Capital and labor are to make equal sacrifices during periods of adversity," and we should find the coal barons living from hand to mouth as the miners do.

The Lehigh Valley Coal Company reduced production between 1912 and 1920; yet this poverty-stricken corporation reduced its bonded debt from $20,000,000 to $11,500,000, increased the value of its property from $5,500,000 to $12,000,000 and paid dividends of 190 per cent.

The Philadelphia and Reading Coal Company increased production from 1912 to 1920 about 6 per cent., and at the same time it increased its surplus from $1,500,000 to $25,000,000, a gain of 1700 per cent. The value of its property increased from $9,500,000 to $33,500,000 or 360 per cent.

The Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company decreased production from 1912 to 1920 about 30 per cent, but it managed to increase its surplus from $3,500,000 to $27,000,000 or approximately 900 per cent. To its starving stockholders it paid dividends of 305 per cent.

The Temple Coal Company decreased production 35 per cent in eight years but raised the rate of income on its capital stock from 29.3 per cent in 1912 to 121 per cent in 1920.

In the above facts the public is manifesting some little interest since the miners struck; it is the habit of this public to arouse itself whenever any body of workers are struggling to protect themselves from a further descent into the pit of social degradation. Only when the matter is brought home to it in terms of struggle does the public ever concern itself over the welfare of the men and women who do the work of the world. It deplores the necessity for industrial strife if it even concedes the necessity, but does it ever do anything? Never. Why?

Because the public is nothing more or less than the creature of the capitalist press of a country and does and says the things that press wants done and said. Every ignorant mouther of the headlines and catch-phrases of the capitalist press considers himself part of the public, but it is only the two organized groups in society who have any real influence—organized labor and organized capital.

If the public wants representation let it become part of one or the other of the organized bodies; the issues will then be clarified and the struggle can be fought out on well-defined lines.

The public will neither win nor lose the coal strike. It is not the public that is organizing the non-union districts but the United Mine Workers of America. It is not the public that is using the state constabulary of Pennsylvania or the militia of New Mexico. It is the organized capitalist class, working thru their instrument—the capitalist state.

At this writing the United Mine Workers are demonstrating rather successfully that organization is the prime requisite in any struggle and that the public is entitled to just about the amount of consideration it gets as long as it remains apathetic in the face of the greatest industrial crisis in history, remains neutral or hostile when the organized workers are fighting a life and death battle.

Those French diplomats and imperialists are a touchy lot. They resent even the Pope having a desire that some good may come out of the Genoa Conference, that it may lead to universal peace, to disarmament, claiming that the "best guarantee of tranquility is not a forest of bayonets." The French must have their forests of bayonets, their armies, their navy. But it wouldn't hurt to let the Pope talk about disarmament. Since when did capitalism and imperialism go to church for their ethics and morals?

The Wisconsin State Journal is demanding that the Social Science Club at the University of Wisconsin be disbanded. Its crime is inviting "radical" speakers to address it. Thus does the prostitute press act as procurer in its efforts to seduce an educational institution, until it, too, shall be a willing and unresisting member of the "Brass Check" fraternity.

Tool Collection Week Is Set for May 1-7; Help Russia Produce

The International Workers' Relief Committee has notified the Friends of Soviet Russia that May 1-7 has been arranged as the "International Tool Collection Week for Soviet Russia."

The great scarcity of agricultural implements and industrial machinery has led to the proclamation of a week for collecting tools of every character. But from America there will be the particular demand for funds for purchasing tractors and plows, without which Soviet Russia will not be able to raise the crops needed to prevent a famine next year.

The idea must be propagated during the Genoa Conference, in order to counteract the intentions and machinations of the capitalist governments, whose intentions at Genoa are obvious. The culmination must come during the week that has long been regarded as the "Holiday of Labor."

To Raise Production in Russia

"The struggle against the famine in Soviet Russia," runs the appeal, "has entered upon a new phase. . . . The worker who has been hardened by the struggle and sufferings of his own class is touched more by the misery of the Russian proletariat, though he does not know how to help. The famine cannot be fought by charity alone. Some hundred thousands of people may be saved while millions are perishing and the catastrophe grows from day to day.

"Comrades, laboring masses of the world! The cry for bread, the struggle for bare existence is being drowned in the cry for PRODUCTION, for working capacity, for labor! Support our reconstruction! Assist us in providing bread! Your means are small compared with those of world capital. Yet you have something which capital lacks, your class-consciousness, your solidarity for productive assistance, if you, the working class, will undertake to assist Russia in its reconstruction . . .

Workers Can Achieve Task

"With the food that you have collected, we are commencing to organize and enliven the work in the famine-stricken districts. Home industry is being reorganized, collective farms are being formed, in factories the workers of which have fled or died of starvation, work is being started again. The farms are being prepared for work in the spring. We lack not only food for those who do the work, but still more the means of production with which bread can be produced. The working class should finish what it has set about to do. We are now creating centers of production and in the midst of a tired and exhausted population are establishing nuclei of production which will be the centers of fresh initiative and relief for the starvng workers and peasants of the famine-stricken districts. The working class alone can assist us in this work. Otherwise the capitalists will coin the famine into profits and turn it into a new weapon against the working class.

Relief Army Being Organized

"Workingmen and working women throughout the world! Do not forget that your future will be decided on the front of the famine in Russia! We need tools, material and tractors for industrial and agricultural enterprises, the reconstruction of which we have undertaken. Send us, above all, means of transport, one-ton motor trucks. We are also in need of fodder for the horses and grain and vegetable seed for the spring sowing. But not this alone. We are also in need of your labor power. Send us specialists, industrial and agricultural organizers! Fit our groups of workers with tools and food and send them to our assistance. A labor army of the International Workers' Relief Committee is being organised.

Workers Face Gigantic Task

"Delegate groups of workers from your midst to form a living and active bond of solidarity based upon you, upon the workers in the shops, upon the workers in the industrial centers and lastly upon the workers of the entire country. It is a gigantic task that the working class has to accomplish. Yet you will be strengthened by fulfilling it. It will inspire you with class-consciousness. You are now confronted with a new practical task of the united Front of Labor on an international scale. It will inevitably weld the working class together. . . .

No Time Dare Be Lost

"There is no time to be lost. In spring the problem will be decided. Shall we then be able to work? Will the masses of workers and peasants in the famine-stricken districts then be able to work? It depends upon your assistance."

Billy Sunday to the Rescue

The coal operators have asked Billy Sunday to invade the West Virginia coal fields in the name of the Lord and preach to the miners of that sorely disturbed territory.

The revival campaign would consist of three two-week sessions in the Williamson, Logan and Cabin Creek districts, and the operators apparently believe that a good dose of old-fashioned hell-fire religion is just what the miners need to make them long for pie in the sky to such an extent that the questions of wages, hours and little minor matters of that kind would be forgotten.

We are inclined to differ with them. Reports from the coal fields of West Virginia indicate that for anyone compelled to live and work under the domination of the coal barons there, hell would have no terrors.

There is another thing that occurs to us. The great saver of souls at a liberal price per soul has been invited to West Virginia because the coal barons think he is cheaper than troops. If some of the miners should happen to think that Bill was scabbing on the militia and gunmen they might possibly give him an opportunity to prove by first-hand experience the truth or otherwise of his theories of salvation.

Our advice to Bill is to stay in districts where the people are not quite so primitive and where an effete civilization encourages fakerism as long as it works for the benefit of the profit system.

We would hate to see Billy Sunday cut off at a time when the sucker crop in all the large centers gives promise of being unusually large and if we were Bill we would let the West Virginia miners go to the devil; especially as they are on strike just now even in the non-union districts and are apt to be a little impatient with anyone who, as Bill must, preaches the necessity of going back to work on the terms of the sweet-souled bosses who, according to the Sunday doctrine, are the Lord's anointed.

What Are Possibilities of United Trade Union Front?

EDITOR'S NOTE:—Olaf O. Lian, the president of the Norwegian Trade Union Federation who, commissioned by his organization and the Communist International, has been in negotiation with the Bureau of the Amsterdam International Federation, with a view to setting up a united proletarian front in the international trade-union movement, has just returned home from his journey. Referring to the course of the negotiations in an interview with a representative of the "Social Demokraten," Lian stated among other things that:—

By OLAF O. LIAN

President, Norwegian Trade Union Federation

The Conference took place in the premises of the Belgian Trade Union Federation at Brussels. There were present Jouhaux, Mertens, Fimmen and Oudegeest. Jouhaux acted as chairman.

Our communication to the Amsterdam International and the Red Trade Union International formed the basis of the discussion. I was the first to be called on to speak and expounded the reasons which had induced us to take the initiative in calling a World Congress. I proposed that as the first step in this direction a preliminary conference consisting of representatives of the R. T. U. I., International Trade Union Federation and of the Norwegian Trade Union Federation should be called.

What should this conference deal with? Before everything the coming together of a World Congress at which also America and Russia should be represented. The Conference should in addition draw up a provisional agenda for the Congress.

What was the attitude of Amsterdam with regard to this? First, they wished to know the program of this proposed Congress. That will be decided on by the preliminary conference, I answered. But I proceeded from the standpoint that the position of the trade-unions with regard to the League of Nations and the International Labor Bureau ought to be one of the chief topics. After that the question of international trade-union tactics, the collaboration of all the chief trade-union groups, further the question of building up a real positive Trade Union International.

And the result of the Conference? Well, you have seen my dispatch. tho the Bureau was not so strongly opposed to the resolutions as you here at home probably believe. All present declared themselves quite willing to meet the representatives of the Russian Trade Unions in a Conference. The words "bona fide" signify in their opinion representatives actually chosen by the Russian trade-unions and none who are constantly residing abroad, not emigrants, politicians and such like but real representatives of the Russian trade-unions. That was the declaration which I received. "Thus one would hear nothing of a Conference with the R.T.U.I.?" No, their opinion was that the R.T.U.I. only consisted of one national organization, that is to say the Russian, altho possibly some smaller countries might be attached to it. All the remaining national centres belong to Amsterdam. They pay their affiliation fees to the Amsterdam Bureau and that equally for the minorities within the various national organizations sympathizing with Moscow.

I observed that it was not necessary to stick to such formulas. If the Moscow International consisted only of Russian trade-unions the result would be that only real representatives of the Russian trade-unions would appear at the Conference. The Bureau did not agree to that. But I still believe it premature to think our attempts for forming a united trade-union front will be abortive. Other methods must be found in order to proceed in the direction indicated.

Do you think of a definite mode of procedure? I do. There are many courses open. Our Norwegian Secretariat could invite the representatives of the Russian comrades and the Amsterdamers to a sitting in Christiania. So far as I could understand the Amsterdamers have no objections to a meeting with the Russian representatives, with a view to calling a World Congress. It is true that my work in Brussels was rendered more difficult by our not having heard anything positive from the R.T.U.I.

Did you hear anything else that was of interest? Yes. Fimmen will come to Christiania by the end of March. Afterwards he is to take part in an International Conference of the Transport Workers in Stockholm. At the end of April or beginning of May, he will assist at the Congress of the All-Russian Transport Workers' Federation.

Many tokens indicate that the idea of an united trade-union front has taken root and is growing in all countries. In this respect the Brussels Conference was of significance. There was no bitterness or animosity shown during the conference, and there was but little confidence in the League of Nations. That, at any rate, was my impression.

Court Ruling Gives New Hope in Mooney Case

By RICHARD ROHMAN

(Special to The Worker)

SAN FRANCISCO.—An important and far-reaching precedent has just been established by the California District Court of Appeals which is likely to obtain the freedom of Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings, militant labor leaders who were condemned to life imprisonment upon perjured testimony.

Almost coincident with the filing of Tom Mooney's appeal, before the same court, seeking to upset the decision by a lower court denying a writ of audita querela, came the Court of Appeals' decision ordering a re-trial in the case of Thomas Brady, convicted of assault in the notorious Howard Street case. Brady had been convicted on perjured testimony which District Attorney Matthew I. Brady had sought to conceal. Today Brady is free on very nominal bail, pending a re-trial which is certain to clear him of the crime charged.

The only difference between the status of the Mooney-Billings defense and that of the Howard Street defendant, from a purely legal point of view, is that perjury in the Mooney case was not discovered and established until after the statutory period for applying for a new trial had expired. In the case of Brady, it was discovered during the progress or shortly after the trial.

But, as Byron C. Parker, attorney for Mooney, convincingly points out, perjury is perjury and the victim, no matter how much time had elapsed, is entitled to a remedy. In the Howard Street case, the remedy was obtained under the law; in the Mooney frame-up, the relief is sought in equity.

It will be extremely difficult for the District Court of Appeals to deny the petition for Mooney in the face of its decision in the Brady case. The jurists, Langdon, Sturtevant and Nourse, were quite violent in their condemnation of the lower court for ruling out, during the process of the trial, evidence to show perjury by a prosecution witness. In upsetting the conviction, the Court of Appeals invoked with an unusually religious fervor the "rights of man" and so on.

MANCHESTER, N. H.—A proposed merger of all unions in the shoe industry was endorsed unanimously by three locals of the United Shoe Workers of America, representing a majority of the operatives in this city. John McCudden, secretary, Manchester group, announced.

The coming of Communism means the going of wage slavery.

Let no one think that the organizing in the non-union fields is child's play. The men who go in and do the work must contend with the state constabulary, the mine guards and the special deputies whom all the sheriffs—with a few shining exceptions—swear in at the request of the coal companies. The company control of a coal camp is absolute, yet these organizers, armed only with a resolute purpose and carrying nothing but the message of solidarity, are steadily defeating all the forces the coal owners can mobilize. When the history of the labor movement of America is written there will be no more glorious chapter than that telling of the work of these men who risked daily their freedom and their lives for their union—their sole weapon against the whole power of American capitalism.

In the Star Junction district, Fayette County, where there has been no union since the Knights of Labor made their last stand, Bill Hynes, Executive Board member of District No. 5, organized a local union and called a mass meeting after he had been run off of company property by armed guards. THE MINE CLOSED DOWN.

All over the district similar incidents are occurring, and it is little wonder that the operators are even failing to take advantage of their usual weapon—denial of the miners' claims and a campaign of propaganda thru the most servile publicity medium in the world—the Pittsburgh press.

Steel production here will be entirely suspended by Saturday for lack of coke. This is the best gauge of the success of the strike.

DISCUSS "UNITED FRONT"

Editor, The Worker:—The last meeting of the English Branch, Yorkville Section, Workers Party was characterized by a heated discussion on the proposal of the City Central Committee to form a temporary alliance of all parties and organizations believing in independent political action for the workers.

It was pointed out in the discussion that to form such an alliance at a time when the revolutionary vanguard is but in the process of being organized would spell the death knell of the revolutionary movement in America.

To help elect the Hillquits and Londons and Claessens at a time when we have no appreciable influence, even among organized labor and immediately after a most sensational break with these elements, would mean nothing less than treason to the revolutionary movement in America.

In addition to the "Worker Week," the branch is also making a subscription campaign. Subscription cards were distributed and every member urged to bring in all subscriptions which he receives to the next branch meeting.

Our Educational program was postponed, due to the long discussion, and Comrade Berg will be expected to begin the discussion on "The Dictatorship of the Proletariat and the Peasant" at the next meeting which will be held April 19th, at 143 East 103rd St., New York City.

Branch Organizer.

[illegible] of the contemplated move.

Above all, however, unity became a fact because it answers a crying need of the times, because conditions in Europe leave the working class no other choice.

They must unite, or allow the powerful flood of capitalist reaction to sweep everything before it. Only a strong, well organized labor movement can hope to ward off further wage reductions and to stem the flood of attacks upon the organizations of the working class.

Then there is Soviet Russia. The victorious Allies—of that there can be no doubt—fully intended to use the Genoa Conference to bring pressure to bear upon the Soviet Republic for its final and complete industrial subjection.

For this move the crafty Lloyd George counted upon the support—or at any rate upon the silent assent—of the "labor parties" and of the right Social-Democrats of the European nations.

That explains the flattering reception accorded to Rathenau in London. The flattering propositions made to Germany—where the Social-Democrats are still influential—by France, for the mutual exploitation of Russia by a German-French Corporation allow no other interpretation.

In this critical situation there was no choice. Some means must be found of co-ordinating those proletarian groups and Socialist parties that exercise political influence or can bring industrial pressure to bear upon their governments.

The Labor Parties and the Social-Democrats, on the other hand, were in no position to repel the offered hand of friendship.

They feared that the leaders of the Russian revolutionary government might enter into contracts and complete arrangements that would possibly react unfavorably upon industrial conditions in their own countries.

Germany, for instance, cannot count upon industrial rehabilitation for years to come unless the Versailles treaty undergoes radical alteration. For Austria this holds doubly true in regard to the treaty of St. Germaine.

The French and British working classes, again, fear the competition of German and Austrian starvation wages,—that product of Mark depreciation, more even than their own capitalist class.

Furthermore, even the farthest right of Social-Democracies has a lively interest in the continued existence of Soviet Russia. Not that they feel its greatness and its promise to the proletariat. On the contrary, in their eyes the unpleasant accompaniments far outweigh its achievements.

But they are directly interested in its continued existence, nevertheless, for it is invaluable as a scarecrow with which the capitalist class of their own countries can be bluffed into some show of reason.

In their meetings and in their conferences, in their parliaments and in their press they have operated with the "Bolsheviki" bugaboo on every occasion. And effectively. Capitalism has always submitted with more or less good grace to the lesser evil.

The unity conference bases its plans of action upon seven points of unification. "No. 1" calls for the election of a committee of nine for the arrangement of an international proletarian congress at which all communist, socialist, syndicalist and labor parties are to be represented.

The outcome of this Congress—let us not give way to extravagant hopes—will be meager enough. The elements to be brought together are fundamentally inimical.

Since the Congress must, above all, emphasize the united will of all [illegible] definitely expressed objects, everything will have to be avoided that may create differences of opinion, and all resolutions and motions will have to be so carefully adjusted, balanced, and counter-balanced that they will lose all practical significance and force.

The concessionists of former international congresses will be outdone. The resolutions that are finally adopted will be more ambiguous, more colorless than ever. They will be characterized by the same ineffectuality and meaninglessness of all such "unanimously" adopted motions.

The second point pledges the Executive Committees of the three Internationals to establish amicable relations between the Amsterdam and the Red Trade Union Internationals and to do away, as much as possible, with friction between the two wings.

Only a short time ago Moscow attempted to establish such a labor union united front. Ole O. Lian, the chairman of the Norwegian labor union movement, in acordance with instructions from his own organization and from the Communist International, made overtures to the Amsterdam bureau.

He told his experiences, later, to a representative of the Norwegian "Social Demokraten." The conference was held in the Labor Union House in Brussels. Among those present were Jouhaux, Mertens, Fimmen, Oudequest and others.

Lian proposed to them the calling of a preparatory conference consisting of representatives of the Red Trade Union International, of the Amsterdam and of the Norwegian labor union movements.

The conference was to discuss the calling of a world congress of labor unions. Both America and Russia were to be called upon to send representatives.

The Amsterdamers were by no means opposed to a world congress, provided the Red Trade Union Congress was disregarded, since it "represents nothing and nobody." They were willing to grant spokesmen to the Russian labor unions.

Lian left the conference without securing a single concession. It is possible that all this may change under the impression made by the Berlin program. But nothing can change the arrogance that still persists in regarding the Red Trade Union International as non-existent.

The same difficulty is experienced in the desire to avoid clashes between the parties. So long as these are so many different elements that cannot be united into an organization whole, so long friction will be unavoidable.

We might possibly conceive of reasonably harmonious relations between the parties of the Third and of the Second and a Half International.

On the other hand, we can see not even the remotest likelihood of united action between communists and the socialists of the Second International.

The general strike that put an end to the Kapp putch and the recent German railway strike are two examples. In both instances the marriage was dissolved before the honeymoon was over. Experience has shown that these social-democratic parties, once they have whetted their appetites by a taste from the government troughs, become more and more conservative and unsocialistic. The tendency of their development is never toward radicalization.

The differences between the revolutionary and the reformist working-class movements become then greater, more obvious and more ineradicable. Silence, and complete abandonment of their principles and methods would be the price communist parties and organizations would have to pay, that this friction may be avoided.

Points three and four dealing with the fate of indicted revolutionaries in Russia are unimportant, since the Soviet Government has long ago declared that these counter-revolutionary "heroes" shall receive open and public trial, and that they shall be accorded every legal protection.

No death penalty threatens these assassins of the "right," however, richly they may have deserved it. The Bolsheviki judge crimes of four years standing with the utmost mildness. They have no desire to emulate Ebert, the Bavarian Hoffmann and Noske.

Besides, the political situation at the present time would make it more than foolhardy to undertake to punish acts committed in the first revolutionary period too severely.

Point five calls, as we have mentioned before, for a political demonstration on April 20th, which will certainly call forth a tremendous response — in Europe, altho the slogans and objects are of signif-

• • • •

There is something fascinating about the call for a united front. It hypnotizes us and the hope stirs softly within us that the time may come again when there will be only one Socialist party and one International.

But the supporters of neither the Third nor the Second International are thinking of organic unity, of an amalgamation of organizations.

Their sole purpose is a co-ordination of efforts between the various parties and organizations for certain definite aims and demands.

They emphatically declare that there is no conceivable possibility of doing away with existing separate party organizations, that to do this would mean to betray the principles that each party in contrast to other internationals and other parties, upholds and propagates.

The party splits in the various countries did not arise out of personal issues. The leaders did not precipitate disharmony in otherwise united movements.

Revolutionary socialists all over the world were forced by a precipitation of events to realize that the existing Socialist movement had become reformistic and anti-revolutionary. Socialist reformers had defeated the world revolution. The victorious Russian revolution was thrown backward in its development for decades by the weakness and the betrayal of the West European working class.

The Third International and its parties have set out to teach the proletariat of the world anew, to familiarize it with the A B C of revolutionary, of Marxian Socialism, to replace a phantastic romanticism with the hard necessity of preparing for the social revolution. They have only just begun. Nowhere have they even approached completion.

And yet the role of a united front has frequently been misinterpreted. Here in the United States the same over-enthusiastic elements that frantically preached "armed uprisings" only a few years ago, and prophesied the coming of the social revolution in this country "in a few months" as an absolute certainty, are now rejoicing at the prospect of a united front.

In the last meeting of the Central Committee of the Workers' Party of Greater New York, for instance, a motion was made demanding the united front for the November campaign.

It was proposed to unite the Workers' Party, the Socialist Party, the Socialist Labor Party, the Farmer-Labor Party, and other working-class bodies upon one ticket to oppose the capitalist enemy.

Under existing conditions this would give the reformistic group the upper hand. The Socialist Party, altho its membership has dwindled so rapidly that it is, to-day, less than one-half of what the Workers' Party has already organized, has still managed to maintain its name and prestige before the public, an asset that would weigh heavily in the balance against the communists who are still practically unknown before the public.

Then, too, in an atmosphere where political suppression still threatens the revolutionists, the reformistic wing would undoubtedly dominate the campaign and would practically annihilate any attempts at revolutionary propaganda.

A campaign of this sort would mean the denial of political action as a means of propaganda for revolutionary socialism. It would reduce parliamentarism to the level of election politics pure and simple, with neither revolutionary meaning nor revolutionary aims.

The movers of the motion have still failed to realize that there is a great difference between Europe and America, that the methods that are a necessity in Europe are an impossibility here.

The Communist movement in the United States was shipwrecked in the year of its launching because it slavishly copied European methods and swallowed unthinkingly European ideas.

Let us beware, lest we wreck our movement again by making the same mistake!

By JAY BEE

Peace on earth, and a good will among men, or call it—Genoa. Of course, with mental reservations. And never you mind the incidental clashes Russia and France, or France and Britain at the opening session of the Genoa Conference. These were only well calculated accidents (diplomats can do even that) to accentuate the peace talk that is to come. So genuine peace talk will follow the initial scraps at Genoa, as certain as day, for you cannot conveniently start a good brand new war without having had, at least for a while, a semblance of peace; and war is what they want. Thusly the assembled statesmen—the vanguard of the consolidated camps of usurers, sweatshoppers, grocers and vamps of all other sorts—are laboring arduously to restore peace since war they must have. And the militarists and the nationalists and the other species of the venerable capitalist-political zoology are seeing to it that no wrong be done to anything or anybody on the peace that will open the way to war. Mainly—the balance of power shall not be disturbed, that is the show is to be run in no such fashion that would overrun the ambitions of those who can well afford to be ambitious. Equal opportunity to be guaranteed to everybody, who is somebody, equal opportunity — to swallow three-quarters of two-thirds of one's beloved "equal" neighbors. That much will be accomplished at Genoa. And more—hardly.

• • • •

Surely some other problems could be tackled at Genoa. The place of German capital in the run of the world's capitalism could be approached advantageously. And a guess might be ventured on the fate of capitalism under the rule of the Soviets, But Genoa will not go too far, if at all in that direction. It will not open credits to Russia just because Tchitcherin put on a high-hat or because Trotzky will talk in low, soft tones. And the recuperation of Germany will have to come from elsewhere not withstanding the fact that Germany "sits in" with the high dignitaries of the League of Nations on an equal footing. Europe is sick beyond recovery, and its leaders seek not to heal the grave wound: they are laboring for a grand funeral, whatever else they may think they are doing. Capitalist Europe with Soviet Russia won't mix. Either one will go, or none will rest at ease. Which, of course, won't prevent the gentry around the tables at Genoa from playing the game and stacking the cards. And to this extent, and from this view point the conference will undoubtedly be successful.

France has no unemployment. Germany knows of none of it. Italy is facing "normalcy" even if it is of a poor caliber. The statelets of the second or third order, that had been known as neutrals during the war or came to be afterwards, are for the present negligible quantities. And Hungary and Roumania and Czecho-Slovakia, are turning more and more into self-sufficient self-enclosed states with a system of natural economy as the basis of their existence. Who, then, needs Russia, and what is the price one will pay for recognition of Russia? It is only England that needs the Russian market and Germany that would be able to get it. But England won't let Germany have it, and she won't pay herself the price of getting the market. The price is not a negligible one. It is a formidable one, considered entering of the old order. Trade with Russia means unlimited credits to Russia and unbounded opportunities to what Russia stands for: Sovietism, whether she professes it openly or not. Does England want it? Of course, the question leads to another one: Who is England? If David Lloyd George is England he certainly does not want it. But perhaps there is somebody in the United Kingdom that does not want David Lloyd George to be England? Well, that he or they will have to speak up, And not until other voices are heard, not until the workmen of England speak up, will the England that be care to pay the price for trade with Russia. And there will be none to speak of, the Genoa conference notwithstanding.

Russia has two valuable though intangible assets to offer to the international traders: (1) Sovietism, (2) repudiation of the revolution. It need not advertise the first one: prospective traders know it when they see it. But it will have to be [illegible] on the other item, which [illegible] won't do. And thus we may expect many other conferences to come and go.

"Russia looks well—little more was to be expected at the public preliminary," this a dispatch from Genoa contentedly informs the world. "Russia's debut, diplomatically, at the conference was a pictorial success. In morning coat and top hat, literally and figuratively, the Soviets delegations made a suave, conciliatory impression in the atmosphere of diplomatic graces that opened the conference this morning with a fanfare of trumpets."

The reporter neglected to mention the background of the "pictorial success" that was to no means a degree responsible for the success. It is the well drilled, and splendidly fighting, three million strong Red Army.

Arthur Brisbane in the "American":

"Mr. Hillquit, Socialist leader of New York State, one of the most able, a really educated man, forgets history when he advocates taking over the government and substituting workers for professional politicians."

"Professional politicians are bad enough, but 'workers' would be worse. They know it. Nobody knows better than Mr. Hillquit that every career requires training, also that for everything worth while you must have trained minds back of you. Mr. Hillquit is a successful lawyer, representing the greatest coal selling concern, because his ancestors in Russia and elsewhere have been THINKING, for two or three thousand years."

It did not require thousands of years of thinking for Hillquit or his ancestors to enable him to represent the other concern he represents—the Socialist Party of the U. S. So one would gather from Brisbane's remarks. And while it is not a very much going or selling concern and its output is not half as black as coal, it is nevertheless at least as intelligent a proposition as the Burns Brothers Coal Co. So why be unjust to the man who is certainly less rewarded for his service to the Socialist Party than he is for service to the Burns Brothers Coal Co.? Or does Brisbane mean to imply that Hillquit exhibited less ability in serving the Socialist Party than in serving the greatest coal selling concern? It may be true. But Arthur knows that two or three thousand years of thinking will not bring one an iota nearer the greatest coal selling concern, whereas a couple of thousand of dollars and a few clever suggestions at incorporation, suggesting how to go around the thing you don't care to face, will turn the trick For it is, in such cases a matter of trickery, first, last and all the time. Hillquit knows it, and Arthur Brisbane knows it So why say it differently. Or—is it a part of the game?

The "inquiring reporter" approached four notable citizens on the topic of "United Front." Here is what he got away with:

1. Julius Gerber, a Socialist by trade and "political worker" by calling, resides within reach of the Forward. He said in substance: We old-time Socialists are well versed in economics, and my reaction to your proposed question I will sum up thus: It is all right if it is a united fund.

2. Benjamin Schlesinger, a great man loved at a great distance, just abhors publicity, an S. P. adherent for what it is worth. He said in part: Yes, unity is the command of the hour. They seem all to have united in those local elections. But it is just the wrong way that they went. Yes, wrong, not left. I am myself a left winger, but I will certainly cut short their wings. Just watch. See me some other time.

3. Meyer London, a Congressman, in fact the Congressman, he so himself unblushingly admits. He is very busy, unless you are willing to walk with him for a few hours. He had to say this much: United front? Yes, they will include the water front into the 12th Congressional district, and here you will have it. No, I am for the united front, always have been. I hope I get rid of them all. That crazy East Side!

4. Joseph Panken, a smiling lawyer, not recognized leader, lovely fellow, and practising judge. He said: United front? It is all bunk, but all right, so long as I am in the front. Want a cigar?

The Object of the Proletarian Dictatorship

It is the task of the Proletari Dictatorship to wrest from the ca italists the control and ownership industry and to bring these industri into Communal ownership.

With this Communal ownership must develop as quickly as possib the control and management of in dustry by the workers organized in industrial unions.

As the power of the capitalists i industry is ended and Communis is developed, the Proletarian Dicta torship becomes unnecessary an ceases to function.

The state is no longer an organ ization of force but ceases to exis except as it becomes the organ fo co-ordination and administration Communist industry.

AT THE RAND SCHOOL

Editor, The Worker.—March 2 at about 12.15 P. M., I was walkin up and down at the People's Hous doing my duty as a picket, in th fight against the Rand School, alone, speaking to nobody, when a officer of "Law and Order" came u to me and placed me under arrest.

I was forced to go to the 22 Str. Station House. There they in formed me that I had to be brou up to Court for Trial, and so I ed in the Yorkville Court that afternoon.

A day previous to this incident was arrested with 6 of my comrade and the identical thing happened t us all. We were brought to court placed before the Judge and fine $5 each.

March 24th. I was picketing the same place, with the signs my back with the inscriptio "WORKERS OF THE PEOPLE' HOUSE ON STRIKE—PUBLI SERVICE ORGANIZATION the same thing that previously curred to me, came into effect time.

I was placed under arrest, broug to court, was fined $10 instead $5. The nice scheme they had bring before the Judge was that should have said to some of gang which always hangs around Rand School, you are a fine cialist, and another swore that tried to poison him, because claims that I said to him that I something into his soup.

These two witnesses, which I nothing more than Scheidema swore that blue is black, and th white is green, and the attorney w tried his best to get me sent aw for life I suppose, got all strung that time the Judge said that the O ganization as such has a right strike and sentence was pronounce at $10. This the gentlemen fro the Rand School did not like at a I think the reason the Judge posed the $10 fine was because I h been working for the emancipatio of the working class for 8 months $18 per week, and thought that could afford this small amount, an all this is what I got in return for it

But I don't care a rap about it. I I ever get a chance to fight you, M Socialist, believe me, I will d

Workers Party Aids Strikers in Textile and Coal War Zones

Immediately on the heels of the first strike call in the Textile and Coal industries, the Workers' party sent some of its ablest organizers to look after party interests there. Three district organizations, Five, Six and Ten, are devoting almost their entire attention to this task.

William F. Dunne, labor editor of the party organ, "The Worker," has been assigned to the Pennsylvania district in co-operation with District Organizer Fred Merrick.

Charles Baker and T. R. Sullivan, organizers of the Ohio and Southern Illinois fields, are on the road themselves and preparing for additional help.

In quite a number of towns the miners have extended special invitations to our speakers and the meetings have been held in their own halls, with local union officials presiding. All of the so-called "anti-Red" activity ascribed to the union officials is thus far the invention of the capitalist press. The Workers Party speakers seek no partisan advantage or division, but direct their message to the increase of class consciousness and class solidarity.

Harrison in Textile Field

Caleb Harrison, National Secretary of the Party, is engaged in the Textile field and sends in an interesting report on the efforts of the Workers Party members among the strikers to create a united front of labor among the six unions now engaged in the struggle.

This form of activity means practically no income to balance the very considerable expense, but it represents the most fundamental and essential form of activity in which the party can engage. The stimulation of the sale of organization stamps, and other contributions to the National Office by all our units is absolutely necessary if the work is to be carried forward. Send in all money intended for the National Office at once.

ROBERT MINOR ON TOUR.

An extensive lecture tour, the proceeds of which go toward making the party organ, "The Worker," into a daily paper, has been undertaken by Robert Minor, labor's fighting cartoonist, and member of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party.

Some of his dates follow: April 16th, Newark, N. J.; 17th, Bridgeport, Conn.; 18th, New Haven, Conn.; 19th, Paterson, N. J.; 20th, Trenton, N. J.; 21st, Reading, Pa.; 22nd, Philadelphia, Pa.; 23rd, Philadelphia, Pa., and 24th, Baltimore, Md.

MAY DAY DEMONSTRATIONS

From all parts of the country come reports of the launching of comprehensive plans for May Day demonstrations.

Most of these are in co-operation with other working class organizations in harmony with the "united front" tactic of the Third (Communist) International.

New York, Chicago, Detroit, Philadelphia, Boston, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Brocton, Mass., these are only a few of those already reporting and asking for speakers.

Some of the plans include arrangements for big parades followed by either outdoor or indoor mass meetings.

The national office, in addition to serving as a clearing house to supply and exchange speakers, is getting out a special May Day edition of THE WORKER, a special button, and a leaflet for distribution.

All requests for speakers, literature and buttons should be sent in without delay.

THE COLDWELL TOUR

Joseph M. Coldwell, the veteran "Rhode Island Red," who twice refused a parole from Atlanta penitentiary because of the strings tied to it and because he did not want to leave Gene Debs serve on alone, has joined The Workers Party and is being booked for a lecture-tour by the National Office of the Workers Party, altho the proceeds of his meetings go to the National Defense Committee and to the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee.

"My life in prison with Debs," is the title of his lecture, and in it he demands the release of all class-war prisoners, no matter what the name of their philosophy. His story of 26 months in Atlanta is one of absorbing interest and his meetings should be exceptionally well attended.

The first part of his itinerary is as follows: April 15th, Pittsburgh, Pa.; 16th, Conneaut, O.; 17th, Youngstown, O.; 18th, Warren, O.; 19th, E. Liverpool, O.; 20th, Bellaire, O.; 21st, Neffs, O.; 22nd, Akron, O.; 23rd, Akron, O.; 24th, Canton, O.; 25th, Cleveland, O.; 26th, Fairport, O.; 27th, Lorain, O.; 28th, Toledo, O.

After the conclusion of the Ohio dates Coldwell will go to Michigan and northern Illinois.

The White Terror in the Balkan States

EDITOR'S NOTE—The "red raids" initiated by the unspeakable Palmer swept the United States in January, 1920, have their counterpart in the Balkan States. The new Democracies formed by the victorious Allies have been even more [illegible] than the beasts [illegible] for the [illegible] the reports of the White Terror in Jugo-Slavia and R[illegible] names and places, and at the same time [illegible] in the Balkans on the one hand [illegible] leaves little to choose. There [illegible] engendered by the war is apparently subsiding in the United States; while in the Balkans the limit seems not yet to have been reached. Deportation proceedings have been instituted against many aliens by the government of the United States. Of these a major part will be sent to the Balkans if they are ordered deported. Everything possible must be done to save them the terrible being inflicted upon the communists of Roumania and Jugo-Slavia.

Court Martial in Bukarest

A court-martial has been sitting at Bukarest for more than a month for the purpose of sentencing the best agitators of the Communist Party of Roumania, its Central Executive Committee, the Trade Union Committee, the Party Council, the Parliamentary group, writers, etc.—together 270 persons who are being sentenced because they had the courage openly to avow themselves Communists at the Congress of the Roumanian Communist Party.

For this courage of their convictions the Roumanian bourgeosie shut them up for months in cells, under a frightful prison-regime, without being able to gather enough evidence for the prosecution.

Now the court-martial is to sanction the infamous crime against justice, and sentence the defendants as "conspirators against the state," as "criminals," "terrorists," etc.

The court is composed of army colonels, majors and police commissioners. It sits in a small room, obviously for the express purpose of keeping out the workers and preventing them from attending the procedure lest they get a glimpse of the justice-scandal which the forum of the court-martial presents.

Only ministers, generals, Bojars, editors of the bourgeois press and the like, in other words only "trustworthy" elements, are admitted.

Every possible means is used to prevent the public from getting acquainted with the blood-stirring charges of the accused against the prison and the investigation authorities. Indeed, the bad conscience of the bourgeoisie finds no peace even with these measures.

The bourgeoisie, which alone is responsible for the sufferings and torments of the prisoners, fears the vengeance of the proletariat and for that reason it closes not only the trial-room but also blocks all the streets leading to it and has them guarded by the militia.

The defendants are also guarded by soldiers. They are placed in cold cells, which are separated from each other by iron gates. A barbarian order robs them of the possibility of communicating with each other or with their relatives. At first they were even forbidden to communicate with their attorneys.

Letters which the defendants had sent to their attorneys were intercepted or destroyed, and it was only after the energetic protest of the defense that short conferences between the prisoners and their attorneys (in the presence of an officer) were at all granted.

Having been imprisoned for months and having undergone brutal torments, the health of the prisoners is now completely undermined. Many of them still show on their bodies unmistakable signs of brutal treatment. Five of these prisoners are critically ill. It is rumored that they will be discharged—not to return to freedom (God forbid!) but only to be handed over to the servants of the bourgeoisie after they will have recovered.

The trial is still going on. But no matter what frightful consequences it may yet have—the decision is as well as signed!

The Roumanian reaction will have its victims, and the defendants, in spite of their absolute innocence, will be marched off to prison or even to the gallows.

The government hopes that by getting the defendants out of the way, it will be able to exterminate Communism in Roumania.

Hence martial law, the suppression of freedom of speech and the press; hence the frightful White Terror which is raging among the workers and poor peasants to an hitherto unprecedented degree.

The class-conscious part of the Roumanian proletariat recognizes the dangers which the workers and peasants are facing—it will find ways and means of meeting them effectively.

Sentence Com[illegible] in Jugo-Slavia

Sentence has been passed in the Jugoslavian Communist trial.

Accused were either charged with having attempted to assassinate the king or with having participated in a conspiracy to overthrow the lawful government. Those accused of the first crime were both non-Communists and Communists, among them five deputies, and two secretaries of the Party. Under the second charge all the members of the Party Executive were arraigned before the court.

After 7 months of investigation and 1 month of court proceedings, 14 of the 33 comrades were found guilty, while the remaining 19 had to be discharged.

Among the 4 persons found guilty on the first charge there was not one responsible member of the Party; all Executive members, together with the Communist deputies, were acquitted of connection with the plot. Sentence was passed upon the worker Stejic, the assassin, who was condemned to death. The worker Czaky, father of four children, received 20 years hard labor, and the students Nicolic and Palincas were sentenced to four and two years hard labor respectively.

Under the second charge the seven members of the Executive and three Communist deputies were found guilty and each sentenced to two years hard labor on the following grounds:—

> "The court declares that accused in their capacity as officials of the Communist Party in our kingdom, have, by means of conferences, public meetings, persuasion, pamphlets, handbills and other agitational measures actively participated in carrying out the Communist program adopted in 1920 at the congress of the party in Vukovar."

That is the legal justification for sentencing the Executive of the Communist Party to hard labor for a program adopted in June 1920 at a legal and public congress!

This condemned program of the Communist Party of Jugoslavia which differs in no respect from those of all the other Communist Parties throughout the world, represented all the proof they had both against the Communist Party and its representatives.

There can be no doubt that the White clique in power utilized the attempt at assassination on the part of irresponsible party members as a weapon against a party whose rapid development was making the bourgeoisie tremble in its boots.

Accordingly the government made the attempt the starting point of a countrywide series of pogroms against Communists, 70,000 of whom were arrested within a few days.

In Belgrade among whose populace of 112,000 there had at no time been more than 12,300 organized in the trade-unions, 11,500 men and women were brought in by the drive.

Of this ridiculously high number of arrests, 33 persons were after seven months arraigned before the courts, and of these 19 had to be acquitted.

And in spite of third degree methods neither the Party nor its officers could be convicted of participation in the attempt of assassination which was made the pretext for the white terror.

The court was in a cleft stick, so to speak. Acquittal of the Party Executive was equal to an admission that the government had unjustly muzzled the Party and the Communist deputies and offended against both the funds and the press of labor. Hence the court could not acquit and passed a formal sentence intended to legalize the government's oppressive measures during the last 7 months.

A Party with 80,000 members and 300 local organizations, and 2,000 trade-union organizations with 360,000 members were dissolved; the Communist municipal councils in several score large towns were suspended; 59 Communist deputies were ousted from Parliament; an anti-Communist "Law for the Protection of the State" was railroaded thru which threatens with capital punishment anybody conducting Communist propaganda; a number of persons were murdered while in jail awaiting trial; the funds of both Party and trade-unions were confiscated, etc., etc.

The government lost the political trial, and the Communists were sentenced . . . "Bourgeois justice" has spoken and killed the last vestige of the illusions as to the fairness of the capitalist judicial apparatus.

New Y[illegible] C[illegible] D[illegible]

The [illegible] of the City of New York has [illegible] bankruptcy as far as [illegible] is concerned. It has [illegible] that as things stand, it [illegible] the problem and must [illegible].

This is the confession that the Committee of the Unemployed sought to wring from Acting Mayor Hulbert when it went to City Hall to demand help for the [illegible] unemployed in the city.

At that time, the acting Mayor [illegible] denied that that [illegible] existed, stupidly declared that all appropriations made and being projected by the Board of Estimate would relieve the unemployment situation, and that the unemployed in the city have no kick coming.

But the demonstration of Unemployed, March 27th, was not lost on the workers of the city. The organized workers began to realize that the Unemployment Council means business and that the conference that was held at City Hall was showing up the unemployment situation as it really is.

At the last meeting of the Central Trades and Labor Council of New York, a resolution was introduced by the Executive Board, as a result of a conference with a Brooklyn lawyer.

Sponsored by the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, and producing the same statistics that the Committee of the Unemployed presented to the Acting Mayor, the Brooklyn lawyer prevailed upon the Central Trades and Labor Council to pass a resolution, calling upon the Mayor, the Board of Estimate, the Governor of the State and the President of the U. S. to take immediate steps to relieve unemployment; that, despite all that was being done or not being done in the city, unemployment has increased since December, and conditions represented a "menace" to the peace of the city.

Mayor Hylan promised to go to Washington and present the local situation to the federal authorities, and impress upon them the necessity of immediate action.

He thereby admits what the Unemployment Council has claimed from the beginning: that altho the city can do much and the City of New York has neglected to do it—in the final analysis, it becomes the function of the federal government to attack what has become a national situation.

A representative of the Unemployment Council of New York was present when this resolution was passed, but was denied the floor altho originally promised it.

It was obvious that the Central Trades and Labor Council was evading the most important aspect of the whole matter from the standpoint of organized labor.

The mere existence of the 10,000,000 jobless makes it possible for the employers to carry on a campaign to destroy the labor unions, reduce wages and increase hours.

The weakness of the unions, the strength of the organized bosses, the failure of so many strikes and the success of the open shop campaigns are due to nothing more than the fact that there are 10,000,000 unemployed in the country looking for work, willing to take work AT ANY COST.

Hence the unemployed must be organized to line up with organized labor... They must be educated to an understanding of unionism and to the determination NOT TO SCAB.

They must be organized to demand of the government either "Work or Compensation." This they must have: this organized labor must help them get, in order that the poverty of the jobless may not be used to lower the standard of the men on the job.

The lever to the present industrial situation is unemployment. Everything else depends on that factor. Until that is settled, the open shop campaign will spell defeat for the workers.

CONCERT AT DETROIT.

The Workmen's Circle Library of Detroit wishes to announce a concert Sunday night, May 7th, at the Labor Lyceum. The Library wishes to have it known that branch 156 of the Workmen's Circle is responsible for its existence. It is only six months since the Library was organized and already 2436 books have been circulated. There is also a large assortment of Jewish, Hebrew and Russian papers and periodicals. The Library is open every night from seven to ten except Sunday. Comrades of Detroit are asked to help build up this library by attending the concert and advertizing it to friends and sympathizers. Remember the Labor Lyceum Library, 632 Livingstone St., and make it a real thing!

The pastor of President Harding's church now states he was asked to leave out the name of Christ in a prayer offered at the late arms conference. We incline to the belief that Christ would have been entirely satisfied with the proposed arrangement.

Workers Party Members to Discuss United Front

At the general membership meeting to be held Sunday, April 16, at 2 P. M., at the Stuyvesant Casino, 2nd Ave. and 9th St., the question of the United Front in the coming elections will come up for decision.

The resolution presented to the City Central Committee upon which discussion will take place calls for the placing of a Labor Ticket in the field by forming a temporary alliance with the Socialist Party, Farmer-Labor Party, etc.

The resolution has aroused considerable comment and many arguments have been advanced pro and con at the City Central and branch meetings.

All members should participate in the discussion Sunday in order that the decision may be representative of the sentiment of the entire membership.

The other questions for action by the meeting are May Day preparations, building up the Local, boosting the Worker and other organization matters.

Admittance to the meeting will be by membership cards paid up till the month of March. All members who have not their dues stamps can purchase them at the meeting from the financial secretaries.

[illegible] Worker Tells of First Trip to Kuznets Basin in Interest of Labor Colony

By JACK BEYER

Written for The Federated Press and The Worker

This is the first of several articles on the Kuzbas Colonization project in Siberia, headed by William D. Haywood. They will tell, at this time when the Kuznetsky Basin Project is being organized here and is [illegible] widespread interest, of the adventures of the first group of American workers in their mid-winter journey from Moscow to Central Siberia. The writer is Jack Beyer, late of New York, and the articles are dated at the mines of Kemerovo, Government of Tomsk, Siberia, January 3, 1922.

On the heels of the agreement concluded October 21, 1921, at Moscow between the Soviet of Labor and Defense and the Initiatory Committee of American, English and other workers, I was instructed to form a group of twenty-five men possessing the technical skill necessary and to proceed to Kemerovo in the Kuznetsky Basin and to Nadejdenski Zavod in the Urals to carry our preliminary work before the arrival of the first groups from abroad.

After six busy weeks of signing up men, collecting tools, utensils, clothes, food, etc., the group entrained at Moscow on December 3, 1921, to travel in a third-class coach, with a boxcar attached with the stores.

When the train pulled out that night the Kuznetz Basin Industrial Colony passed from the stage of discussion into one of realization.

The group which is destined to lay the foundation of a vast industrial enterprise, free from the incubus of parasitism, numbered sixteen men and one woman. It was truly an international body. There were Fellow Workers F. Domain and E. Witt, Poland; J. Harper, America; L. and J. Krause, Ukraine; K. Schwarz, England; H. Sussman, White Russia; L. Leftchuk, F. Veronin and I. Mischenkoff, Russia; A. Gallor, France; P. Porget, Germany; N. Castellan, Ireland; T. Nicholoff, Macedonia; S. Theodoroff and P. Dencheff, Bulgaria, and myself—American Seminole Indian. All these members of the colony have been for many years engaged in highly developed English, American, French and German industries.

A stove for heating and cooking had been set up in the center of our car and we had to collect wood along the way until we reached Yaroslaw, the first division point. There we got enough fuel to last a couple of days. We reached Vologda the following afternoon. Until we reached Viatka, the next division point, we had to gather fuel at every opportunity. There we learned that it was almost impossible to secure fuel east of Ekaterinburg, so we accumulated nearly a cord in our baggage car and filled every available space in our coach as well.

Bread proved to be very scarce, and the price, unlike the temperature, rose as we travelled onward.

We left Vologda on December 6 and after a tedious ride we pulled into Viatka the morning of December 3. The collecting of wood went on apace. The weather was steadily getting colder. It was then 28 degrees below zero.

At Viatka, for the third or fourth time, we found that our box car had been disconnected from our own car. We had been told that we would have to wait there, as we were now on the Siberian main line, to be connected with a troop train due to arrive later in the day.

When we went to the station master's office to get the boxcar coupled to ours again, we found the station master out, but his subordinate declared it was absolutely impossible to allow the boxcar on the train, which was strictly military. He would permit our coach to be attached, but even that, he said, was an accommodation on his part. He refused to take any notice of our mandate.

So a second trip to the office was necessary, when we forced the official to read the mandate and our transportation telegram, and we threatened to report his conduct. The boxcar was attached.

We pulled out of Viatka that night and early on the morning of December 10, we arrived at Perm after a monotonous and uneventful journey. The weather man had been preparing a cold reception for us, and we found the temperature 35 below.

We had a consultation with the station master and it was decided that instead of going by the main line to Ekaterinburg, that we should go to Goroblagodechensk (which means something like "God Blessed Mountain) and drop the Nadejdenski party there, and then continue on to Ekaterinburg.

Some of the boys went to the market, but it was Sunday, and all they could buy was some meat and frozen milk.

Score: Three to One

"Every time some people see a red hat they get frightened."

That is the enlightened declaration of Attorney-General Daugherty at Washington, as he refuses to allow approaching May-Day, 1922, to scare him.

His statement was brought forth by the recent frightened utterances of the following:

William J. Burns, Chief of the Bureau of Investigation.

Secretary of War, Weeks.

Secretary of the Navy, Denby.

These three are all agreed that Communism is making rapid strides in the United States, that it is permeating not only the citizenry of the country, but also the army and navy.

That makes the vote three to one in favor of the red hat. If the mine strike continues to grow, as it is now doing, perhaps even Daugherty may be won over, making it a clean admission that the working class is waking up, and that the fetters of ignorance and prejudice are being broken.

Devout Pittsburgh

What a wonderful thing is religion!

If one can only become convinced that "God's in his heaven, all's right with the world," nothing else matters. It is for this reason that capitalism encourages the "pie in the sky" artists.

Pittsburgh is a city of churches, yet probably in no other community in the United States can be found so much concentrated misery among the workers; this subject, however, is taboo in the better circles, and the spirit of the "solid elements" of Pittsburgh society is shown by the following letter, clipped at random from the columns of the Pittsburgh press:

> To the Editor:
> Sixth Avenue, between Wood and Smithfield Streets, is a busy part of town these days. Holy Week noonday meetings at Trinity and the First Presbyterian churches are the attractions. Crowded houses for the 30-minute services are the rule and, to the credit of Pittsburgh, the throngs are made up of devout, spiritually-inclined people. All of which indicates that Pittsburgh is ready to do its duty for God in the moral readjustment following the world war.
> R. C. S.

It will be readily seen that God is quite popular in Pittsburgh. His most enthusiastic supporter is the Steel Trust, and it is made quite plain to Pittsburghers that love for one means loyalty to the other.

The slaves of the blast furnaces may think otherwise, but they do not say so—yet.

What Is It, Arthur?

Senator Norris of Nebraska criticised Chief Justice Taft—better known as "God Knows" Taft—the other day, for "hob-nobbing" at social functions with the idle rich. "The Senator opined that no man can stick his legs under the tables of the idle rich every night and be fit to sit in judgment the next day on those who toil."

Because of this display of his knowledge of the doctrine of economic determination, Senator Norris is taken to task by one of the nation's most famous journalistic courtesans—Arthur Brisbane. Arthur says, "he (Taft) cares no more for the richest man than for the poorest outcast in the gutter so far as justice is concerned. It is having a rather poor opinion of a man who has given his life to public service at great sacrifice in money and personal comfort that he might be influenced in Supreme Court decisions by Baltimore terrapin, lobster a la Newburg or a glass of wine with bubbles in it."

We know you get a lot of money for your stuff, Arthur, but don't you feel just a little ashamed of yourself when you try to put over bunk like this and then think of the child-labor law and a few other things we could mention?

Knowing Willie Hearst, your boss, as we do, we feel impelled to ask "In just what coming decision of the Supreme Court is he interested?"

Semenoff and Our Prisoners

General Gregory Semenoff, self-styled "Ataman of all the Cossacks" of both European and Asiatic Russia, is a visitor in the United States.

No objection was raised by the vigilant immigration authorities to his entrance to this country after his trip across the Pacific.

Representatives of the international drive for Russian famine relief, like Whitehead, of England, are seized and locked up, at least temporarily, when they come here seeking help to aid the victims of famine and plague.

Not so with Semenoff, brigand, pillager of Siberia, head of a band of marauders that raped, robbed and pillaged under pretext of fighting the Bolsheviki, whose bandits assaulted and murdered women and children, mutilated men and left a trail of blood and horror, whose armed train fired on a box-car filled with United States soldiers in Siberia, killing two—Semenoff, the bull-necked, sensual, heavy-jowled, brutish Tartar chief, did all these things and yet was admitted into the United States, received "unofficially" and was to have been received like a prince in New York City. But Semenoff's bandits stole $500,000 worth of woolen stuffs and furs from a New York trading company operating in Siberia, forcing it into bankruptcy. And so he was "pinched" by vulgar "cops" in the nation's metropolis.

But American justice still has respect for successful robbers, and in Semenoff's own words, "How can I be considered in such [illegible]

[illegible] to bail. But [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

The United States government, under Wilson, supported Semenoff. Under Harding, we find Secretary of State Hughes inviting him to this country and assuring him of a hospitable reception. It can be depended upon that they will get him out of his present difficulties. Witnesses in his defense, it is claimed, have been sent to New York City from Washington at government expense.

Semenoff stands for things as they are. So does the Harding administration. So do the courts of "justice." Therefore Semenoff is safe, in the Waldorf Hotel.

The Communist prisoners demand a change for something better. They are struggling for ideals that seek an ending of the present profit system. The courts of "justice" fear them and deny them bail. Capitalism feels itself safe, with the Communists in prison at Sing Sing, Dannemora and elsewhere.

When will the workers learn that their allegiance should be with the Communists in prison and not with the Semenoffs, the Hughes and the Hardings? They must themselves give the answer.

All for a Job

Do you want a job in the steel industry? Not a real good job but one of the ordinary kind of jobs that most people work at.

If you do you must forget that you are a human being and as such entitled to a little privacy. You must throw open your heart and your mind to the boss and fill out a blank containing the following questions:

Name .... Address .... Nearest Relative ....
White ...... Black ...... Yellow ...... Height ...... Weight ......
Color Hair .... Color Eyes ....
Thin .... Normal .... Stout ....
Married .... Single .... Widower .... Divorced ....
Children under 16 .... Dependents .... Others ....
Religion .... Societies .... Education ....
Place of Birth .... Years in U. S. ....
Intentions: To Remain .... To Become Citizen ....
Temperament (To be filled in by employment agent)
Quick .... Average .... Dull ....
Previous Employment (Give names of three last employers)
Reason for Leaving ......Nature of Work......Length of Service......

After having filled in this application the seeker of employment is supposed to be properly humbled and to understand that in giving him a job the company is conferring upon him an inestimable privilege and that any violation of the company rules (which are legion) is equivalent to sacrilege.

There are still many people who wonder why it is that some men prefer to take to the road rather than earn an honest living.

And They Are Still Hungry

C. F. Blanke, the millionaire coffee merchant, has closed his bread line and rest room at the old Standard Theater in St. Louis.

His farewell speech to 2,000 hungry, jobless men was to the effect that he had fed them with 250,000 cups of coffee, and 55,000 loaves of bread, that had cost him $12,000.

The report we have received does not state why the Coffee King fed these hungry men, or why he quit feeding them.

We surmise that he felt he was contributing to the solution of the unemployment problem, or that it would give him some good, free advertising.

Probably he found out that he could not cure the jobless evil, and that he had spent all the money he intended to, anyway.

Blanke invested the price of a good automobile in feeding hungry men. His "coffee and" tortured their stomachs and kept the spark of life aflame in their undernourished bodies. Perhaps Blanke got some satisfaction out of this.

But the great problem of unemployed still remains unsolved. Blanke's 2,000 hungry men are still hungry, just as ten million working men and women in this country are jobless and hungry.

It is because Blanke, the profiteer in coffee, still sits on top, just as thousands of other profiteers are still on top waving the profiteer's lash over the backs of wage-slave labor in thousands of other industrial activities.

Blanke must go. The profiteers must go. Capitalism must go. And as their power falls to the ground, labor will rise to rule and own and be hungry no longer.

In Feeble Extenuation

After the passage of more than two years, the Senate Committee on Judiciary has finally issued a report white-washing the department of justice of the charges growing out of the "Red Raids" of January, 1920.

There was a minority on the committee that couldn't stomach the white-wash and handed in a report of its own.

Senator Walsh, of Montana, speaking for the dissenters, declared that the majority report had nothing to say except in "feeble extenuation" of admitted conditions.

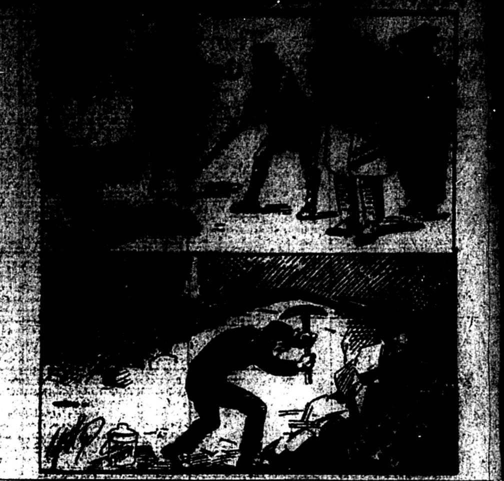
He deplored the inhumanity of arresting "thousands of persons in one night," placing those persons in overcrowded quarters, and the delay that followed in releasing from arrest those who were not subject to deportation.

But even this feeble protest from the minority will avail nothing. Recommendations of the majority will be carried out that there be closer co-operation between the department of justice and the department of labor in similar attacks on the workers in the future.

There will also be legislation more specifically defining what constitutes "opposition to government or its overthrow by force or violence." No loophole is to be allowed a lenient court in interpreting an autocratic law.

The persecution of the workers during the war and after the war has thus brought one result. It has taught the ruling class how best to whet its weapons for future attacks. Let the workers prepare their organizations to meet those attacks.

Banker Stillman's divorce case is to be re-opened in Montreal. Wouldn't the atmosphere of Hollywood be more congenial?



Comfort From Evolution

Pity Charles Darwin.

When his theory of evolution is not being attacked by crack-brained theologians it is being used to quiet the qualms of those who fear that after all their theorizing capitalism may not pass away peacefully, but that those who wish a better and saner method of distributing the products of social labor may have to strike a blow or two.

Upon the quieting doctrine of evolutionary change over so long a period that change is imperceptible the editor of the Western Labor News (Winnipeg) falls back when he and his supporters are alarmed by the activity of the Workers Party of Canada which, by the way, has gathered to itself the worthwhile elements in the Canadian Labor movement.

Commenting on the party program the Labor News says:

> "As to the aspirations of these hot-headed Communists, their presumption is a thing for any sane thinking individual to laugh about. With hectic enthusiasm they launch plans for capturing the A. F. of L. unions in much the same manner that Lenine repeatedly has laid plans for a bloody revolution thruout the civilized world; and they will meet with about as much success as the Russian dictator has met with so far outside of Russia.
> "The big factor our Communist friends overlook, as did Bob Russell and his O.B.U. organization, is that Anglo-Saxon mentality does not incline toward betterment thru chaos and that evolution rather than revolution is the predominant psychology of that race."

The Western Labor News is rather obviously whistling to keep up its courage, and its fine line about "Anglo-Saxon mentality," so far as we are concerned, merely reminds us of a quotation from John S. Clarke:

With Viking blood in Norman veins,
And Celtic bone to prop us,
We are, with our Teutonic brains,
Jehovah's magnum opus.

And this in turn reminds us of something else of Clarke's, so appropriate that we cannot help quoting it:

There are folks whose constitutions
Shrink at bloody revolutions,
At such a thing they never could connive.
They can hear the distant humming
Of the one that's surely coming,
But they hope it doesn't come while THEY'RE alive.

So it is that persons to whom the social revolution is something to be hoped for, prayed for and talked about but never worked or fought for, tremble most violently when a proposal is made to do something now—to get ready for revolution when the fatuous acts and utterances of parlor socialists and liberals have, together with the repressive acts of the ruling class, checked the orderly processes of evolution as is the case to-day.

The workers do not make revolutions whether they be Slavs, Latins or the evolutionary "Anglo-Saxon" of which the Western Labor News tells; revolutions happen, and it is the task of the intelligent workers to prepare for that contingency.

This is what the Workers Party of Canada and the United States is trying to do. As it is the first time that such a program has ever been put forward in this country it is little wonder fossilized mentalities misconstrue its mission.

Bootlegging [illegible] become a 100 per cent American occupation if the bill [illegible] passed by the House of Representatives and [illegible] League becomes a law.

The [illegible] provides for the deportation of foreigners convicted of violation of the Volstead act and will undoubtedly be approved by the various organizations of volunteer defenders of Americanism as it is taught by Newell Dwight Hillis, Billy Sunday and others.

Considering the matter seriously, the measure furnishes a fine example of the lengths to which fanatics will go in order to satisfy a perverted taste for making people miserable under the guise of making them [illegible]. The [illegible] League has taken advantage of a [illegible] in the height of war hysteria, and now lines up with [illegible] and [illegible] in the use of a statute that brings the same misery to aliens and their families as did the [illegible] of the slave-dealer to separate and sell mother and daughter, husband and wife, parents and children.

To deport aliens resisting the oppression of the brutal employing class of this country is a crime against civilization, but it is to be expected under capitalism.

To tear them from their homes, families and associations here for a violation of the prohibition law can only be compared to the degenerate [illegible] of the inquisition.

The wealthy wholesaler of illegal intoxicants is immune from punishment. [illegible] the proponents of prohibition fasten upon the most oppressed group in our society—the foreign-born worker.

The [illegible] accompany their miserable acts with a sanctimonious [illegible] that is characteristic of the heresy-hunters of all ages [illegible] which acts like an emetic on everyone but [illegible] to all sense of [illegible].

Mass Action

The aim of the Workers Party participating in the elections an its work to revolutionize the is to organize the workers to b mass pressure to bear upon the talist state.

This mass pressure manifests self in the form of demonstratio and strikes involving political d mands.

Mass action is generated in tho movements of unrest which the o pression and exploitation of th workers develops.

The Workers Party will use such movements to start the wor ers on the march.

It will enter every struggle invol ing the interests of the workers thru slogans and programs of actio endeavor to give these strugg definite purpose.

Unemployment and the Op Shop campaign against the or ized workers have created such ations as must be utilized to dev the mass action of the workers. T Workers Party will formulate pr grams to unite the unemployed f the struggle for relief from the s fering and misery which the denial the right to work brings upon th and arouse them to mass demonstr tions to compel the government grant them relief.

It will endeavor to unite the lab Unions in a common struggle again the "American Plan" of industri slavery.

Mass action also develops out the strikes of the workers and t Workers Party will seek to unite t now isolated struggles of sections the workers.

It will endeavor to give the strikes political significance by i jecting demands upon the capital state, such as demands for the rele of men in prison for their part in class struggle, relief for the une ployed, protests against the use courts and injunctions against workers.

Vol. V. No. 220. [illegible] SATURDAY, APRIL [illegible] [illegible] Price 5 Cents

Workers of America! CHOOSE! CAPITALISM AND CHAINS! OR—SOCIAL REVOLUTION AND FREEDOM

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party, on the occasion of International May Day, 1922, [illegible] before the toiling masses of America the facts of the class struggle today in this country. The declaration of the party is contained in its May Day Proclamation which is as follows:

Proclamation of the Workers Party for International May Day, 1922

THE FIRST OF MAY, the International Holiday of Labor, was conceived and celebrated as the concrete [illegible] of labor's world-wide struggle.

It is the day on which the men and women of labor step out of the gray [illegible] of their slavery to oppose their will and power to that of the ruling classes. Not like the slaves of old, who were given one day of freedom for mad jubilation and senseless merrymaking. Not like those workingmen and women who parade their gratitude to their exploiters on the Labor Day given to them by their rulers. The First of May must take the workers out of the struggles of their every-day existence, raise them above the pettiness and ineffectuality of their every-day fight as individuals against organized capital. On the First of May every worker becomes one of the great army of class-conscious men and women the world over.

STRUGGLE IS NEVER-CEASING

There is hardly a workingman or woman in the world who does not understand, after the events of the months and years that have just passed, that their class, the world over, is engaged in a never-ceasing struggle against the class that owns their jobs—and owning their jobs owns the resources and the wealth of the nation.

This struggle is ever present—in every country of the globe, tho its expression varies in character and in degree according to the temper of its people and the degree in which they have come to a realization of their own social position.

In America it is a half-hearted fight for insignificant reforms, for social insurance, for a shorter work-day and better pay, a fight that may seek recourse, for the moment, to radical measures, but never extends beyond the capitalist system itself, never contemplates achievements that do not lie within the power of the present social system to fulfill.

STRUGGLE TAKES REVOLUTIONARY FORM

In Europe where the peoples of every nation have suffered [illegible] the Russian proletariat overthrow the Czar, [illegible] with the great peasant class of Russia to overthrow a social order that was rotten to the score, to put a new one in its place.

They have seen the catastrophic collapse of German imperialism and the hopeless, helpless endeavors of the German proletariat that is struggling in vain to protect itself against the brutalities of an overbearing, profit-mad bourgeoisie.

They have seen conference after conference, at Versailles, at Washington, and now at Genoa, called for the purpose of adjusting international finance and industry.

They have seen them fail, because such adjustments cannot be made unless the ruling classes are willing to pay the price by sacrificing their own interests at home and their imperialistic aspirations abroad.

LOOK AT YOURSELVES

Perhaps you, American workingmen and women, do not believe in the ideals and aspirations of this First of May. You do not believe in the necessity of overthrowing the capitalist system, of revolutionizing the working class.

You, perhaps, believe that the workers, if they will but unite and use their legal powers, will succeed in forcing the employing class to recognize their just demands.

Look at conditions for a moment with open eyes. There is no political movement of the working class in the United States. The great mass of workingmen and workingwomen are still swinging annually from one to the other of the old parties.

Of almost 25 million wage workers hardly five millions are organized in our labor unions, in labor unions so reactionary in action, so behind the times in form, that the American employing class does not and need not fear them, so ineffective that the government lines up with their enemies as a matter of course, on every occasion.

THE HISTORY OF TWO YEARS

You doubt it? Look for a moment at the history of the labor movement in this country during the past two years. When the railroadmen threatened to strike, the government answered their just demands with injunction courts and obligatory arbitration.

When the miners struck, they, too, were forced to submit to courts of arbitration, after Federal Courts had issued such sweeping injunctions that the fight had to be given up.

The injunctions are granted by highly paid tools of the capitalist interests and the arbitration boards are composed, in every instance, of a majority in favor of the capitalist class, since the so-called representatives of the public are chosen by the government, the most powerful representative of the mine and the railroad owners.

When the miners struck, two years ago, the government again came out so unequivocally in favor of the mine owners that Lewis, the president of the mine workers, true to the traditions of American leadership, which demands peace with capital, at any price, called off the strike, because "he was not fighting the government."

Those unions that refused to yield to Lewis' cowardly dictates were excommunicated and their leaders had to go to prison.

Judge Lets Communists Out on Bail

After being compelled to [illegible] Act of New York in October, [illegible] are to be released on bail pending the disposition of their case by the Court of Appeals.

A certificate of reasonable doubt was issued by Judge Cordoza on April 17th which makes them eligible to bail.

Immediately following their conviction such a certificate was requested. Had it been granted at that time it would have allowed the defendants to be at liberty pending action of the higher courts on the questions of law involved.

But owing to the hysterical state of mind prevalent at that time, ably abetted by the heresy-hunting Lusk Committee, the Court denied the petition.

Judge Cordoza's ruling, which follows, makes interesting reading:

"I am not required to determine whether the judgment should be reversed. The sole subject of inquiry now is whether there are questions of law so serious and doubtful that enforcement of the sentence should be stayed until the questions have been answered.

"I—I find that there is reasonable doubt whether the statute has been properly construed. The appeal brings up the question whether the prohibition of writings advocating anarchy, i. e., the destruction of all government, is equivalent to the prohibition of writings advocating sedition or revolution, resulting in a change of government, as, e. g., a change from a republic to a monarchy, or from one form of republic

Chicago Sees Gompers and Foster Clash

Two forces clashed at the conference of international officials and central bodies and local union officers, called by Samuel Gompers, in Chicago.

The piercing contrast between the standpatters of the old school of labor organization, which now belongs to a bygone age, and the dynamic, onward-driving element, assumed a very definite character and reached its climax in the rousing applause extended to William Z. Foster after the close of his argument for the necessity of more progressive methods of fighting and more progressive forms of organization within the trade union movement.

Flood's Flood of Abuse

The true purpose of Gompers' coming to Chicago became very apparent. Previously it had been stated that he came for the purpose of addressing the railway shop craft de-

Sinister Threat of Steel Trust to Re-open the Coal Mines Is Beginning to Bear Fruit

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE
Labor Editor of The Worker

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—The sinister threat of the steel trust, made last week, to "re-open our mines at all costs and by any means," is beginning to bear fruit.

At Greenberg, the home of a strike-breaking mine electrician was blown up, but as usual in these carefully planned "outrages" the strikebreaker and his family were uninjured. The electrical equipment of the mine was also damaged.

State police were on the scene with suspicious readiness and four miners, whose connection with the explosion, beyond the fact that they are strikers, is a mystery, were arrested.

In the same district a watchman was found shot and altho witnesses declare he was injured by the accidental discharge of his own gun, a striking miner was arrested and charged with the shooting.

It is in the formerly non-union districts, where the miners have struck and joined the United Mine Workers, that the state constabulary are concentrating their activity. In Yukon, one of the several large camps out of West Newton, miners told me of the constabulary catching strikers on the state roads, riding them against the fence, holding them fast and then insisting that they "move on"; the intention is quite evidently to have the victim

Pavlowa Says Workers Enjoy Beauty of Dancing

CHICAGO.—"It does not require a home on the boulevard to be a fine dancer or to enjoy the beauty of dancing. I know because I have trained many dancers and because, too, the galleries hold much of the best part of my audiences," said Anna Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, in an interview here.

"By best, I mean most appreciative—the people for whom I like to dance. They are the people who know what it means to work and work hard and who came to see the results of my work because they want to come even if they have to sacrifice something else. Perhaps they are the most critical, but I do not mind that because when they give their enthusiasm it is so real."

Pavlowa is noted for her sympathy with her pupils and young dancers. She personally directs their work, no matter how great the fatigue from her own dancing.

After a brief tour of the eastern cities and Canada Pavlowa and her Russian ballet will leave the United States for a three years' tour of the far east.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

[illegible] witnesses were brought to New York from Winnipeg to tell about events in that City from May 1, 1919 to June 15. The general implication was that the New York defendants favored the same sort of strike in New York as a means for overthrowing the government.

The Rorke letter to Governor Miller shows emphatically that the man who prosecuted these cases still associates the guilt of Larkin, Gitlow, Winitsky, Ferguson and Ruthenberg very directly with the Winnipeg strike of nearly three years ago. He urged upon the Governor, in favor of release of these prisoners, the precedent of the release of the Winnipeg strike leaders. He fails to add that F. J. Dixon, one of the most prominent of the Winnipeg strike leaders was acquitted and that he was thereafter a candidate for the Manitoba Legislature from the City of Winnipeg, a constituency entitled to ten seats in the legislature and headed the poll by an enormous majority, the largest ever secured in the Province of Manitoba.

James S. Woodworth, another of the Winnipeg strike leaders, was arrested, but the charge against him was never brought to trial, in spite of the insistence that it be tried. Recently Woodworth was elected from Centre Winnipeg to the Canadian House of Commons by 3,740 votes over his nearest opponent. Woodworth is a Labor Party representative.

Of the seven strike leaders actually imprisoned three were elected to the Manitoba Legislature while in prison and are now members of that body. A fourth, R. B. Russell was defeated by a very few votes on account of dissention in the labor ranks. Thus six of the strike leaders have been candidates in Winnipeg and have received very high and even record votes from the people of that city.

It was an absurdity to offer to elucidate the manifestos in question, featuring this historical reference, out of scores of similar references to events in the labor movement. Moreover the Winnipeg strike testimony offered in these New York trials was mainly that of a detective who had managed to get himself elected to the General Strike Committee as representative of the policeman's union. The police were not called out on strike altho they belonged to the Winnipeg Trade and Labor Council who had called the strike but were given representation on the General Strike Committee.

This detective witness used in the New York trials glibly supplied whatever information was wanted, to give a radical character to every aspect of the strike.

Tho in the Ferguson and Ruthenberg case he was confronted with the actual demands made by the Winnipeg strikers. First—a living wage; second, an eight-hour day; third, the right to organize; fourth, a signed agreement. In a word, a regular trade union struggle.

But the sole distinguishing feature that it concentrated upon these demands the whole strength of organized labor in Winnipeg. It was this unity of the struggle which was referred to in the New York publications.

Also the tendency of the workers to organise the necessary municipal services crippled by the strike, a constructive feature of the Winnipeg and Seattle strikes which seemed significant of the ability of organized labor to develop an entire system of municipal administration.

The use of the Winnipeg testimony in these cases is still to be passed upon by the highest New York Court, the Court of Appeals, with the Gitlow case and the Ferguson-Ruthenberg case, a hearing having been held April 14. The Appellant Division upheld the use of the testimony in the Gitlow case and ignored the question of the Ferguson-Ruthenberg and Larkin cases.

A number of eminent lawyers have expressed themselves as shocked by the use of such testimony to interpret the New York documents, it being so palpable that the readers of the literature could not have read it in the light of what the Winnipeg witnesses might tell the New York juries at these trials.

Justice Burr, on the Ferguson-Ruthenberg application for a certificate of reasonable doubt, the prerequisites to bail, while the appeal is pending, was impressed at once by the fact that no witness could give to the New York jurors a complete view of the Winnipeg strike without going over into the realm of hearsay.

Yet Justice Burr after four months of evasive delay—meanwhile stopping the progress of the appeal—denied the application for bail. Gitlow has been in prison for over two years, Winitsky exactly two years, Larkin twenty-two months, Ferguson and Ruthenberg seventeen months, the sentences for the indeterminate term of from five to ten years in each case. The minimum alone means three years and nine months of actual imprisonment.

Undoubtedly the fact that the Winnipeg strike leaders did not suffer so severely for their participation in the workers' struggle was due to the fact that the workers stood solidly behind them.

The workers of New York can release the men in prison for mentioning the Winnipeg strike if they will unite in a demand for amnesty.

Children's Crusade in New York, the 26th, on Way to See Harding

Final plans for the big mass meeting to be held at Webster Hall, 119 East 11th St., Wednesday Evening, April 26th, 8 p. m., to welcome the Children's Crusade arriving from the West on its way to Washington, to put a final plea before Harding for the release of their fathers, have been announced by the Workers Defense Union.

This organization has the meeting in charge, and judging by the hearty and instant response that has come in from all the representative groups, it looks as tho it is going to be one of the biggest and most important Amnesty meetings yet held.

Advocate General Amnesty

The Crusade of 37 women and children will arrive at the Grand Central station, Wednesday, April 26, at 12.05 p. m. Train No. 400. It will be met by friends and sympathizers, and then will proceed to march thru the streets, carrying banners, with slogans, advocating release and General Amnesty.

The women and children will be entertained at lunch, after which Mrs. J. Sargent Cram will take the children to the Circus, at Madison Square Garden.

A reception in the afternoon will be given to the wives and in the evening, a splendid program of women speakers, from all groups, has been arranged at Webster Hall, 119 East 11th St. (Wednesday, April 26). Elizabeth Gurley Flynn will act as chairman, and will make an appeal for funds. The following is a list of speakers: Kate Richard O'Hare, who has piloted the children from St. Louis, Mrs. Clare Sheridan, Crystal Eastman, Rosa Schneidermann, Mary Heaton Vorse, Mathilda Robbins, Mrs. Kate Gitlow, who will speak in Jewish, Theresa Malkiel, Marion Sproule, and others.

Unusual interest and intense enthusiasm in the meeting is being shown by divergent groups, all willing and eager to make their public protest.

[illegible]

Dispatches from St. Louis, where The Crusade held its first meeting, tell of the wonderful response, and welcome that the children received, yet the tales that come in of their condition, after their four long years of want and actual hunger, is pitiful.

Their little faces bear the grim story of suffering, and they are very shy and timid at all the bustle. They have worked and suffered these little ones, while their rebel farmer fathers from Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas have been serving their sentences in jail.

Mrs. Roxie Benefield, whose husband William Benefield, from Oklahoma was given a ten year sentence for obstructing the draft, and is now at Leavenworth, has five children, with her, all under fourteen years of age.

The Lot of the Oppressed

"We are cotton pickers, and we never have known anything else. We have been living in a log hut since he left, and the children have picked cotton since they were old enough to drag a sack. No education, little food and few clothes have been our lot for the last four years."

The children look careworn and thin, and the terrible struggle has left its mark.

"This is their last effort and they are desperately pinning all hope on it," exclaimed Mrs. O'Hare. "You could not expect them to exhibit much joy even at the prospect of getting their fathers back, could you?"

"Our mother died after father was sent to the penitentiary," said one of the daughters of J. N. Danly of Paragould, Arkansas, who is serving a ten year sentence."

The crusade will stay one night in New York City, and all those friends who feel that they would like to help by taking in some of the children and women for that one night, can communicate with Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, at the Workers Defense Union, 81 East 10th St. Tel.: Stuyvesant 6488.

Philadelphia will welcome the Crusaders at a mass meeting to be held at the Central Labor Lyceum, 807 N. 6th St., Thursday, April 27th.

Kate Richards O'Hare and Edgar Owens of the National Defense Committee will address the meeting. Elbertine Reeder, the nine-year-old daughter of Walker Reeder who is serving a prison sentence because of his devotion to his class, will also address the meeting.

The Crusade will arrive on Thursday morning, and a large delegation of workers will be at the Broad Street station to meet it. The meeting will be held under the auspices of the Provisional Amnesty Committee. Workers of Philadelphia, come to this meeting in masses. Protest against the continued imprisonment of our class-war prisoners and demand that they be set free.

Amnesty and Political Prisoners

By EDGAR OWENS

Three and a half years ago the signing of the armistice brought the World War to a close.

But there has been no armistice in the Class War. THERE CAN BE NO ARMISTICE IN THE CLASS WAR. So long as workers are robbed in the processes of production, just that long will the Class War persist.

And the Class War, as all other wars, has its casualties. Here in America forty-two months after the formal ending of the World War, spokesmen of the working class languish in prison.

They knew the causes which made the World War inevitable. They knew surplus products out of which the workers had been robbed must be disposed of in other markets. They knew weak and backward nations were being exploited in the profit interests of the Capitalist Class. They understood the significance of commercial rivalries and competitive armaments. And they knew who must pay the price in blood and treasure for the awful mal-administration of government and industry.

Being men and women of courage as well as understanding, they went forth on the highways and byways, and with pen and speech, agitated for the abolishment of the causes which make war inevitable.

It is for this that they are in prison. And for precisely this reason their imprisonment should arouse definite resentment in the ranks of the workers. It is well to remember that while it is possible to jail a "Deep Red," the "Pale Pink" is by no means safe.

May 1st is the day upon which the militant workers thruout the world pause to take stock of themselves. They hold meetings. They demonstrate. They proclaim the identity of interest of all who toil. No question of religion is raised, no nationality, nor color. And why should such a question be raised when flowing thru the veins of all is the deep, red blood. They celebrate their victories. They seek the cause of their defeats. They profit by their mistakes. They determine that the mistakes in judgment and tactics which led to defeat shall not be repeated. Self-analysis and self-criticism are the essence of life to the labor movement.

The task confronting the militants in May, 1922, is great. The masters are ruthless. Backed by a reserve army of unemployed numbering millions they have selected this as the opportune time to smash all resistance on the part of the workers. Wage rates are mercilessly slashed. The American Plan—the modern drive towards slavery,—threatens the very existence of organized labor.

The masters have but one front in the Class War. The railroad magnates come to the aid of the mine owners. The Manufacturers Association joined common cause with the steel barons. Above all can be heard the strident squawk of Chambers of Commerce, Rotary Clubs and the prostitute press. Their most powerful weapon is the Capitalist State with its courts and prisons, its police and army.

Among the workers too, the new conditions demand new tactics. Labor must also close its ranks. Railroader, shopman, miner, steel worker—all who toil must organize a united front. The battlecry must be One Fight! One Foe! One Front! One Victory!

And as the battle rages casualties multiply. Many of those who participate in the struggle for a bit more of leisure, a slight increase in purchasing power, even as they who have declared war upon the whole wages system, will be sent to join the ranks of our comrades and fellow workers already in prison.

No May Day celebration will be complete without the demand for the release of the Casualties of the Class War. In California, in Kansas, in Pennsylvania and New York, in many other states our comrades and fellow workers will celebrate Labor's Day behind steel bars and stone walls. Amnesty shall therefore be on the Order of the Day.

Federal Amnesty will have no effect on state prisoners. Only State action can bring about their release. In view of this fact the Amnesty Alliance of New York has been organised to carry on an agitation for the release of the nine political prisoners in New York. A series of demonstrations have been arranged for May Day. A state-wide drive for amnesty will be launched. Other states will be urged to create Amnesty Alliances so that this work may become nation-wide.

The crimes of the masters are many. Ford and Suhr, Mooney and Billings in California, the I. W. W. boys in Leavenworth, Martinovitch in Pennsylvania, Sacco and Vanzetti in Massachusetts, Alonen, Ferguson, Gitlow, Larkin, Manko, Mizher, Palvio, Ruthenberg, and Winitsky in New York—these men have been deprived of their liberty because they gave without stint of their time and talents on behalf of their class. Their services to the workers have brought the iron heel of oppression upon them. They are the casualties of the Class War.

They must be freed. They must be enabled to again take their rightful places in the ranks of the militant workers. Demand amnesty—State as well as Federal. Let the workers raise a mighty voice of protest against their further imprisonment. May Day is Labor's Day. Strike a blow not only for the release of political prisoners but to emancipate the working class from the thraldom of wage slavery. One Fight! One Foe! One Front! One Victory!

Listen Intently to Speakers

It is in the non-union districts that the strike will be won. The eagerness with which these men respond to the call of the union is almost pathetic, and it is no exaggeration to say that they come out as fast as the organisers can get into the mines.

They will listen for hours to speakers and are almost pitifully grateful to anyone who will talk to them about the strike and the class struggle.

Even the powerful non-union Frick coal and coke interests have been unable to entirely stem the tide of organization, and it is to protect this district that the steel trust is launching its counter-attack. It is only the Leisenring mines of the Frick group that are operating to any extent, and even this stronghold of non-unionism is seriously crippled.

Following picketing by the wives and daughters of the strikers the Frick interests have organized a detachment of women who attack the pickets. Three women pickets were arrested by the state constabulary after one of these encounters. None of the attackers were arrested, the state police being trained to exercise a nice discrimination in these affairs.

Store Credit Is Shut Off

At most of the company stores credit has been shut off, and in many of them strikers are unable to even purchase for cash. Evictions are increasing in number daily and mark the growing bitterness of the struggle.

Following the announcement of the intention of the steel interests to operate their mines, a significant change has taken place in the attitude of the Pittsburgh newspapers toward the strike. Up to that time, as a result of the delicate political situation, the strike news had been handled rather fairly; now the strike stories are enlivened with rumors of violence, and every little disturbance is magnified into major proportions.

On the streets can be seen members of the state constabulary in their blue-gray uniforms, engaged in recruiting. Rumor has it that half the force has been released for recruiting duty.

Kept Press Grows Arrogant

Blast furnaces continue to be blown out while the press shrieks about the renewed prosperity that was to be Pittsburgh's if it had not been for the wicked coal miners. Secure in the knowledge that the treasury of the United States Steel Corporation is behind them, some papers have become unbelievably arrogant; read the following extract from a "news' story" on the strike, from the columns of a local paper:

"While the strike apears to be checked there is a possibility of the men who are now idle remaining out of the mines for a long time.

"The miners and their families will be the ones to suffer.

"All coal-operators are accustomed to reversals. Adversities do not create a chaotic condition among the mine operators. As a result of war-time profits, operators are the owners of unencumbered coal lands and equipment."

Can't Realize Struggle Is On

The miner have been forced out then, not because the "owners of unencumbered coal lands" cannot make a profit at present wages, but because they thirst after LARGER profits,

Traveling thru the beautiful Pennsylvania hills, in their April coat of green, dotted here and there with the pink and white of apple and plum trees in full bloom, it is hard to realize that here is the scene of a hard fought battle for bread.

The blackened tunnel-mouths, the silent tepees and smoke stacks from which now comes no wisp of smoke, seem unreal. So do the quiet groups of miners and the detachments of state constabulary.

This I tried to tell a little Italian miner as we trudged up the state road out of Monessen. We had been reading a circular distributed to the strikers by the Westmoreland Coal Company. It said that all the trouble was being caused by outsiders, that the company had always dealt with its employes thru the superintendents and would continue to do so, that it had the interests of its employes and the community at heart, that the outsiders did not and that the company had always given its employes a square deal. The circular ended with an appeal for the men to come back to work.

I handed the circular back to the little Italian. "Yes," he said, "it's a fine contry. Its a too bad, maka a fight alla time. Da boss he say treats 'em square. Dollar a day off da wage isa square? Da boss he's a [illegible] militia and state police were called out against them.

But while the press, the government and even the labor leaders are preaching harmony and [illegible] for property interests to the worker, their own efforts are by no means conducive to harmony. Laws forbidding strikes and a brutal open-shop campaign are depriving organized labor of their only weapon.

By the passage and enforcement of so-called anti-syndicalist laws, members of the I. W. W., because they are a little more aggressive in their fighting methods than their brothers in the A. F. of L., have been condemned to 10, 15 and 20 years in prison. In California mere membership in this organization has been made a crime.

Radicals who were sentenced to prison during the war under so-called war legislation, that was adopted during the war ostensibly to protect the country from foreign invasion and from attacks within are still serving long terms, while men who actually betrayed the country to and worked in the interest of the foreign "enemy" are long since at liberty. There are at least 100 Communists behind prison bars in the U. S., because they propagated views that were dangerous to the American capitalists.

JOBLESS WALK THE STREETS

Millions of unemployed are walking the streets looking vainly for work, but the government which demanded that the poorest of us contribute "till it hurts" during the war, has done nothing to ameliorate their conditions, to provide work or to insure them against unemployment.

The same government that called upon us to work 14 and 16 hours a day when it needed our labor, now turns a deaf ear to the starving men and women who are begging for work to feed their families. It is telling them that only decreased wages and longer hours on one side and increased consumption on the other will restore prosperity and put industry back upon a normal basis.

WHAT DOES IT ALL MEAN?

It means that the methods the American workers have hitherto employed have made them the helpless victims of capitalist exploitation.

It means that their steadfast refusal to unite politically against their enemy has made the ruling powers, from the President, and Congress to the most obscure board of alderman the willing tools of the owning class.

It means that strikes will be lost because the workingmen have neither organizations that can fight, nor the courage to win. It means that in Europe as in America capitalist oppression will increase and intensify until the oppressors are shorn of their power by a victorious working-class.

The proletarian revolution is not a process of development, by gradual consecutive stages toward ultimate perfection.

The Russian revolution, in this respect, fulfilled the position that Marx and his followers have always taken.

MUST LEARN THRU EXPERIENCE

It, too, after the first gloriously victorious attacks, suffered defeat after defeat. It could not be otherwise so long as a strong bourgeoisie, at home and in other countries, still retains the power to rally its forces for renewed attacks.

But every new struggle fastens the hold of the revolution upon the masses, teaches new lessons, adds to its assurance and self-confidence.

This has been the experience of the European working class. It is the path along which the American working class will have to go. It, too, will grow in might and power, in the number and the strength of its adherents as it becomes consciously proletarian, anti-capitalistic, revolutionary in character.

On this First of May the class-conscious proletariat of America, and its representative, THE WORKERS PARTY, will muster its forces, and measure its power that it may gather new strength for the coming struggle.

The crisis thru which we are passing, the danger of a general lowering of the standard of life of the masses that continued unemployment will infallibly bring, puts the American working-class force square before the alternative:

CAPITALISM AND CHAINS, OR SOCIAL REVOLUTION AND FREEDOM!

Secretary: Caleb Harrison.

The Textile Strike

Every two years or so the wage slaves in the textile mills rebel against the miserable conditions imposed upon them by the Textile Barons.

These strikes are usually spontaneous outbursts against the savage blows of the employers—blows against which even unorganized workers are forced to rebel.

In other trades such spontaneous mass strikes are usually taken advantage of by the trade unions to organize the workers and thus safe-guarding them against the reckless rule of the employers. But in the textile industry we find the most miserable situation.

The striking workers find themselves confronted with a whole row of textile unions independent of each other and attacking each other. At times one union settles with the bosses regardless of the interests of the rest of the striking textile workers. Thus the strikers are easily defeated and the capitalist enslavers victorious, become more ruthless than ever.

Shall hellish exploitation always be the lot of the textile workers?

Are the interests of the workers, their life and happiness to be ever sacrificed for "perfect" ideals in unionism of which some of our revolutionists dream great dreams?

Shall the egoism of factional leadership forever divide and defeat the workers and remain unchallenged? The supreme need in the textile strike is UNITY.

There must be, especially in the textile area, some sort of joined machinery composed of all organizations if the strike is to be won. Such joined machinery can be formed thru joint strike committees, joint boards, etc. Once the workers are united in action there will result UNITY also in organization. The final result is bound to be ONE UNION IN THE TEXTILE INDUSTRY.

Things don't happen by themselves. Only those who want the workers to win can force unity. Those who want the workers to win are the revolutionists. They must get together and create a unity conference and rally around themselves all those workers that understand their need—UNITY.

The need is for UNITY, regardless of the manipulations and protestations of the leaders. Those working for UNITY within each of the existing unions are bound to accomplish UNITY. Even if this strike is lost thru lack of UNITY, the slogan for UNITY must be carried forward so that in the future the rebellion of the textile slaves has not again be in vain.

During the strike our comrades and friends shall especially take care not to fall for such tactics as Ben Legere's, who is calling upon the capitalist authorities to interfere in the strike in an attempt to prevent an opposing union to collect funds in public for the relief of its members.

Such tactics only play into the hands of the reactionary bureaucracy of the United Textile Workers, as well as into the hands of the employers. They serve as a medium to breed bitterness, hatred and dis-unity amongst the contending organizations, each of which, after all, is composed of workers, depending on each other and hoping for a successful outcome of the strike.

Gompers and Foster Clash

partment's convention, but no sooner had this conference been opened before Emmet Flood, international organiser and Gompers' right-hand man, launched into a violent attack upon everything coming within the scope of having a progressive tinge.

He assailed the policies of the Chicago Federation of Labor and denounced, in vehement terms, the amalgamation resolution which had twice passed the Chicago body, charging that radicals and "Placard Artists" had packed the organization and made functioning of regular trade unionists impossible.

He attacked the Farmer-Labor Party and the activities in connection therewith of the Chicago body.

He bitterly denounced the activities of the militant unionists, and the militant spirit generally shown by the rank-and-file workers, and particularly the aims, objects and activities of the Trade Union Educational League.

Oscar Nelson, vice-president of the Chicago Federation, repeated the denunciations made by Flood and defended the present autonomy of each craft as against what he called "One Big Union" and "I. W. W.-ism."

Fitzpatrick and Nockels Reply

Both John Fitzpatrick and E. N. Nockels, president and secretary respectively of the Chicago Federation of Labor, took definite issue with the calumnies hurled at the central body, showing that such tactics would only tend to supply the enemy with ammunition.

The amalgamation resolution, stated Fitzpatrick, calls for a conference of international unions to take action. It is our program and we propose to stand by it.

The widely recognized capabilities of leadership of President Fitzpatrick, which is acknowledged in labor circles thruout the country, lends double weight to this statement and points promisingly toward the ultimate success for the progressive forces.

The purpose of the resolution calling for amalgamation of all crafts within each industry, which had been one of the causes for the violent outbursts of the [illegible] for standpatism, was explained by Foster, in genuine trade union language, when he secured the floor after John H. Walker had defended the Farmer-Labor Party.

Foster Speaks for Progress.

Foster stated that he recognized the power of eloquence of Flood, but he would nevertheless challenge him to debate amalgamation versus craft unionism from any platform.

In Europe, he said, labor is moving forward Amalgamation is already widely accepted and the one big union has become a live issue, and the Chicago Federation of Labor had simply moved with the times and not in advance by adopting the amalgamation resolution.

It does not mean the one big union but a number of large unions, each covering an industry.

The move toward amalgamation, said Foster, is a fundamental move which had its inception long ago, altho it has not been clear in the minds of most of its advocates as to how to bring it about.

It is a result of the general urge for unity of labor's forces. It has developed out of the present conditions of organization of industry, and it will move onward to its own completion whether we like it or not.

It is a movement which we will be compelled to accept or be swept aside, because the real issue has been narrowed down to amalgamation or annihilation.

We must keep step with developments, or be doomed to destruction. He challenged Gompers to show in what way anything in the resolution was contrary to the constitution of the American Federation of Labor. This challenge Gompers never replied to.

Explains Purposes of League

The Trade Union Educational League, said Foster, is not a union, but purely an organized educational movement similar to those which exist within some of the oldest and most conservative unions as for instance the printers.

It advocates certain programs of progressive methods; it aims to unify the militants in their activities to instil new and vigorous life into the trade union movement and strengthen its position as against an enemy—the "open shop" forces.

It is a movement created by necessity due to the present deplorable state of affairs in our unions, and Gompers may appoint an auditing committee, with Flood on it, to go over the books of the Trade Union Educational League any time he sees fit.

Gompers replied to the assault upon his narrow and stupid craft union policy, with a villainous personal attack upon Foster.

He repudiated his own selection of Foster to organise the steel workers and manage their strike in 1919, with the excuse that the strike was called against his advice, so as to intimate that Foster played into the hands of the steel corporation, when it is a well-known fact that a great effort had to be exerted to hold the steel workers back until the strike actually could be called.

Gompers venomously lashed into Foster's recent visit to Russia, where he met the Soviet leaders, declaring: "Never in history have I known such a self-appointed autocrat as this Foster, who discarded the I. W. W. doctrine to return to the red mantle of Sovietism."

Foster Accepts Challenge

Cleverly taking advantage of what had happened before, Gompers stated dramatically, Foster did not confer the honor upon me to challenge me to a debate.

I shall be willing to submit my side of the question to a committee of three genuine trade unionists, Foster may submit his side and then let them decide. Amid a storm of cheers and angry shouts to sit down, Foster accepted the challenge.

This conference shows the significance of the militant spirit which has been infused into the labor unions and of the crystallization and activities of the left-wing movement, such as the Trade Union Educational League represents.

The international per capita absorbers are becoming greatly alarmed. They are in deadly fear of such a movement and are willing to stoop to the lowest tactics to defeat it.

That is why such movements are always met with the combined opposition of both the reactionary labor officials and the forces of the employers.

This fact alone makes the movement worthy of the most active support of all militant, clear thinking workers who want to see their unions put into a position where they can function on behalf of their class.

This clash in Chicago between the forces of reaction and the forces of progress marks a sharp division which will continue to become more distinct to every man and woman in the ranks of labor.

The struggle between the two will become more intense until the forces of reaction have been wiped off the map.

Soviets, or Workers' Councils

The experience of the workers' struggles against capitalism has proven that the workers cannot take over the ready-made machinery of the capitalist state as it exists in the capitalist government, and use this machinery to build a Communist society.

The form of organization of the existing government, its constitutional basis, its laws, the bureaucracy which has been built up over a century, are all of a character to aid the capitalists in the struggle against the workers and cannot be transformed into instruments of struggle of the workers against the capitalists.

The workers' revolution in Russia, Hungary, Bavaria, the revolutionary struggles in Germany, all show that the Soviets, or Workers' Councils, are the organs of workingclass power which arise naturally out of the previous struggles and experiences of the workers in time of crisis.

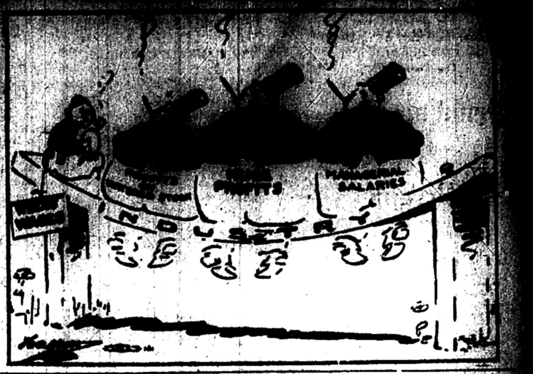
The Soviets are first constituted thru delegates elected by groups of workers in the factories and trade unions.

They are comparable to what a general strike council would be in the case of a strike embracing a whole city.

The local councils are federated in state councils thru elected delegates and the state councils in a national council or Soviet, which is the supreme organ of the working class government.

The Soviets carry on both the legislative and administrative work.

The Workers Party will carry on a propaganda to bring to the workers an understanding of the necessity of supplanting the existing capitalist government by a Soviet Government [illegible]



RUSSIA AND GERMANY

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The inevitable has happened.

Germany has been forced by the insane acts of the Allies themselves to form an alliance with Soviet Russia—something that would have been done long ago had the German Social-Democracy, been anything but the vacillating and cowardly crew of parliamentarians they are.

The ghost at the feast has materialized; the French imperialists and the British tricksters now are face to face with the danger they have long courted with their treacherous and murderous policy toward Russia and their insistence on indemnities beyond the ability of the German people to pay.

A smile will gild the face of every revolutionist in the world as he reads the comments of imperialism's outwitted diplomats. "Disloyal" and "dishonorable" are some of the phrases used by such upright and straightforward individuals as Barthou and Lloyd George in describing the Russo-German pact.

The suffering masses will care little about the charges of secrecy, etc., for, be it known, this is a treaty for peace and not for war.

No wonder the imperialists are astounded.

The affixing of the signatures of the German and Russian representatives to this document is the most important event since the Russian revolution. The entire political complexion of Europe has been changed overnight. Russia and Germany are back on the political map, and they bring with them the most powerful combination the world has yet seen—Germany's machinery of production and technical skill and Russia's natural resources.

We may as well mention the Red Army.

The diplomats of a tottering system will now see it in their troubled dreams.

Pittsburgh Comrades in Free Speech Fight

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Workers Party and the Civil Liberties Union have taken up the cudgels for the right of free speech and free assemblage here following the breaking up of the Coldwell meeting here in the Labor Lyceum.

Fred Merrick, appearing on the platform after the Young Workers League has given their yell, was about to announce that William F. Dunne would act as chairman, when three uniformed policemen appeared and ordered the crowd to disperse.

There were shouts from the audience of "Let's hold a meeting anyway." Fred Merrick asked the audience to leave in an orderly manner. They did so and gathered in the street where they were talked to by William Dunne, standing on the steps of the schoolhouse for five or ten minutes. The police were still in the Labor Lyceum and did not interfere until Fred Merrick mounted the steps and began to speak.

He was placed under arrest after he had informed the officers that he was making a protest against the high-headed procedure.

After consulting with W. E. Shoyer of the local Civil Liberties, Merrick was released on $30 bail. Appearing the next morning the magistrate fined him ten dollars.

The permit system is used in Pittsburgh. That is, permits are required for meetings. but any group suspected of radical tendencies is never granted a permit. The meeting is then stopped—if one is held—because its sponsors do not possess the magic document.

The members of the Workers Party here are solidly behind District Organizer Merrick in the fight he is making for the right to hold meetings unmolested both in halls and on the streets.

Who Spread Such Lies.

How anyone with a spark of sympathy for his fellowmen could make such a baseless assertion when millions are slowly perishing is inconceivable—unless he is callously indifferent to the great misery and suffering of millions of wretched human beings.

Exactly what Col. Haskell meant by this rumor is hard to say; it is clear, however, that many uninformed people may be misled into believing that what Col. Haskell says is true—and that might result in a slackening of relief efforts—an awful thing!

Nothing, however, could be further from the truth than this unsupported statement of Col. Haskell. Here is a definite warning, issued on March 24, by FRIDTJOF NANSEN HEAD OF THE INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS: "The danger of renewed famine—which would mean the death in torture of still millions more of our fellow-men NEXT WINTER—is BECOMING GREATER AND GREATER." This is an authoritative statement from one who KNOWS. A cessation or the slightest let-up now would mean that the terrible famine, which has been fought none too well, would in the end triumph and reap its harvest of human dead.

"More Than Ever Before."

We cannot give credence to the statement of Col. Haskell; it would be foolish and criminal to believe it. "The danger of renewed famine"—these words ought to arouse every worker to do his utmost. The Friends of Soviet Russia has but one answer to Col. Haskell and the New York Times—and it is—MORE THAN EVEN BEFORE. On May 6 and 7 there will be a huge house-to-house collection. [illegible] class behold May Day, 1922, with increased inspiration and contemplation of the great work that is still to be done.

Let it be remembered that May Day is the day of the revolutionary workingclass. In this country it must be carefully differentiated from Labor Day, for it bears as much analogy to this September holiday as the Third International does to the American Federation of Labor. It is a queer historical fact that May Day originated as a result of the agitation of the American Federation of Labor in 1889. The American Federation of Labor had launched the campaign for the 8-hour day and May 1, 1890, was set aside for demonstrations and strikes. At the International Socialist Congress, meeting in Paris in 1889, it was decided that the Socialist movement of the world should observe this day not only for the agitation for a shortened work day, but rather for the emancipation of the working class thru international unity.

Since then, the American Federation of Labor, with the exception of its most radical unions, has forgotten May Day and has accepted Labor Day in September, given them by the politicians. This fact is quite typical. The observance of a day that has not been legalized and which causes many workers to lose their livelihood for doing so, makes rebels who become absolutely fearless and dauntless. The American Federation of Labor seeks to realize its program in as legalistic a manner as possible. It commemorates labor's day in the same characteristic way by accepting the day set aside by Congress.

On Labor Day, the President of the Nation and the president of the American Federation of Labor have their official hobnob. Numerous cheap politicians tell the workers how noble they are, how important in the making of the nation. And they do not forget to mention what wonderful opportunities greet the laborers in this country. They can rise out of their class; they can become cabinet officials, mayors, politicians. In other words, they can leave the factories and in turn throttle those whom they have left behind.

But the workers are beginning to realize the falsity of these claims. They know too well that when William B. Wilson rose from miner to proprietor in a mining concern, his point of view changed and it became quite easy for him later on to sign those numerous papers of deportation against those who dared utter the truth about the exploitation of the working class.

The revolutionary conscious workers distrust the "friends of labor." They know that their strength lies within the working class of every nation and all nations combined. This ideal is symbolized in International May Day.

Every year, this Day is taking on more and more significance. The workers of the world realize increasingly the great bonds which unite all toilers. The fraternal greetings exchanged between the German and French workers prior to the fratricidal war of 1871 showed that they understood they had no grievances against each other. They were becoming conscious of the international brotherhood of man. The manifestoes at the outbreak of the Great War again emphasized this feeling of brotherhood.

The workers, however, failed to prevent the colossal bloodshed. They were misled by their leaders. They were not yet thoroughly masters of the philosophy of workingclass solidarity.

Let May Day, 1922, be a day of dedication. Let us dedicate ourselves to the emancipation of the working class. Let us remember particularly that strength lies in solidarity—not only of the workers of one country but of the workers of all lands.

Workers of the World, Unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains. You have a world to gain!

A Thousand Loaves—Or One?

We workers of America know that this is a question of life or death for you, Soviet Russia. We also know the origin of the conditions that mock the patient toil of your workers with a single loaf where a thousand might be won from the soil.

The Czars and the Lords of the Land long kept you in utter darkness, People of Russia, and upon your blood and sweat they built their thrones and castles.

Then came the upheaval of 1917 and you raised your beacon-light of freedom for the workers of the world.

Then intervention, blockade, counter-revolution.

The limited advances you had made in machine production and agricultural economy were largely lost. The capitalist powers attempted to strangle you by denying you food and machinery, Soviet Russia. Denikin, Kolchak, Yudenich, Wrangel, financed by these same nations, devastated immense areas of your farm lands. These robber bands converted the farming implements you badly needed into weapons for your destruction.

Without losing hope or spirit you fought under the emblem of the Hammer and Sickle, and won.

And the emblem under which you won now in a sense portrays the machine and agricultural poverty forced upon you by your enemies.

Your hope is in the soil that, burned with drought, has recently denied you bread. Your hope is in the new sowing and in the new harvest. And the Sickle, the little sickle—about all that has been left you—crooks an ominous finger and points out YOUR need and YOUR responsibility.

You have been compelled to sow with the hand of the past and gather with the sickle-of-no-future. Intervention, blockade and counter-revolution force you to remain in the dark feudalism fostered by the czarist regime.

Sometimes your half-starved oxen, sometimes your famished peasant, men and women, with bent backs wearily drag behind them the crooked stick-plow of ancient times.

Because the enemy forces determined upon your destruction, you wring one loaf of bread from the soil that might yield you a thousand.

To win your battle for liberty, you must win your battle for bread. But so long as the sickle mocks at the tractor your fight for bread must be a losing fight.

We workers of America, together with the workers of all countries, will not let you lose your battle for bread, Soviet Russia. WE WILL PIT THE TRACTOR AGAINST THE SICKLE. WE WILL SEND YOU HORSES OF STEEL AND POWER TO DRAW FROM YOUR SOIL A THOUSAND LOAVES WHERE YOU NOW DRAW ONLY ONE.

The tractor shall replace the few ancient tools the enemy has left you. Your fight for bread shall be won, Soviet Russia! Your future shall be secure. You shall be free.

Scarred Veterans on the Battle Line in Mine War

tors requiring the United Mine Workers to cease supporting the tent colony of over 1,100 miners and their families and to remove the occupants within 30 days.

The writ also suspends the prohibitions against organization work in the non-union districts. Organization work is already going ahead with renewed vigor. Most of the "strip" mines in Jefferson and Harrison counties are already closed. The refusal of some of the steam-shovel men, affiliated with an independent union, with headquarters in Pittsburgh, to strike with the miners, has kept some of the properties working. There are two armed guards for every miner employed, but actual coal production is very low.

The life of a scab here and in the little towns across on the West Virginia side is full of thrills. Men who never did an honest day's work in their lives now take a chance for the sake of the high wages paid scabs. Sooner or later their treason becomes known, no matter by what circuitous route they find their way to the pit-mouth.

Some morning as they leave their homes they are met by four or five hundred strikers lined up in the street, silent and grim.

No violence is offered the offenders. They are simply required to march thru the streets at the head of the parade for an hour or so.

This method is said to be the most effective one for scabbing yet devised.

Here in this district one meets many veterans of the hard-fought battles of the coal industry.

One of them is Tommy Thurman, fifty years of age, colored organizer for the United Mine Workers. Tommy's specialty is slipping into non-union camps where men of his race are employed.

He tells of fooling the mine guards in localities where a mule is more respected than a negro and where, if his mission were known, his life would be worth about as much as "a pair of box-cars" in his beloved crap game.

Here, too, is Martin Bloczevich, one of the ways and means committee in the Colorado strike, captain of a company of the miners' army of defense, who saw Louis Tikas clubbed to death under a flag of truce and the women and children shot and smothered to death in the tent colony at Ludlow.

Scarred and grizzled veterans of the class-war are plentiful in the coal camps. It would do no harm to have some of the theoreticians of the class struggle dig coal for a while.

[illegible] a new social order in which labor alone shall be the pass-key to the good things of life.

Where we have already won the first great battle, where we have despoiled the masters of their power and organized it in defense of our own class interest, there our May Day is the occasion of a review of all our proletarian forces, our industry, our army, our class.

In America this year the Workers Party celebrates its first May Day with all the enthusiasm of a husky youth who knows his mission to lead the workers in their final, successful struggle for freedom.

But our attitude is not that of self-satisfied aloofness. In every city where we have created contact with organized labor our May Day celebrations are held jointly with the unions and fraternal bodies.

This is unity for action, and May Day, above all others, is a most appropriate season for this stand.

Origin of May Day

Strangely enough, to this country, and to our own American Federation of Labor, belongs the credit for the inauguration of the modern observance of May Day.

At its St. Louis Convention, in 1888, May First was set aside as a day on which to begin a determined effort for the achievement of the universal eight-hour day.

The A. F. L. was young, virile, un-Gompersified then, its membership was in control and in activity was second to none on the earth. A year later the International took up the proposal and gave it world-wide revolutionary significance.

This season is particularly appropriate for the celebration of the awakening of Labor and a renewal of the fight for emancipation.

Ancient Significance

May Day is older by far and its symbolism is deeper even than the modern significance of Labor's rebellion.

In every religion of the northern hemisphere May is a holy month, sacred to the sources of life, to new life. Pagan Rome went forth to sacrifice in honor of Maia (Mother Earth), mother of Mercury, the youngest and fleetest of gods. In Tudor England the masses garlanded themselves with ribbons and flowers and danced round the May Pole upon the common green. In central Europe for centuries no work was done upon this day, it was given over to joyous celebration of the coming of Spring, of growing things, of better weather, of a better day.

Workers Fight for Day

But just as soon as the International adopted May Day as its own world-wide holiday, just as soon as it was imbued with a modern revolutionary significance, the master class of the entire world sought to suppress the workers' celebration with an iron hand.

In Austria, where the holiday had been observed as a folk-day for centuries, the first proletarian celebration was met with police interference, and with every form of economic pressure.

It was even worse in countries where the custom had died out, in Italy for instance, from 1890 to 1893 the observance of this day in any manner was forbidden by law.

Every May Day hundreds were arrested, many shot in the riots that resulted, until finally its observance became so general, despite all oppression, that the government withdrew its edict and let the movement take its course.

When parades and meetings were forbidden the Party secretary hit upon the idea of having a song sung in unison by all May Day celebrants.

The famous Italian labor song, the "Hymn of the Workers," was prepared and the government promptly decided to arrest anyone caught singing it!

The party secretary himself was arrested, and tradition has it that on the night of May first he was serenaded from outside the jail with this very song, and that he answered its chorus from his cell.

The Germans Celebrate

In Germany the observance of May Day had a checkered career. At first the masters used every possible weapon to prevent the observance of the day, locking out all who absented themselves from work.

This was generally answered by a strike until we soon found more strikes beginning on this day than on any other, and partly for this reason as well as from economic causes most of the union agreements were so arranged as to expire on May first.

It is said that the Party officialdom, as it grew more conservative, sought to [illegible] the revolutionary fervor of the May celebrations by instructing the members not to absent themselves from work on this day but to hold their meetings in the evening.

The instruction was very largely disobeyed, and in Germany to-day May Day is still an occasion to make the rulers tremble.

May Day in Russia

In Russia of course the contrast between the May Day celebration of the Czar's day and of to-day is most marked.

Now the red flag is the banner of the Soviet Republic, its troops are the armed working class, its workers are the owners of their jobs, and its State is the expression of working class will to suppress its capitalist enemies within and to support its struggling working-class comrades without.

Origin of Red Flag

The red flag, aforementioned, is inseparable from May Day celebrations. It too is far older than the convention of 1888.

Our pagan ancestors, confronted with many mysteries of life, soon explained them all away by inventing deities, not unlike themselves but minus certain very obvious human shortcomings.

In the sun they recognized the father of all life and soon made him their principal male deity.

The sun was always represented by a red disc, and this later became a red flag, the very word "flag" means flame, blazing fire, redness.

From the very earliest day of history the red flag has been the emblem of those who fought for freedom, and no exploiting class has ever had any love for that banner.

The colors of the masters were blue, azure, white—and even where there were no prohibitive laws the difficulty of keeping them clean restricted their use to those who owned slaves and did not have to work themselves.

They were the "washed" and went in white, the "great unwashed" dressed in red. And ever are the angels, heavenly do-nothings, dressed in white! The pagans did a better job, dressing their loafing gods in the aristocratic colors, while the workers, Maia, Isis, Athena, Flora, Apollo and Bacchus, go in red.

While the early Christians were a revolutionary, communist sect their banner was blood-red, as early hymns will attest. While the American revolution had the nature of a farmer revolt against oppression its banner, the flag of Lexington, Ticonderoga and Bunker Hill, was red, as was also that of Pulaski, the Polish patriot, who fought clear thru the revolution under a flaming red standard even now preserved in the State House at Baltimore.

May Day, and its Red Flag!

What a world of treasured memory these words hold to the working class.

Their struggle is not ended but it is waged on in good spirit.

The day is not far distant when every May Day observance the world over will be similar to that of Russia ever since 1918.

Our activities alone can speed that day, and speed it we shall.

[illegible] great attraction to our supporters.

As is well known to students of the theatre, Puccini, the composer of "La Boheme," was in his youth an artist whose riches were better [illegible] in terms of genius than in cash.

Like his heroes in "La Boheme," he lived in a miserable attic and found the problem of getting [illegible] much more difficult of solution than that of Harmony or Counterpoint.

It is said that the experiences of Rudolph, Marcel, Colline, and Schaunard are very largely pages out of his own life, and the bitter poverty of his youth undoubtedly had a great influence in his composing, in the his greatest opera, a powerful protest against capitalist repression of artistic genius.

His attack begins with the comedy of the very first scene and continues to the last moment of the sublime tragedy of the last. He begins with the poor artist and writer in the garret, burning their masterpieces in the fireplace in an effort to keep warm. No symbol of our system could depict its grim horror more clearly.

The relationship of wealth and commerce to art is shown as one of downright prostitution, it begins in the feast on the proceeds of a music lesson to a wealthy duffer, it continues in Musette's flirtation with the old banker who is made to pay the bill for the artists revelry, it is brought into greater clarity in Marcel's desertion of his canvasses to paint welcome signs for taverns, and finally its full tragedy is revealed in its breaking up of the love-dream of Rudolf and Mimi, her seduction and subsequent desertion by the viscount and finally her tragic death.

Puccini offers no revolutionary message or solution but he does voice poignant protest against the subjection of the artist to the dollar sign. The young artist-worker characters are shown to be filled with simple nobility of soul, and their utter helplessness against the forces of Moloch is unforgettable.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The wage board appointed by the Industrial Welfare Commission to make recommendations on the proposed cut in the minimum wage for women has disagreed, the employes on the board asking that the present wage of $1[illegible] be retained, and the employers that it be reduced to $14 in mercantile lines and $12 to $13.50 in manufacturing. The California Manufacturers' Association had asked that it be cut to $11.78 in all occupations and the State Federation of Labor that it be increased to $21.20.

MILWAUKEE. — Amalgamation of craft unions into industrial unions each to cover an entire industry, was indorsed by the Milwaukee Federated Trades council at its regular meeting. Resolutions were adopted calling on the A. F. of L. to arrange a conference of international unions where plans for amalgamation are to be made.

cuss One ront Policy in New York

More than 500 members of the Workers Party of Local Greater New York turned out to the first general membership meeting to express themselves on the resolution calling for a United Front in the coming elections.

The Central Committee was instructed to call another meeting of the general membership for a renewal of the discussion.

Executive Secretary Weinstone in opening the meeting stated that its purpose was not only to discuss the important question of the United Front but also to make arrangements for May Day and decide upon plans for building up the circulation of THE WORKER.

The May demonstration will take place on 110th St. and 5th Ave. A hearty response was made to the appeal for volunteers in the demonstration for distribution of leaflets, papers, etc.

Temporary Alliance with Socialists

"It is not intended by the resolution to unite with the Socialists," said Verblin opening the discussion. "This is a misrepresentation of the resolution. The object is to hasten the achievement of independent political action on the part of the American Workers, and to enable the Workers Party to win a contact with the broad masses.

"The alliance with the Socialists and Farmer-Labor Party in the coming elections is to pave the way for the realization of this goal.

"The American masses are ready to leave the capitalist parties but will not do so as long as the radicals are divided.

"The Party must not take a narrow party view of this question, but must consider whether or not the proposed alliance will be in the interests of the revolutionary movement, in general, whether it will serve the working class."

Comrade Verblin stated that in proposing this resolution he was not aping Moscow. Instead those who favored the United Front on the economic field alone were doing so.

The views maintained in the resolution was supported by Comrades Grass, Pearl, and others. Comrade Anderson stated that the formation of a Labor Party based on the policy of independent political action would be the greatest step forward in making the workers class-conscious. Those who oppose the fundamental thesis of the resolution join hands with Gompers who is also opposed to independent political action.

The resolution was opposed by a great number of speakers. Comrades Blohm, Garwit, Ragozin, Baker, Kesler and Jampolsky favored the united front on the economic field, but declared that the adoption of this policy to the political field meant the destruction of the movement—the abdication of the party to the Socialists.

Weinstone pointed out the defects in the resolution which he said disregarded the Party as a factor in the whole proposition. The analysis of conditions among the workers was correct, but the resolution said nothing of the Party. The Workers Party was just organized. Its identity has not yet been established. What would unity on the political field in the coming elections mean—independent political action on the part of the workers? No! It would mean unity with the Socialists. It would mean giving up independent political action on the part of the Party. It would result in confusion and the weakening of the Party morale. Let us build up a United Front within first, before we try a United Front without. Let our slogan for this period be—A Strong Internal Front—in the Party.

Plan Workers Party International May Day Celebrations in All Parts of the Country

Never before in the history of working class agitation in this country has there been such a widespread response to the call for the celebration of May Day, International Labor Day.

From all parts of the country come reports of the establishment of a United Front of the unions, working class fraternal organizations and the Workers Party, while in a few localities other labor political groups also are lending their co-operation.

Only a few of our districts have reported thus far and they only in part as to the celebrations conducted or co-operated in by the Workers Party, but they show the extent to which the appeal of the Central Executive Committee for a united front for May Day has been heeded.

Cannon in Boston.

James P. Cannon, National Chairman of the Workers Party, will speak at Boston, Peabody and Brockton, Mass. Other meetings and demonstrations have been arranged at Worcester, Fitchburg, Springfield, Chelsea, Norwood, Gardner, and other points in the State.

Amnesty Drive in New York

In New York the Party is co-operating in a great Famine Relief and Amnesty Drive over a three day period from April 28th to May 1st. Fifteen party speakers will appear at seven F. S. R. rallies on Friday, April 28th, these meetings being conducted for the purpose of enlisting workers for the monster street collections on April 29th and 30th.

On Monday, May 1st, the party is co-operating with the Workers Defense Union, the United Labor Council, and several active unions in an amnesty demonstration at which twenty-nine party speakers will be employed.

In Bridgeport, Conn., the party, in co-operation with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Amalgamated Metal Workers will have a mass meeting in the biggest hall in town, with Thomas O'Flaherty as the party speaker.

Conservative Unions Backward

The conservative unions were about to accept the invitation to join in the event but were held back by an impassioned plea by one of the stand-patters that this would result in their losing "their own" Labor Day in September. The comrades replied that they would gladly help the C. L. U. celebrate Labor Day in September in addition to May, but could not swing the rest of the unions in line.

In New Haven there will be a meeting in which the Machinists Union and several fraternal organizations will take part with the party.

In Rochester the local and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers are holding a meeting at which Robert Minor, on request of the union itself, will be the principal speaker. This was arranged immediately after the Workers Party meeting at which Minor spoke in that city recently, such was the impression made by our message on the organized workers there.

Owens at Erie and Buffalo.

Edgar Owens, Secretary of the National Defense Committee, will speak in Erie, Pa., on Sunday, April 30, and in Buffalo on May 1st. The Buffalo comrades have arranged for a parade and are sure of a big turnout. There will be an open-air demonstration in Schenectady also, with John Marshall as speaker.

Rose Pastor Stokes will speak in Newark, May 1st. A celebration will also be held in Paterson, N. J.

Caleb Harrison, National Secretary of the Party, will be the principal speaker in a great mass meeting at Philadelphia. At Reading there will be a joint Amnesty Meeting in which all unions and political organizations of labor will take part.

William F. Kruse, Assistant Secretary of the Party, will be the party representative at Baltimore on May first. This is a united front meeting in which several unions and the Socialist Party are taking part.

Meetings in Coal Strike District.

The Polish federation reports ten meetings arranged for its national organizer in the coal strike field of Ohio for May 1st and the District organizer and all other available Ohio speakers, about a dozen in all, will be busy during the entire two days covering the field.

In Pittsburgh, where the Coldwell meeting was recently stopped on police order and where the Party and the American Civil Liberties Bureau are fighting to establish the right of free speech, there will be a May Day meeting at which Fred Merrick will be the speaker.

William F. Dunne, of the staff of THE WORKER, will go from the Pennsylvania coal strike field to Detroit on the special invitation of the Detroit Federation of Labor for a big open air demonstration, April 30, and he will also speak at a party meeting at the House of the Masses on May 1st.

William Z. Foster will be the main speaker at two great Chicago demonstrations, one in the afternoon and the other in the evening. Milwaukee, Racine, Kenosha, Wisc., and Waukegan are all holding meetings.

Arne Swabeck, member of the C. E. C. will be the principal speaker at a meeting in Moline, Ill., while in Aurora an international program, with speakers in English, Lithuanian and Hungarian is arranged.

In the Illinois coal strike belt there have been some very effective arrangements made by the district organizer, T. R. Sullivan.

At Collinsville, Jack Carney, editor of "The Voice of Labor," will speak under the auspices of the Trades Council and the Workers Party, at 10 a.m., on May 1st; at 1 p.m. he is booked at O'Fallon, and at 3 p.m. at Belleville, all under similar auspices. The unions in this belt are the real goods and always respond to a straight class appeal for solidarity.

E. R. McMillan and John Braun speak at Livingston and Staunton. Earl Browder puts in a pair of very busy days with meetings at St. Louis, Mo., and Christopher, Sesser, and Zeigler, Ill. There is a parade arranged at Christopher.

T. R. Sullivan is busy in the western part of the district with meetings at Kansas City, Omaha and Council Bluffs.

There will be big celebrations all along the Pacific Coast. Thus far Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles have been heard from.

This is by no means the entire list but shows the extraordinary hold that our party has obtained on the allegiance of the masses in the short time it has been in existence and also indicates the spirit with which our members carry out every decision of the organization.

May Day, 1922, is a banner day in the history of the movement and in coming years it will be looked back upon as the day that marked the real beginning of a revolutionary mass movement among the workers of this country.

MOVE TO AVANTI BUILDING

The following organizations have moved their headquarters to 81 East 10th St. (Avanti Building): Workers Defense Union, Amnesty Alliance, United Labor Council, United Glove Workers, Featherboa Makers Union, Amalgamated Metal Workers of America and Amalgamated Food Workers.

LONDON.—"Is capitalism stabilising itself? Has it stabilised itself one tiny fragment since the Communist International declared that the period of world revolution was definitely perceptible?" asked Arthur McManus, chairman of the Communist Party of Great Britain, at a party conference on policy here.

"Capitalism," he went on, "is getting into more difficult water every day. Where is it turning to find a way out? Russia is the only part of the known globe in which there is hope of relief from the predicament that Capitalism is in.

"The proof of that is Genoa," McManus declared. "Genoa is the last attempt to reorganise Europe, and is the sequel to the Versailles and Cannes conferences, which failed because the only market in the world was not represented in them. They were, therefore, superseded by Genoa, where the Russians are taking part.

What Genoa Means

"The Russian Soviet Republic is the Russian Communist Republic," he continued; "it appreciates the significance of Genoa. It is a question of the extent to which one side is prepared to tolerate the other; how far Russia can make concessions to the countries at Genoa.

"The working-class movement of this country has the duty of seeing to it that the might and power of that class is directed against preventing our Government at Genoa trying to impose such conditions on the working class of Russia, as would be disastrous to the world revolution and particularly to the stability of Russia.

"The position of the capitalist world is indecision and indefiniteness," repeated McManus, and the only section that sees a ray of light is the Communist movement. The only section that can go to Genoa with any hope in their breasts is the one that comes from Russia, because it carries with it the outlook of the Communist Party."

Call to Action

McManus declared that the Communist Party was four-square with all workers who were fighting against the organized offensive of the employers, and would demonstrate it, not by mere expressions of opinion, but by action.

"We have reached such a stage now," he declared, "that the chief item of news, especially on Sunday, is the revolutionary purpose of the Communist Party, as discovered in secret in some conspiracy.

"How very foolish!

"Members of the party are even now in jail because they had the courage to stand out in the open and tell people what the newspapers think they can only discover in secrecy and plot."

McManus concluded with the opinion that the conference ought to send a message of "generous solidarity" and encouragement to the working class of every country now participating in the offensive movement against them.

Welcome Signs

An official resolution before the conference declared that international Capitalism was endeavouring to reduce the workers to unprecedented standards of misery, and welcomed the signs of a new spirit of revolt now becoming evident in every Continental country.

"The period of Apathy," it declared, "is giving place to stubborn resistance," which, with the co-operation of the Communist Party, would rapidly develop into conscious revolutionary attack against organized Capitalism.

The principle embodied in the resolution was endorsed by the conference after one or two speeches.

"We regard the Communist Party as an international force, whose prime object is to destroy Capitalism," declared W. Mellor.

"If we are going merely to be defensive, we shall be defeated," he added. "The best kind of defense in warfare is attack—and, make no mistake about it, this is warfare, fought with a blockade."

Greeting from Zinovieff

Zinovieff, on behalf of the Executive of the Communist International, sent a telegram of fraternal greetings in which pride at the English Party's work was expressed.

The conference sent a reply to the telegram announcing continued determination to go on with the work and forwarded also an encouraging message to the comrades in Georgia who have set up their own independent State.

Farmer: "Say, do you have to do that?"

Relations of National Defence Committee With the Workers Party Are Agreed Upon

The biggest single question taken up at the recent special meeting of the Administration Council of the Workers Party was that of determining the relations between the National Defense Committee and the Central Executive of the Workers Party. This committee has been taking care of cases arising out of the Espionage, Anti-Syndicalist, Red-Flag, and similar repressive laws, raising court costs, bail fees, and relief for the families of men held in prison or for deportation.

The organization of the Workers Party and the undoubted need for creating a defense organ of that party brought up the question of possible unnecessary conflict with the existing committee.

A sub-committee consisting of Kruse, Allison and Cannon took up the matter with the National Defense Committee officials and a mutually satisfactory thesis was formulated and agreed upon.

This is called to the attention of all party locals and branches, and is to be acted upon at once. The thesis follows:

The National Defense Committee

1. The functions and obligations of the National Defense Committee are taken over by the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party which shall continue the defense work under the name of the National Defense Committee. The C. E. C. shall appoint the director of the Defense Department who shall be known as the Secretary of the National Defense Committee. He shall carry on his work under the supervision and direction of the C. E. C.

2. The funds of the National Defense Committee shall be banked separately from those of the Party, and checks on this fund shall be signed both by the National Defense Secretary and the Secretary of the Party. All income from the sale of Defense Stamps to Party members, and other Party defense activities shall be deposited in the Defense Fund Bank Account. All expenses of the Defense Committee shall be paid out of this fund.

Branches of National Defense Committee.

3. The Local Division of the National Defense Committee shall be organized as follows:

a) The City Central Committee shall establish a Defense Department. There shall be a sub-committee selected from the City Central Committee to be supplemented by delegates from Branches of the Workers Party which body shall constitute the local Branch of the National Defense Committee.

b) The Local Division shall select its officers subject to the approval of the City Central Committee. There shall be a Secretary, a Financial Secretary and a Treasurer. The offices of Financial Secretary and Treasurer may be held by the same person if deemed advisable.

c) The local Division shall be in direct communication thru its officers, with the National Office of the N. D. C., and shall submit monthly reports of finances and activities to the National Defense Secretary and to the City Central Committee.

4. Local Defense Divisions shall remit all funds raised, above necessary expenses for current local defense needs, to the National Defense Committee.

5. Defense funds shall not be mixed with Regular Party local funds.

The defense cards and stamps mentioned in the report refer to an action taken at the December convention, which [illegible] should [illegible] fense purposes [illegible]

This will be [illegible] white defense card [illegible] than the folded [illegible] and a special 3c. defense [illegible]

The reason why the [illegible] these stamps was post[illegible] July first, was to give the [illegible] tion a chance to get the [illegible] stamp system in effective [illegible] first.

This due stamps system, [illegible] ing as it does two different [illegible] diate and three different [illegible] local units, using five different [illegible] of stamps, is quite intricate and [illegible] not be complicated by any [illegible] issues.

The members and local [illegible] understand it now, however, and [illegible] whole structure is working with[illegible] a hitch. By July 1st there will [illegible] longer be the slightest misunderstanding, and the defense fund [illegible] sessment will not result in any confusion.

The small size of the contrib[illegible] will not make it felt by any [illegible] but in the aggregate it will be [illegible] considerable help in maintaining [illegible] most pressing work of our movement.

The Comitee elected Comrade Edgar Owens to continue his [illegible] as Defense Secretary under the [illegible] arrangement as he has done [illegible] the old.

Other Decisions.

The Finance Committee, which [illegible] negotiating a loan of $4000 for the immediate needs of the national office, reported that its work was progressing.

If this sum could be borrowed from members of the organization in sums of $50 and upward, at [illegible] cent interest, it would save bank discount and other charges incident to getting the money thru regular channels.

These loans are personally guaranteed by a financially responsible committee and there is no possibility of loss. Comrades desiring to place such funds at the disposal of the party should communicate at once with the National Office.

The Finnish daily paper, Eteenpain, has moved from New York to Worcester, Mass., for more economical operation and better contact with the field. This necessitated the resignation of Comrade Sulkannen from the finance committee and his place was filled by Henry Askell.

"The law is wonderfully just. In its majestic equality it forbids the rich as well as the poor to sleep under bridges, to beg in the streets, and to steal bread."—Anatole France.

"THE LITERATURE LOAN CAMPAIGN"

WHAT IT IS—

WHAT IT HAS DONE—

WHAT IT WILL DO.

1. WHAT IT IS—

IT IS A PLAN to furnish working capital with which to establish a Literature Department in the National Office of the Workers Party.

THE WORK of this Department is to publish, sell and organize the distribution of the literature used in the educational and propaganda work of the Workers Party; to establish book stores, sales and distribution agencies, etc.

THE METHOD of raising this Loan is as follows: The Party members, Locals and Branches are asked to make loans to the Department in amounts of 3, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25 dollars. These loans are to be paid back on demand any time after 30 days in literature at a discount of 10 per cent. Special receipt books have been sent Branch Secretaries for handling these loans. Every Branch Secretary should have one of these receipt books. If any have not received one they should write us at once.

MORE THAN 100 loans totalling over $700.00 have thus far been sent us.

2. WHAT IT HAS DONE—

(a) It has helped us publish 10,000 copies of the Party Program and Constitution.

(b) It has helped us publish 5,000 copies of Vol. 1 of the A. B. C. of Communism.

(c) It has given us sufficient credit to enable us to order of the printer 5,000 copies of Vol. 2 of the A. B. C. of Communism to be set at once.

(d) It has enabled us to publish 1,000 copies of "Resolutions and Decisions of the Red Labor Union International."

(e) It has enabled us to purchase and sell nearly 10,000 copies of Foster's "Revolutionary Crisis."

(f) It has enabled us to have translated accurately and scholarly the entire volume of Lenin's "Imperialism."

(g) It has enabled us to purchase and sell several thousand dollars worth of literature which will mean much in propaganda and profit to our Party.

3. AND NOW—WHAT IT WILL DO—

(a) It will enable us to publish Lenin's "Imperialism" (about 170 pages) at once.

(b) It will enable us to publish at once Trotsky's "Defense of Terrorism"—176 pages.

(c) It will enable us to import the best European revolutionary literature useful to the American movement.

(d) It will enable us to assist District Offices and Locals to establish book stores and conduct their literature business on a better and larger basis.

(e) It will enable us to publish the many useful and necessary books dealing with the industrial, political and economic phases of the American labor movement so much needed.

(f) It will enable us to secure larger stocks and a greater variety of literature at cheaper prices and to sell cheaper.

(g) We will be able to do ALL this NECESSARY PARTY WORK quicker, more easily, more efficiently and more profitably—if YOU will make YOUR donation or loan AT ONCE.

Ask yourself this question: DO I WANT THESE THINGS DONE BY OUR PARTY? If your answer is "yes," then we do not need to tell you that RIGHT NOW is the moment to make your loan. Blanks below, use them.

[illegible] Gompers
His Makeshift Plan

By ISRAEL AMTER

Samuel Gompers) insists that the solution of the unemployment problem consists in providing labor with some kind of unemployment insurance and guaranteeing to the workers financial aid during periods of idleness.

He declares that labor will not rest till such a law is enacted. He asserts that unemployment is a social ailment that must be taken care of socially—with which we fully agree.

However, one would like to point to two countries that are well provided with unemployment insurances—Germany and England. In the former, one would not say that there is no unemployment because there is an unemployment insurance. The fact that there is no noteworthy idleness in Germany is due to quite different causes—to the necessity of the German workers paying the reparation damages partly in kind. Hence their being kept under the knout of the Allies—at their own expense.

In England, which is provided with a far better insurance scheme granting the worker far higher compensation, there is tremendous unemployment (nearly 2,000,000 registered jobless men and women). There is the regularly paid dole, which the State has not dared to abrogate, as much as it would like to do it. Nevertheless, the unemployed are not properly taken care of—and are now resorting to methods of their own, in order to procure better maintenance.

It is obvious, therefore, that if we trust to experience there is nothing to expect from unemployment insurance as a permanent insurance against unemployment. It is a makeshift of the worst order, since it merely acts as a palliative and in no way touches the vitals of the issue—the question of UNEMPLOYMENT.

In any case, to wait for the enactment of a law providing compensation next year or the year after is nonsense. The workers have been out of work for months, some for more than a year. Unemployment has affected not the unskilled worker alone. Statistics demonstrate that organized labor has suffered as much as the unskilled hand. The professions are hard pressed. The engineering profession has passed thru a period of serious depression, owing to the lack of construction work.

IMMEDIATE solutions of the question must be provided, if serious trouble and derangement to the system are not to ensue. Work must be furnished without delay, work in large measure for the 10,000,000 who have been locked out of the factories and ask in vain for any kind of work. Engineers are working as clerks. Ministers are walking the streets. Students find it impossible to get any kind of employment. Skilled mechanics are a drug on the market. Men with high army records are in the bread line. AND ALL THE GOVERNMENT DOES IS TO SHRUG ITS SHOULDERS AND PROFESS ITS INABILITY TO IMPOSE THE TAXES ESSENTIAL FOR PROVIDING COMPENSATION.

Such an attitude might have been possible several years ago, before the war. But it is not permissable today. The workers won't stand for it. To talk prosperity and let them starve; to talk of shiftlessness and keep men from working; to deprive them of an opportunity to earn a living and then drive them to crime for which they receive a high penalty—all of this is so obviously crazy that the workers will not accept it any longer.

Whether the State has made a promise or not; whether it must fulfill to all the workers in the country what it promised to the soldiers or not; and whether it will use the same excuses and evasions to escape its duty toward the workers who are caught in a trap, or not; is immaterial. It will be held to acount, if no work is provided.

Charity will not work; "being a neighbor" is superfluous; odd jobs will not settle the matter. The workers want a steady job and want it badly. Who is going to get it for them?

The workers have seen too often that when the employers, the capitalists and financiers, want anything, they merely go to the government and in some mysterious manner they obtain just what they desire. Laws are passed with the wave of a wand. Money which otherwise is so scarce, taxes which cannot under any circumstances be imposed without absolutely ruining the country and inflating prices, are obtained without any trouble. The railroad magnates want $500,000,000—a stroke of the pen makes it theirs. The ship owners need a subsidy, in order to be able to compete: millions are given to them in the name of patriotism, for surely you would not have the American flag driven off the seas. The farmers—especially the larger, middle-class farmers need loans; no one dare buck the backbone of the nation.

Only the worker—the man with no tools, no property but his labor—is utterly ignored.

The American worker is a great reader of headlines. He goes to the movies. He is learning the vicious ways of "big" men. He knows that there is always money in the public treasury for graft. He is beginning to ask why there is "not a penny in the treasury for the workers," particularly the unemployed workers.

Slow to grasp the essence of organization, and still not determined to fight for the right to organize, the jobless, nevertheless, are gradually grasping the need of standing together and fighting collectively.

In England and Canada, in Ireland and Sweden, in Italy and Germany, they are learning more rapidly. In England, the unemployed are not only well organized, but have entered into joint councils with the workers on the job to work conjointly against strikebreaking.

Unemployment insurance, "help a neighbor," "give a man a job"—all of these are pretty schemes that are getting the workers nothing. Only an organization directed toward one end—toward demands on the government for maintenance at regular wages, offers anything to the worker. The unemployed in the United States are on the right path. Let them not be diverted by pet schemes that are palliatives of the remotest order.

COMPULSORY OBEDIENCE — Drawn by Art Young

"What the chambers of commerce did not do thru their publicity and the activity of their industrial spies, the State and Federal governments have done thru the use of the constabulary and the injunction."—Scott Nearing.

A CALL TO RISE!
By NERMA BERMAN

May brings spring and with it a call and an urge for all life to rouse, sprout and bloom.

May Day is the call to Labor to rise, assume its duty—and fight its exploiters and oppressors, the Capitalist Class.

May Day should begin Labor's New Year, make for a more determined and earnest attack of the workers upon capitalism and hasten the day of the Workers' Soviet the world over.

May Day welcomes the unorganized worker to manhood—to fighting, i. e. to join the first unit of the Workers' Army—the union of his trade.

To the trade unionist May first tells another story. It tells him that paying dues is not enough, that activity is very essential. It points out that the workers have a goal beyond wages and hours, and that the fight in the union is not merely industrial but political as well. The miners and textile workers can well testify to this in their recent experience with the Pennsylvania Constabulary and the New England militia.

To the revolutionist, May first whispers words of courage. Organize! Fight! Even America in all its darkness and capitalist czarism will have to fall in line.

See Russia! Only yesterday the victim of slavery—today the Workers' Soviet Republic, is the fear and menace of the capitalists of the world.

Its leadership, well informed, intelligent and courageous, has exposed the hypocrisy of the statesmen of Capitalism.

The Genoa Conference shows plainly their inability to cope with the wisdom and strategy of the Workers' Republic.

The Revolution in Russia is a fact—no longer a mere illusion and a vain dream.

Workers! It can and must be done in every country! Workers! Take your stand and come out on May Day, 1922, en masse, more determined than ever to achieve the Workers' Soviet of America and finally the Workers' Soviet of the World.

Procedure on Routing Speakers from the National Office

Instruction to Locals: If you want a speaker, outside the local talent which is under your control, notify your DISTRICT ORGANIZER. Tell him what kind of a meeting you want to run, the day, date, and time of day, the name and location of the hall (if you already know it), how to get there, its capacity, and the size of the crowd you expect. Tell him also what kind of advertising you expect to do, and how much the meeting will cost you.

You can suggest the names of some speakers you would like to have but you are not to advertise them until you get permission from the district office.

Instructions to District Organizers: If you want a speaker under the control of the National Office notify that office in plenty of time.

Tell us the occasion, the kind of meeting, the city, and location of the hall (if you know), the date, and the time.

If you can make any arrangements for a consecutive series of dates report that. If you prefer any particular speaker, tell us about it, but DON'T advertise until you get authority from the National Office.

UNITED LABOR COUNCIL

The United Labor Council has moved its headquarters to 81 East 10th St., N. Y. City, and the Council meetings will be held at that address every Wednesday at 8 P. M. Please instruct your delegates to the Council accordingly.

The United Labor Council has grown in strength and influence in the last few months and all affiliated unions should co-operate in order that this growth continues.

Instruct your delegates to the Council to attend and report regularly of the Council activities.

The office hours of the secretary are from 12 to 7 P. M., every afternoon at 81 East 10th St., and all mail should be sent to that address. The new telephone is Stuyvesant 4501.

NEW YORK.—The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, thru their general office here, have cabled $15,000 to buy equipment for a new hospital which has just been opened in Moscow. The money was sent to a Berlin bank, where the equipment is to be bought at a low price owing to the favorable rate of exchange and sent to Moscow immediately.

Plug-Uglies and Yellows Wage Futile Attempt to Disrupt Furriers' Union

It is a sign of the times when the reds are doing the constructive work of organized labor while the yellows, who were kicked out of office for having made a mess of the job, are now fighting to get back their jobs.

It is natural in this case that the yellow press, the Jewish Forward and the Call, should refuse to condemn the "disrupters" and "borers from within" by not publishing the statement below:

The Joint Board of the Furriers' Union has adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, Certain persons have lately started a campaign against the Furriers' Union and the office staff, spreading harmful rumors and falsehoods for the purpose of discrediting the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union in the eyes of the Labor Movement in general, and in the eyes of the fur workers in particular, and

"Whereas, These persons pretend to be fighting the Joint Board on the basis of 'Rights' and 'Lefts,' therefore be it

"Resolved, To enlighten the working class about the facts in the case, that this struggle has been going on in the Furriers' Union for years before the split into 'lefts' and 'rights', that this struggle has been and still is being waged by the fur workers against an organized clique, which has distinguished itself by the use of dishonesty and terror against the members of the Furriers' Union, that the persons who are leading the attacks on the Joint Board today were pushed aside by the workers immediately after the strike of 1920, and now, wishing to get back into power, they are hiding under the cloak of 'fighting the lefts,' making use of the most dishonest methods and the most shameful scandals against the Joint Board and the office staff.

"Be It Further Resolved, To warn the members of the Furriers' Union to be on their guard, and to call on them to defend the Union against this clique, that has organized itself into the 'Welfare Club' and under this name is conducting the fight against the Furriers' Union, breaking up meetings, terrorizing the members and hindering by various means the general organizational work.

THE OPEN SHOP

By Robert Whitaker

My job, it is of thee, poor shield from penury, of thee I sing, job that I long have sought until almost distraught, for which I nearly fought, thy praise I bring. My native open shop, guarded by thug and cop, I dote on thee; I love thy longer day; I love thy meaner pay: American: O say, that's one on me. Let all be free to grab; let all be free to scab; let grafter loot; let law and order clans, legions and Ku Klux Klans, and all our Black and Tans burn, hang and shoot. Our Wall Street god, to thee, great god of normalcy, to thee we sing; long may the plutes prevail, while thinkers rot in jail; the Open Shop, all hail; thou art the thing.—Rank and File.

May Day and the Class War Victims

By JOSEPH M. GOLDWELL

As you celebrate May Day, Labor's International holiday, with parades, mass meetings and dances I want you to give a few minutes of thoughtful consideration to those who are held as prisoners of the class war.

In every Federal prison and in many State prisons of this country there are many, many good comrades, who will have visions of May-Day celebrations. For while their bodies are behind stone walls, their spirits are free. They, too, will join in the international celebration, they, too, will gather in groups and talk of May-Day celebrations of the past and of May-Day celebrations that are to come.

I have spent three May Days behind stone walls and steel bars, the last two years in the Federal prison in Atlanta, Ga. I will never forget last year's celebration in that Bastile of Capitalism. There were quite a few of us who understood the significance of the day, and as we had a recreation hour, when all the first-grade prisoners were permitted to roam around the yard, which is enclosed by a 35-foot high cement wall; a few of us met at a certain place. We had the three Russian comrades with us, Abrahams, Lippman and Lachovsky. Hyman Lachovsky brought his violin with him he played the International, and we sang a few verses of the "Red Flag," and "Spike" Moore drew a large revolutionary motto in the sand. And I think the most of us wore a small piece of red ribbon. That was our celebration. I wonder how the 114 boys who are still "in" will celebrate May Day.

Their spirits are still undaunted their courage just as firm.

There are two other comrades who will pass their second consecutive May Day in prison.

I hardly think they will feel like celebrating. I know I would not, and I do not think you would either, if you were in their position. They are awaiting to be called to court almost any day to hear the judge sentence them to be electrocuted. To be legally murdered for a crime they know nothing about.

They, too, are prisoners of the class war. Bartolomeo Vanzetti was active in the Italian colony in Plymouth, Mass. He took a part in their strike, he was a writer and a speaker on subjects pertaining to industrial freedom.

Nicola Sacco, poor Nick, a comrade of mine in the Hopedale, Mass. strike in 1913. Always active, a typical "Jimmie Higgins," tireless, always ready to do the next thing that was to be done. Sacco and Vanzetti will spend May Day waiting and waiting, for the call to come to court to be sentenced to death. Innocent yet found guilty of murder by a New England jury. Why? Simply because Sacco and Vanzetti were foreigners and radicals. If they are executed it will be because the workers of this country have not yet realized that these two men are the innocent victims of both class and racial hatred. It is our duty to arouse the workers of America and demand a new, and a fair and impartial trial for Sacco and Vanzetti.

Each year about this time I am reminded of the murder of a comrade of Sacco's and mine—Emlio Bacchicio. He was shot by a special policeman on April 24th, 1913, while on picket duty in the Hopedale, Mass., strike.

When I am at liberty I'll go to St. Mary's Cemetery in Milford, Mass., and lay a floral tribute of remembrance on his grave. The last two years, while I was in prison, I sent money to Milford to buy the flowers and had some other person place the flowers on my comrade's grave.

This year I had intended to do this personally, but Nick Sacco is in danger and I am called away to ask the workers to save him. Some one will place the flowers on Emilio's grave, but it will not be Nick Sacco nor I. Perhaps next year we will go together on our mission of remembrance. For Emilio Bacchicio was a martyr of the working class, a soldier of the army of the workers, who died on the picket line doing his duty.

So my message for May Day, 1922, to my comrades is to celebrate the International Labor Day by parades, mass meetings, or in any other way that may seem desirable; but give a thought to those who are still behind the bars; to those whose lives are in danger. And resolve that you will do all in your power to bring about their early release.

Remember the workers' dead, our martyrs, our heroes, keep their memory green and resolve that they shall not have died in vain.

Our duty is clear and plain, never mind what the hairsplitters and spittoon philosophers are doing. Our work, your work and my work, is to keep everlastingly at it.

"And tho cowards flinch
And traitors sneer,
We'll keep the Red Flag flying here."

American Workers [illegible]
Solidarity with World La

By BOB LOW

The working class thruout the world will celebrate May the international holiday of Labor.

The workers of America will on May Day proclaim their radeship and solidarity with the workers of the world.

The Workers on May Day will recall their bitter str celebrate their victories, honor those who have sacrificed given up their lives on behalf of the workers, and gather re inspiration and energy to carry on the struggle till every w is free from economic bondage and every exploiter of labor driven the face of the earth.

The workers of America will not forget the hundreds of workers have been butchered in cold blood at the behest of the Amercian and industrial plutocracy of millionaires and billionaires.

The Haymarket affair with the unjustifiable and outrageous hanging of the noble Parsons and his comrades will not be forgotten. They were executed because they championed a shorter work day of no more than eight hours for all the workers in America.

The Homestead strike and the cold blooded murder of workers defending their homes and living conditions will not be forgotten.

The Colorado strike and the holocaust, inspired by J. D. Rockefeller, Junior, and executed by vicious gunmen and stool pigeons, that resulted in the burning to death of 17 innocent women and children of the working class will not be forgotten. Nor will the fact that that damnable deed was done to protect the billions of Rockefeller and the Standard Oil Company against the encroachments of hard working miners who demanded a shorter work day and the right to belong to the union of their trade.

Remember Free Speech Fights

The Free Speech Fights of the I. W. W. on the Pacific Coast that resulted in the branding, lashing and jailing of young men and women who wanted to assert their constitutional right to freely express their opinions, will not be forgotten.

The deportations at Bisbee, Arizona, where at the request of the copper interests 1600 men were like cattle driven out of their homes, separated from their wives and children and dumped on the hot sands of an American desert to die of thirst and starvation; the lynching of Frank Little, the heroic champion of the workers and organizer of the I. W. W.; the degradations, bloody war, murder and persecution against the fighting and intrepid miners of West Virginia; the white terror of the steel strike and its final suppression by the United States' Government; the reaction, brutality, slugging, imprisonment and slaughter of workers during the war and after, together with all the other innumerable atrocities suffered by the working class on account of capitalism and its dominance over the country will not be forgotten.

Denied Opportunity to Labor

They represent the scars of the battle continually going on in industry and outside of industry between the workers who have nothing but their labor power to sell and the exploiters of labor who wax luxuriant in the fabulous fortunes they accumulate. In the midst of a paradise of plenty produced by the energy and ability of the workers, the workers have insecurity and poverty for their lot. In the United States today five million able bodied men and women willing and anxious to work are denied that opportunity.

Poverty, unemployment, crime, low wages, child labor, the open shop and savage imperialist wars are the curses of modern capitalism.

Capitalism is the arch slave driver. With the whip of economic necessity the need of a job in order to live, he drives the workers till their backs are weary with toil. He starves them into submission or drives them into submission with bloody brutal force.

Capitalism not only enslaves the workers of its own country but those of other countries as well, England has its Ireland, Egypt, and India, France its African and Chinese colonies, The United States the Philipines, Haiti, and Santa Domingo.

The climax of capitalist greed was world war, devastation and death.

The law and order of capitalist rule is the law and order of modern militarism that in 4½ years has strewn the battle-fields of Europe and Asia with 10,000,000 corpses of soldiers, all young, healthy specimens of life and members of the working class.

The enemies of the working class are those who support and perpetuate the rule of capitalism.

Capitalism is that system of society based upon the superiority of property to human rights, and the exploitation and enslavement of the many for the enrichment of the few.

War Until Victory Comes.

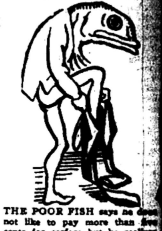
Not until every vestige of capitalism and its bloody rule will be wiped off the face of the earth will the workers cease their revolutionary struggle to overthrow it.

On May Day the workers of America proclaim their determination to keep up the war against capitalism until victory is won.

They proclaim their loyalty to the Russian workers who in spite of civil war, capitalist military aggression, a blockade and famine have maintained their power and have kept burning the red beacon light of proletarian revolution to the workers of all other capitalist countries.

Wisdom of the Poor Fish

By ART YOUNG



THE POOR FISH says he does not like to pay more than five cents for carfare but he realizes that the stockholders have to get something for their money.

They proclaim their solidarity to the Spanish workers who are th victims of the brutal white terro of the Spanish bourgeoisie, to th Italian workers who are the victim of the Fascisti assassins, and to al other workers who are today bein slaughtered by the capitalist ruler of their respective countries in a ma effort to stamp out the industrial an revolutionary organizations of th workers. The American worke send them a message of their indi nation at the cruelties inflicted upo them and pledge them all possib assistance in combating the whit terror of their capitalist rulers.

Our May Day Tasks.

The workers of America pledg themselves on May Day to undertak as their immediate tasks:

The relief of the Famine Stricke of Soviet Russia;

The release of Tom Mooney an Billings who have languished in a California bastille for over fiv years tho they are absolutely innocent of any crime and are guilty o loyalty to the working class;

The release of all political an class war prisoners, among whom are many members of the I. W. W who bear the scars of service in the working class movement;

The release of Sacco and Vanzett whom the American capitalist would electrocute just because they believe that the workers should be free from capitalist exploitation an bondage;

The defense of labor's organization against the forces of the open shop that seek in the destruction of labo unions, to wipe out union condition won by the workers after years o struggle, to increase the hours o work per day, to lower wages and to degrade the workers in industry.

Greetings to All Fighters

greetings to all the champions an fighters of the working class, and to all my valiant comrades who in spit of great difficulties have managed to keep together the revolutionary organizations of the workers and to spread its propaganda. I send a May Day message of cheer and hope to all my comrades who are behind bars. I close with the hope that this May Day will see the mighty outburst of labor demonstrations of solidarity large enough to arouse terror in the hearts of capitalist society and to awaken among the workers the desire for power and freedom.

"Big Biz," the vamp, making up for her new movie, "Almost Within the law."

By [illegible]

[illegible] night, as I passed along the street, I heard a feller making a [illegible] noise. It was one of those Communists shooting off his mouth about [illegible] bad off the workers are. He [illegible] have to tell us that. We know [illegible] without him telling it to us.

[illegible] don't like them fellers. They [illegible] let a feller alone. One day, it's [illegible] we aren't getting a fair show [illegible] deal, are we?" Next day, and every other day after that, all I hear [illegible] "Say, why don't you do this, and why don't you do that?" I want them to let me alone. If they would only stop bothering me, I wouldn't care what they did or what they didn't do. So that's where I stand on these fellers. But just the same, they're a bad bunch . . . and that reminds me of last night.

In the church near City Hall, one big guy gets up, he's the owner of that big department store on Main Street, and he says, "There's nothing the matter with this country, except those damned agitators." The big bloke goes on: "We were having fine times during the war, and even now, all of you would be enjoying the bounties of life, if the confounded Communists, those Anarchists, that's what they are, Anarchists, didn't interfere." And lowering his voice, he asked us, "Do you know what they did, my friends?"

Friends? Huh! This got my goat. This here guy calling me his friend. "What's his game?" I asked my buddy. "You know when I went round to his store after a job as a truck driver (my clothes was sort of shabby, and my shoes were almost gone), the watchman says: 'The boss he told me, 'Don't let any loafers in'"; so he turns me away.

Well, he goes on, answers the riddle all by himself, yelling out: "They were criminals, dynamiters, murderers. Don't you all remember how a few months ago, they laid a plot to kill Morgan, the man who is the soul of this glorious land of the free, without whom the entire social fabric would crumble? Don't you remember that they fired a wagon conveying dynamite, and killed several of the citizens indispensable to this democracy? This country is founded on democracy, the rule of all. The Communists killed several of the citizens, and since then the country has been going to the dogs. My brethren, we cannot rest, until we bring these victims back to life. And for that we need CAPITAL! We must continue our support to the "Resurrection Society." Unfortunately, neither I nor my fellow-capitalists can contribute anything from our millions, for they are necessary for laying railways in Polynesia, and thus bringing to the natives the blessings of Civilization. And will the ushers kindly take up the collection?"

I reached down into my jeans, and fished out my last nickel, that some good skate had handed to me, a working stiff, those dressed up guys don't give you nothing. I had gone without a meal that day, and had run into the church to get warm. And after the sermon, I was thinking, I'd get some coffee and. But hell, I could live another day without eating—what I was after was a job; and here was a chance to get a job, and have a home. I was playing for big stakes, so I dropped my nickel in the plate—and dreamt of my home when I was a little shaver, and how my mother used to save her pennies to buy me a cake before she bundled me off to school. And so I lost my way up in the clouds, and was brought back to earth by a dig in the ribs. "Say," says my buddy, "what have you done with that nickel? Have you gone dippy?" "What do you mean, dippy? Ain't that true? Ain't the Communists to blame for our hard times? Didn't they set off that bomb? Didn't they send bombs to Palmer and to other officials who are in the government? Sure they did. Didn't all the papers say so? I read it myself!"

To my surprise, my buddy, Jim's his name, got mad. "What?" he screamed. "Don't you know that that was a frame-up? Whenever things become very bad, when unemployment hits the country hard, then the government looks around for a fall guy. And they did it this time. They tell us to wait until the good times return, and in the meantime we are to take damned low wages, and pay skyrocket prices for the few things we are able to buy. That's the dope they hand out to us. Those 'Reds' tell us it's the fault of the rich, who get away with all the swag. And so the government tries to show us that the 'Reds' are bomb-throwers. The rich want to put the 'Reds' in bad with the rest of us. I don't fall for his line. Say, Hal; you ought to know him by this time. He isn't our kind."

That knocked the wind out of me. Then I picked a paper out of the gutter. "There," I cried. "See, Jim? I told you that them Communists are to blame for everything. Look. 'MURDER AS FINE ART—BAND OF FORTY COMMUNISTS.' Didn't I tell you? They are to blame for everything. And I think you are one of them, the way you stick up for them. Don't you talk to me that way again, if you want to pal around with me."

And all the time I was panning him, Jim was reading the article through thoughtful-like, waiting till I was through. "Well," I demanded, "what have you got to say now?" Jim looked up, slowly raising his eyes to meet mine. He didn't seem to be the Jim I knew; there was pity in his face. I had to turn away.

"No, old-timer," he began, "that's just the trouble. You read only the headlines, and you don't read between the lines. The case is easy; it shows them up. The Schlieffen family in Germany wished to kill their cousin, so as to get his fortune. So they—but let the grocer tell it, whom they hired to do the dirty work. He says: 'I proposed to shoot Count George, dynamite his castle, AND FORM A BAND OF FORTY COMMUNISTS TO MAKE IT APPEAR THAT REDS HAD COMMITTED THE CRIME.'"

The Coming Year

By J. ANTHONY ANDERSON

The past year has been a year of unusual aggression by the capitalists against the workers. But it was also the year in which the revolutionary movement of the United States underwent a re-birth. As against the ruthlessness of capitalist aggression, the workers are forging a new tool which, absorbing the revolutionists of all factions, is growing powerful with wonderful rapidity.

This new tool is the Militant Working-Class Party which, by planting its organization in the very midst of the fray, enables revolutionists to urge on the masses to new and ever sharper struggles against capitalism on the industrial as well as the political field.

Let us all do our full share during the coming year to make the WORKERS PARTY a powerful weapon for the emancipation of the laboring masses.

The Results at Washington

Disregarded by the world, like an old and faded ballet dancer, the Washington Conference has peacefully passed away.

The solemn session preceding the adjournment was opened by President Harding's chaplain with a prayer, after which the President himself took the floor and assured all those present that the conference had proven a brilliant success.

Lloyd George, taking his clue from Mr. Harding had George V. echo that sentiment in his throne address.

And any doubting Thomases who in the face of testimonials such as that steadfastly refused to believe in the tremendous feat alleged to have been accomplished at the Conference must be declared ripe for the lunatic asylum.

But the perfect concert of this mutual admiration society was somewhat cruelly interrupted by the leader writer of "Temps" who coolly informed his readers that the Conference had hardly improved China's situation nor challenged Japan's supremacy in the Far East.

The Conference had avowedly been convened with the purpose of settling the Chinese problem and of averting the danger of a new world war.

Even before they met the powers concerned had been well aware of the fact that unless they reached an agreement with regard to China general disarmament would be a thing impossible.

And tho in the very last hour the necessary signatures were affixed to a scrap of paper providing for the return of Shantung to China, not even the shrewdest of diplomats can definitely state if and when that will happen. And of what good would be the return of Shantung to a China identical with the Pekin Government controlled by Japan's bought agent, General Chang-Tso-Lin?

Great Britain Yields to U. S.

The heated discussion between the Japanese and Chinese delegates were a well rehearsed and brilliantly performed comedy. Both the British and American representatives thought they knew what was going on, had to hold their peace for fear of making the Conference the laughing stock of the world. The U. S. started a counter-move in China, however, and bought the governors of a few provinces with a view of getting in by a back alley and overthrowing the Pekin Government These efforts were of no avail, however.

The result of the Conference in a nutshell is this: Great Britain has bowed to the U. S. who on their part have yielded to Japan, while France has calmly been fishing in troubled waters.

When the British delegation left for Washington it was resolved to give way to the United States. With the whole Empire in the throes of a gigantic economic crisis, the British Foreign Office simply had to have peace, no matter what its price.

Great Britain had to remain content with the knowledge that the American navy equalled its own, that the tonnage of the American merchant fleet was rapidly outdistancing that of the British and that the American Oil Trust was claiming all the rich naphtha fields for its own.

Briand Gets Cold Shoulder

Great Britain's conciliating policy towards the U. S. is today the basic fact of world politics.

The extent of British submission had even surprised those "in the know." M. Briand for instance arrived in Washington under the delusion that conflicts would arise there between the British and American delegates and in his well-known generosity offered his services as an arbitrator.

He was shown the cold shoulder, however, and thus in the very beginning manoeuvered into a disadvantageous position. It is characteristic of the secret diplomacy still going on in the capitals of the great powers that a man such as the Premier of France is not informed on the sentiments of Washington and London.

That this really was the case was divulged by H. Wickham Steed, editor of the London "Times" and publicity agent to the British Delegation, and then corroborated by French sources.

If a Briand could err as grossly as that, it can easily be imagined what the German babes-in-the-woods of the Wilhelmstrasse accomplish on the slippery ground of world politics.

French Turn to Japanese

The French, however, compensated themselves for their first failure by intriguing with the Japanese who also were in an unfavorable position in the beginning because Great Britain had given notice of the termination of the British-Japanese Alliance (afterwards superseded by the Four Power Treaty). Japan, which was singlehandedly confronting the Anglo-Saxon combination found a certain support in the French. The situation was extremely critical.

Meanwhile bitter struggles took place between the various parties in Japan. The military party, scorning concession and compromise, had one of its subjects assassinate Prime Minister Hara who, it was thought, would lend the American demands a willing ear, and, having accomplished this, organized an attempt on the life of Hara's successor, Takashi By means of open terror and the mobilization of all its forces, the military party finally achieved its end in Tokio. Japan's emperor, too, retired from public life during those weeks, suffering from an "incurable malady", and was succeeded by the rather young and harmless crown prince. On the other side, however, the old Prince Yamagata, the leader of the military party, died suddenly and unexpectedly.

Japs Do Not Yield

The true import of all these occurences can only be guessed, as the Japanese police, by an extensive and elaborate censorship, guard against the truth becoming known abroad. One thing is certain, however, namely that in spite of all their smiles and courtesy, the Japanese have not yielded as much as one inch in Washington.

They do not think of evacuating China and Eastern Siberia, all American protests notwithstanding. And as for the naval disarmament ratio who can penetrate the secrets of the Japanese shipyards?

President Harding has two alternatives, each of them involving very grave decisions. He could either break up the Conference and declare war on Japan or imitate the ostrich and, shutting his eyes to the Japanese manoeuvres, tell the world that everything was well.

The first alternative would have meant a moral defeat both of the Republican party in power and of the president himself.

The American population, suffering under high taxes and high prices, would not tolerate a war which would only result in a further decline of its standard of living. President Harding has staged his disarmament comedy in order to hoodwink millions of American farmers, petty bourgeois and workers.

Consequently he could not admit failure and give up his role. So he expressed his satisfaction with the various scraps of paper and told his audience that Washington has triumphed and that with it mankind had entered upon a new phase in its history.

The British government is even more urgently compelled to tell its electors that thanks to its endeavors disarmament and world peace are accomplished facts. Japan has not suffered in Washington and hence for the present has no reason to ditsurb the peace. The same applies to France.

Thus everything that we Communists said from the very beginning about the diplomatic show at Washington, which has not solved anything, has come true. All conflicts remain what they were before.

The only thing that has become clear is the disinclination on the part of Great Britain and the United States to enter upon a new war while the world is in the throes of an economic crisis and its people rather wearied.

But the danger of a new conflagration still exists and will continue to do so until the international proletariat has asserted itself and ensured the world's peace.

By [illegible]

The [illegible] of a Communist Party is to lead the proletarian revolution. In order to call upon the proletariat to seize power directly and in order that this may be realized, the Communist Party must be supported by the overwhelming majority of the working class.

But as long as it has not such a majority at its command, it must fight to win over the majority.

It can accomplish this only if it is an absolutely independent organization with a definite program and a rigid discipline.

For this reason it must sever ideological and organizational connections with the reformists and the centrists, who are not striving for the proletarian revolution, who neither want nor are able to prepare the masses for the revolution, and who, thru their attitude and action, are only hindering such work.

Those members of a Communist Party, who in the name of the "United Front" regret its severance from the Centrists, only betray themselves by showing that they have not even as much as mastered the Communist alphabet, and that their presence in the Communist Party is purely accidental.

After the Communist Party has gained its independence and achieved the ideological homogeneity of its membership, it struggles for influence among the majority of the working class.

In this struggle a quicker or slower tempo may be adopted according to the objective circumstances and the expediency of this or that tactical move.

It is self-evident that during this period of preparation the class-struggles of the proletariat do not cease.

Various conflicts with the employers, with the bourgeoisie and with the government take place, in which the initiative is sometimes assumed by the workers, and sometimes by their enemies.

Grows Out of Necessity

The working masses perceive the necessity for united action, be it unity in defence against the capitalist attacks or unity in attacking their enemy, only to the degree that such conflicts touch or affect the life-interests of the working-class as a whole or of the majority or of one of its parts.

The party which deliberately opposes this necessity for unity of action on the part of the working-class will inevitably be condemned by the workers.

Hence the question of the united front is in its origin and essence not a question of mutual relations between the Socialist and Communist Parliamentary fractions or between the Executive Committees of these parties at all.

The problem of the united front arises out of the necessity of enabling the workers to organize a united front in their struggle against capital, in spite of the splits, which in the present epoch are inevitably taking place in the political organizations of the working-class.

To those who do not comprehend this task the party is a mere propaganda-association, and not an organization of mass-action.

Where the Communist Party is as yet only an organization of an insignificant minority, the question of its attitude towards the united mass-front can be of no great importance or of any practical organizational significance.

In such cases the mass-actions are directed and led by old organizations which, thanks to their mighty traditions, still play the decisive role.

Again, in those countries where the Communist Party is the only leading organization of the workers, as in Bulgaria, for instance, there can also be no question or problem of a united front.

Where Problem Looms Big

But in those countries where the Communist Party has already reached the stage of a large political organization which has not as yet however become the deciding factor, that is, where it has succeeded in organizing one-fourth or one-third of the class-conscious proletarian vanguard, the problem of the united front will loom up in all its importance.

When the party consists of one-third or one-half of the proletarian vanguard, it means that the other half or the other two-thirds is organized by the reformists and centrists.

It is clear, however, that those workers who are still supporting the reformists and centrists are also interested in bettering the conditions of their material existence and in their greater freedom of struggle.

It is therefore necessary to adopt such tactics as would not make the Communist Party, which on the morrow is to incorporate all three-thirds of the working-class, an organized obstacle in the course of the proletarian struggles.

But what is still more: the Communist Party must itself seize the initiative in effecting and maintaining unity in the course of these struggles. It is only in this way that it can possibly attract and approach the other two-thirds that do not as yet follow it, since they neither understand it nor confide in it.

Must Learn Communist Alphabet

Without effecting a radical and final breach with the Social Democrats, the Communist Party would never have become the party of the proletarian revolution, nor would it have been able to take the first serious step towards the revolution. It would have remained the Parliamentary safety-valve of the bourgeois state forever.

Whoever fails to grasp this, does not know the first letter of the Communist alphabet.

Had the Communist Party not followed the path which at every given moment enables it to undertake common actions of the Communist and non-Communist masses (Social Democratic workers included), it would only have betrayed its inability to win over the majority of the working-class to the road of mass-action.

It would then have degenerated to a Communist propaganda society; it would never have developed into a party of the proletarian revolution.

It does not suffice to gain a weapon; the weapon must be sharp. It does not suffice to whet the sword; we must know how to use it.

Must Lead United Actions

It does not at all suffice merely to unite the Communists under organizational discipline, after we have separated them from the reformist chaff. It is necessary that this organization be capable of leading all the united actions of the proletariat on every field of its life-struggle.

This is the second letter in the Communist alphabet.

Does the united front apply to the working masses alone or does it also hold for the opportunistic leaders?

This way of putting the question is the result of a misunderstanding.

Of course, it would be better if we could simply rally the working masses about our flag and our practical slogans of the day, without the reformist, political, as well as trade-union organizations. But were such the possibility, the problem of the united front would never have come up in the form it now assumes.

The very raison d'etre for this problem is that certain, very considerable parts of the working-class belong to and support these reformist organizations.

Up to the present it seems that they have not had enough experience to justify their withdrawal from these reformist organizations and their joining ours.

But judging by the mass-actions that are facing the proletariat, the circumstances in this respect will eventually change. We are striving to accomplish this. We are on the way but not quite so far. At the present time the organized part of the working-class is divided into three groups.

Workers in Three Groups

The first one, the Communist group, is striving for the Social Revolution. That is the reason why it supports every movement of the workers against the exploiters and the bourgeois state, even tho it be a mere partial movement.

The second one, the Reformist group, is knitting the cloak of reconciliation with the bourgeoisie. But in order not to lose its influence over the workers, it is compelled to support the partial actions of the exploited against the exploiters, against the real wishes of the leaders of this group.

The third group, that of the Centrists, is continually vaccillating between the two first groups and has no backbone or significance of its own.

It is thus that the existing conditions make possible the uniting of the workers in these three sorts of organizations and of the unorganized masses influenced by these organizations for common action in a number of proletarian life-questions.

We repeat that not only are the Communists not to oppose such common actions, but they are to assume the initiative for the following reasons.

First of all, the greater the masses drawn into the movement, no matter how limited the initial issues of struggle may be, the greater will their self-consciousness and self-confidence be, and the more determined and ready will these masses be to advance.

Reformists Dread Mass Movements

This means that the increase of the mass-character of the movement revolutionizes it and in this way created the conditions favorable for the slogans, methods of struggle and the Communist Party's role of leadership.

What the reformists dread is the potential revolutionary spirit of the mass-movement. Their pet arenas are Parliaments, trade-union councils, arbitration-boards, and ministerial anterooms.

But what we are first of all interested in is to drag the reformists out of their holes. Any Communist who doubts or fears such a step is like the "swimmer" who has read and approved the best handbook on the art of swimming, but who does not dare to go into the water.

Hence the united front is a presumptive of our willingness and readiness to make our actions correspond in practice to the [illegible]

[illegible] of the [illegible] movement.

But have we not severed our connections with them? Yes, [illegible] we did not agree in the leading questions of the labor movement.

Are we nevertheless to seek an understanding with them? Yes, in all cases where the working-masses that follow them and those that follow us are willing to fight together and where the reformists are more or less compelled to become the instruments of such struggles.

Sees Only Partial Agreement

Will they, however, not claim that altho we broke away from them, we nevertheless need them? Yes, indeed, their tattlers can say it. In our own ranks, some comrades will fear it. But the great working-masses—even those masses which do not as yet follow us or understand our aims but who see and observe two or three simultaneously existing labor organizations—will upon observing our attitude, come to the conclusion that in spite of the split, we are energetically working for an united proletarian front.

Of course, the policy adopted for the united front does not guarantee an actual united front in all cases. On the contrary; in many, yes, in the majority of cases an agreement will be achieved only partially or not at all.

But it is necessary that the fighting masses are always given the opportunity to convince themselves that the failure to effect unity of action in any particular case is not due to our irreconcilability but directly to the lack of inclination on the part of the reformists actually to fight.

Since we enter into certain agreements with the other organizations, it is selfevident that we must institute a definite discipline. But this discipline cannot be absolute.

In cases where the reformists proceed to obstruct the struggle to the detriment of the movement and against the trend of circumstances and the will and spirit of the masses, we always retain the right to proceed as an independent organization and to carry on the struggle to the bitter end and without our provisional half-allies.

Will Extend Our Influence

This may of course result in an intensified struggle between us and the reformists. But in such a case it will not be the mere monotonous and barren repetition of one and the same idea in a closed circle; but if our tactics prove right, it will mean the extension of our influence among new proletarian masses.

Only a journalist who thinks he is warding off the reformists by always criticizing them with the very same expressions and epithets, without as much as leaving his editor's desk, only he who actually fears a collision with the reformists in the presence of the masses, who also fears lest the working masses get the opportunity to compare the Communists with the Reformists under varying conditions of the mass-struggle, only such a journalist can interpret this policy in terms of an approach towards the reformists or reformism.

Under this veil of revolutionary fear of "approach" we find hidden—political passivity.

It is passivity that wishes for the continuation of that condition that permits of strictly separated and limited fields of activity, of distinct meeting-audiences and press, both for the Communists and reformists.

We Do Not Dissolve

We have broken with the reformists and with the centrists in order to have unlimited freedom to criticise betrayals, deceptions, indecision and division in the labor-movement.

For this reason we cannot possibly accept any agreement which in any way limits our freedom of criticism and agitation.

We participate in the united front, but not for a moment do we dissolve in it. We take part in it as an independent unit.

For it is in the struggle that the broad masses will convince themselves that we fight better than others; they will see that we fight with more determination, self-consciousness and cleverness.

In this manner we accelerate the formation of the united revolutionary front under an undisputed Communist leadership.

Our First May Day

Your paper, THE WORKER, greets its first May Day at a time when great events are taking place in the world.

Labor is making history at Genoa because one of its more militant columns broke thru the opposition of the common enemy and established the Russian Workers' Republic.

Never before in all history did the victorious working class of a nation hold the imperialists of the world at bay, as have our Russian comrades, and finally force them into a conference like the one now meeting at Genoa.

But we are not compelled to look abroad for encouragement. In America, making history for the workers of this country, stand 600,000 coal miners in battle array against their oppressors.

Labor is going into new and greater battles. In this hour of struggle it needs able and courageous fighters to lead it on to more magnificent triumphs.

We have heard much talk of "tired radicals." But we are only concerned with revolutionists, and revolutionists never grow tired.

Our May Day greeting, therefore, on our first May Day, to the workers, everywhere, men and women, is to join the battle with renewed vigor.

The daily struggle may seem hard and impossible of victory on the front where you are engaging the enemy. But it is as important as any sector in the whole battle line.

To your posts, Comrades! To work, Comrades! Take new courage this May Day. Win new victories before another May Day!

Lady Astor, M.P., arrived in this country just in time to share first-page notoriety with the Siberian bandit, Semenoff. The workers can recognize their enemies by the attention they receive from the kept press.

The Legion and the Crown Prince

The ex-Crown Prince of Germany had an Easter message for the faithful who still believe in the resurrection of the Dynasty of the Hohenzollerns.

It is probably not strange that the views of the former Kaiser's oldest son should coincide with the opinions held by the jingoes of the American Legion.

The ex-Crown Prince says: "Whoever places his world citizenhood above his Germanism had best emigrate," an invitation to Communists to leave the country.

The American Legion, in its war on radicalism, in which it classes all radicals as foreigners, always stands adamant on the declaration, "Go back to the country where you came from," aided and abetted by a government that has been particularly anxious to instigate deportation proceedings.

The German workers showed how they felt about it by forcing Wilhelm and his whole outfit to emigrate. They are struggling now to send German capitalism into exile.

Let the American workers take an example and rid themselves of American capitalism first, and then put the Legionnaires to work, probably the first real jobs that many of them will have had in their useless lives.

Soviet Russia wins new adherents every day. Even the yellow Amsterdam Trade Union International has come out demanding recognition of the Workers' Republic. Reactionary labor officials are bowing to the inevitable, along with their profiteering masters.

Our Day Is Breaking

The ruling of Judge Cardoza, admitting the two Communists, our comrades, Ferguson and Ruthenberg, to bail, must have a profound effect on the status of the other political prisoners in New York State.

The cases of Gitlow, Larkin and Winitsky are directly affected, since the decision of the court deals with the issue of the "Revolutionary Age," July 5, 1919, containing matter concerning the general strike at Winnipeg, Canada.

Granting the certificate of reasonable doubt in the Ferguson-Ruthenberg case, therefore, opens the way for the release of these and other political prisoners.

This belated recognition of the rights of the defendants is most welcome. But nothing can compensate them for the many weary months they have been compelled to undergo the tortures of prison life.

However, there is one feature of Judge Cardoza's ruling that is supremely gratifying. It is a barometer which registers the fact that a semblance of sanity is returning to America.

The courts have not been free from mob spirit. The mere accusation of radicalism has been sufficient to guarantee a conviction. And the sentences inflicted have been an outrageous manifestation of judicial vindictiveness.

Judge Cardoza's ruling is an indication that the realities of the recent past are breaking thru the camouflage of gilded phrases under cover of which the ruling class has pillaged the country of countless millions.

For this we give thanks. The power of black reaction is breaking. Our day is beginning to dawn.

From Brest-Litovsk to Genoa

More than four years after Brest-Litovsk, Soviet Russia and Germany have agreed to a new treaty.

The new agreement sweeps aside all the provisions of the robber's peace imposed by the Junker statesmen at Brest-Litovsk.

It has dropped like a high-power bomb into the midst of the allied diplomats, who want nothing so much to-day as to achieve against both Germany and Soviet Russia at Genoa, what the Kaiser thought he had won at Brest-Litovsk.

The treaty that Dr. Walter Rathenau signed for Germany at Rapallo should have been agreed to by German labor three years ago when Kaiserism was swept away and the possibilities of establishing a Workers' Republic were in sight.

But the social-democratic spokesmen of Germany's workers bowed their necks to receive the yoke of the Versailles peace and turned their backs on their only hope,—the Workers' Republic to the east.

It has taken the Germans three years to learn their lesson, three years during which the revolutionary advance of the workers in Europe has not only be held at a standstill, but has actually been given a setback.

Nothing showed the subservience of the German social-democrats to the allies so much as their treatment of Joffe, the ambassador of Red Russia. Joffe had come to Berlin after the Brest peace. He returned to Russia shortly before the Kaiser was overthrown. When he sought to come back to Berlin with Germany under Scheidemann-Haase control he was turned down.

Now the worm has turned. The palace of the former czar in Berlin is turned over to the Soviet delegation. Germany signs a treaty with the Russian Republic of Workers, Soldiers and Peasants. The treaty of Brest-Litovsk is thrown into the waste basket. The new treaty cancels all war claims, as well as claims arising from the nationalization of property, and re-establishes full diplomatic relations on a basis of equality between the two governments. This is practically what Russia is asking of the other capitalist nations.

From Brest-Litovsk to Genoa has been a hard struggle for Soviet Russia. But it has won over all obstacles and Germany succumbs as the first great nation to give it full recognition.

Soviet diplomacy has won another great victory. The signing of this treaty gives Tchitcherin another weapon in waging his offensive against capitalism's chosen spokesmen. Another such triumph and the weak defensive of Lloyd George and his imperialist crew will be turned into an utter rout.

"A Disloyal Trick"

It was to be expected that the allied diplomats, and the kept press of their respective lands, should take but one attitude toward the treaty between Soviet Russia and Germany; one of open hostility.

From the headlines of the New York Times we take such phrases as "Lloyd George Is Shocked," "All Allied Chiefs Angry," "Coup a Disloyal Trick," and "Explanation Is Demanded." This is typical of the consternation of the whole capitalist world.

The Allied diplomats at Genoa are not surprised at Soviet Russia. The Soviets can be expected to be guilty of any treason to world imperialism.

But it is different with Germany, the Germany that the Allies are trying to subjugate to the role of a vassal state.

Three years of the Versailles peace, however, have forced the Germans into the arms of the Russian workers, were they should long ago have found a refuge.

No doubt the Germans, before agreeing to the treaty, were convinced of the claim of Maxim Litvinoff, of the Russian delegation, that the Soviets are at Genoa as victors, naming the conditions of peace with the Allies. Litvinoff says:

> "The Allies having lost their war with Russia," he said, "we are here to make peace. We have named our conditions. We must be paid for what Russia did for the Allies and we must be paid for the damage the Allies did Russia thru Koltchak, Denikin and Wrangel and by the blockade for which America also was responsible. Russia spent in 1914-1917 for the Allies 20,000,000,000 gold rubles. We want that back. The damage by intervention and blockade was 35,000,000,000 gold rubles. If we are paid that we will recognize Russia's pre-war debt.
> "The Allies claim 65,000,000,000 gold francs from us. We claim 125,000,000,000 gold francs. We cannot make peace and go back with less than 20,000,000,000 gold francs."

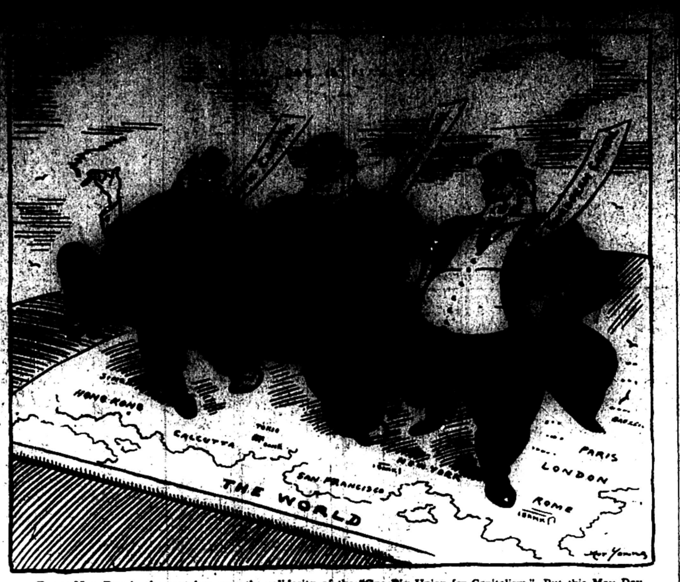
Convinced of Litvinoff's claim, the Germans worked up more courage than they have been able to muster at any time during the last three years, and the result is an open alliance with the Russian Workers' Republic in defiance of the whole allied imperialist world.

The Germans, ever since the Bolsheviks came to power in Russia, November 7, 1917, have helped the allied bandits war on Russia. The admission of the Soviet delegates to the Genoa Conference is a confession of defeat in that four and one-half years' war.

The German diplomats in reaching an agreement with Soviet Russia evidently concluded that loyalty to oneself comes first, even at the risk of being guilty of a "disloyal trick" to ones oppressors.

The Versailles Peace works for the undoing of world imperialism with the certainty of death itself.

Religious emotion on Easter Sunday in New York City is reported to have unbalanced the minds of at least three worshippers. And the kept press forgot to record this as another "red plot" to destroy religion.



Every May Day in the past has seen the solidarity of the "One Big Union for Capitalism." But this May Day the forces of the exploiters are beginning to realize they will have to dance to a different tune,—to the tune of the dance of death.

Communist Diplomats

It is reported that Nikolai Lenin was not entirely satisfied with the results of the conference of the three internationals at Berlin.

He is said to take the position that the Russian representatives, Radek and Bucharin, were too easy with the Vanderveldes and the MacDonalds of the Second International, that it was a mistake to offer them an opportunity to participate in the forthcoming trials of the social-revolutionaries in Soviet Russia.

There had been no indication, he declared, that spokesmen of the Third International would be allowed to participate in the trials of Communists in other countries. So Lenin says the Communists were out-manoeuvred and out-generalled at Berlin. He declares they must learn to become better Communist diplomats.

Whatever we may think of the developments at Berlin, even the capitalist press admits that Communist diplomacy at Genoa has had the best of the struggle there up to the present time.

Even the Temps, leading government organ in France, is frank and open in voicing its dissatisfaction with the developments in the Italian city.

"The net results of the first phase are clearly to the advantage of the Bolsheviki," it confesses. "In less than a week, face to face with the entente under the command of Mr. Lloyd George himself, they have obtained three important successes. First, they have been admitted to the conference on an equal footing, which is equivalent to recognition. Second, they have given nothing in exchange; their claims remain intact; they have signed no engagement, either political or financial. Finally, and most important, the fate of the conference itself has been put in the hands of Moscow."

It is even charged that the success of the Communist diplomats at Genoa may result in the fall of Premier Poincaré and the present French government within two months.

But Tchitcherin, Rakovsky, Krassin and Lenin will probably take the position that, "We have done well," but, "We will do better."

The Bolshevik revolution in Russia helped undermine the diplomacy of imperialism by making public the czar's secret treaties. The spokesmen of the Russian revolution at Genoa are helping to carry this effort to its ultimate conclusion, the complete unmasking of capitalism.

To our comrades in the Genoa Conference we say, "So far, so good. Keep it up!"

Semenoff Freed on Bail

Gregory Semenoff, the Siberian butcher, spent less than a week in the Ludlow Street Jail, New York City, waiting for his friends to raise $25,000. Bail was finally secured and Semenoff was released while a jeering crowd yelled, "Murderer! Bandit! Crook!" and worse.

Thus ends the hope of Senator Borah to bring Semenoff to trial for the murder of American soldiers in Siberia.

Washington officials, responsible for permitting Semenoff to enter this country, will no doubt frown upon any effort to start deportation proceedings against him.

Semenoff, the pet of the Harding administration, and the idol of the dollar worshippers in Wall Street, may now proceed to attend the social functions arranged for him along Fifth Avenue in the nation's metropolis.

Semenoff only murdered a few American soldiers. He only stole a few hundred thousand dollars' worth of fur from a trading company, now bankrupt. Against that record, he has a record of unswerving loyalty to international capitalism, and must therefore be courted by the big bankers and other respectable highwaymen.

Semenoff is free because the profiteers need him, and others like him, in their business.

Watch the money you get! Two score officials have been dismissed from the bureau of printing and engraving at Washington because of the poor grade of money they were responsible for getting out, making it possible, according to an official proclamation, to "flood the country from coast to coast with millions of counterfeit federal reserve notes, United States notes, Federal Reserve currency, national banknotes, silver certificates, war savings stamps, postage and internal revenue stamps and all forms of the war bonds and their coupons." Now! We thought that only such desecration of the almighty dollar could take place in Reddest Russia. Call "Bill" Burns.

Prison Doors of New York Swing Open!

"We have come out of prison more determined than ever, with greater faith in our principles than ever; ready to throw ourselves into the struggle of our cause, and to work for it as we have never worked before."

These words, spoken by Chas. E. Ruthenberg, interpret the spirit with which the Communist prisoners greet the breath of [illegible] bail from [illegible] Sing and Auburn Prisons.

Face New Indictment

Isaac E. Ferguson and Ruthenberg were freed on parole Monday morning, April 24th. They had been brought to New York City from the Sing Sing Prison, on Saturday, and placed in the Tombs over Sunday, after having furnished $5,000 bail required for their release on the certificate of reasonable doubt issued by Judge Cardozo, April 17.

A second indictment is hanging over them for an article other than the Left Wing Manifesto, which had been printed in the July 5, 1919, issue of "The Revolutionary Age."

They were arraigned Monday morning before Judge Finch on this second indictment and were paroled in the custody of their attorney J. R. Brodsky.

Gitlow Comes from Auburn Prison

Ben Gitlow arrived from the Auburn Prison, Wednesday morning, April 26, and was taken before Judge Finch for arraignment on his second indictment.

He, too, was paroled in the custody of his attorney. Bail set by Judge Cardozo, April 22, when he granted a certificate of reasonable doubt to Gitlow was $7,500.

His case will also come before the New York Court of Appeals the latter part of May.

New Move for Winitsky

The application for a certificate of reasonable doubt for Harry Winitsky will be filed early in the week.

Owing to the success in the Ruthenberg, Ferguson, Gitlow and Larkin cases, there is every reason to believe that a certificate will be ordered issued on behalf of Winitsky.

Greeted by New York Comrades

Ferguson and Ruthenberg were given their first official greeting by their New York comrades, at a luncheon arranged on Tuesday a few hours after their release. It was here that the two released prisoners pledged their faith anew in the cause, adherence to which had sent them behind prison bars.

"It gives us a great joy to be able to take up again the work that we left off a year and a half ago when we went to prison," said Ferguson.

"We feel that great progress has been made by the movement. We

NO MINE OWNERS IN JAIL!

Coal mine owners broke their contract with the miners and forced the miners to cease work.

The mine owners wanted to force the men to cease work.

The mine owners forced the present situation upon the country.

The mine owners are responsible and some mine owners have boasted that they wanted just exactly the condition that has been brought about.

The mine owners accept responsibility.

At the time these lines are written NOT A MINE OWNER IS IN JAIL. Not a mine owner has even been brought into court.

Can anyone doubt that if the miners were responsible for the present situation that the courts would have been set in motion at once and that by now every official of the miners' organization would be under complete restraint or behind prison bars?

Hoover Circulates False Reports on Russian Famine

"On April 15, Herbert Hoover reported that "the back of the Russian Famine had been broken." He reported that it would be unnecessary to use the remainder of the $20,000,000 set aside by Congress for Russian Relief.

In reply to this statement, Captain Paxton Hibben, recently with the Near East Relief, says, "It is simply nonsense to claim that the 7,000,000 people whom the Hoover organisation are feeding in Russia are all who are starving, or that to feed 87 per cent. of the known starving is to break the back of the greatest famine in history."

But the FRIENDS OF SOVIET RUSSIA will not sit idly by and witness the murder of millions of Russian men, women and children.

They have organised a city-wide SUBBTONIK (Days of Voluntary Labor) for Russian Relief on May 6th and 7th.

On these days thousands of willing comrades will report to the following stations: 61 Canal Street, 257 East 10th Street, [illegible] East 23rd Street, 350 East 81st Street, 1403 Fifth Ave., 1347 Boston Road, 226 Roebling Street, 296 Beckman Street and many other stations throut the city.

Organizations and individuals are co-operating to make this drive even more successful than the previous drive which netted more than $13,000.

Two Powerful Labor Organizations to Hold Conventions Next Week

Big problems will be taken up, discussed and voted on at the regular convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union that opens on Monday, at Cleveland, Ohio, for a two weeks' session.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers will also hold its convention at Chicago starting the end of next week.

These two unions in the clothing industry are among the most militant of America's labor organizations.

The actions of these two conventions, therefore, will be of intense interest to all the readers of THE WORKER. We are, therefore, making preparations to get full reports of both these gatherings. Watch for these reports.

New Affidavit Also Helps as Death Nears

EDITOR'S NOTE:—Here is the most important news yet in the Sacco-Vanzetti case. The confession of Pelser represents the breakdown of 25 per cent of the case against Sacco, as there were only four who tried to identify him as on the scene. The Gould testimony, on the other hand, is a big point for the defense, inasmuch as he was as close, if not closer to [illegible] from the electric chair takes on new hope.

By EUGENE LYONS

BOSTON, Mass.—Confession of perjury by Louis Pelser, prosecution witness on identification, and the sworn affidavit of Roy E. Gould, an eye witness of the crime recently located by the defense, form the bases of a motion for a new trial in the case of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, filed Wednesday in the Superior Court of Massachusetts.

The filing of this evidence is the first move, according to the defense group, in a sensational and thorogoing campaign of exposure of the New England labor case which has roused a world-wide protest.

Pelser Important Witness

Pelser is one of the five witnesses—four against Sacco and one against Vanzetti—whose "identifications" of the Italian labor organizers was the only direct evidence to support the charge that they participated in the payroll robbery and murders in South Braintree, Mass., on April 15, 1920.

His testimony in court at the famous Dedham trial was to the effect that Sacco was the "dead image" of the man whom he claimed to have seen for a few seconds through a slightly opened window.

This testimony he now repudiates unqualifiedly. His statements on the witness stand were made the target of considerable ridicule during and since the trial because they included an attempted identification even of a tie pin supposed to have been worn by the bandit.

Not in His Right Mind

"I couldn't have been in my right mind, I don't think I was exactly sane," Pelser says in explaining his lies.

In the course of close questioning by Fred H. Moore, chief counsel for the defense of the condemned men, Pelser indicated that he "must have been forced by someone" when made the perjured statements on

Workers Party in New York Participates in May Day Demonstrations

Local New York this year has joined with the other bodies affiliated with the Amnesty Alliance for New York State Political Prisoners for huge demonstrations in New York, at 1??th St. and Park Circle, and Brooklyn, at Grand St. Extension and Havemeyer Ave., May 1st.

The slogan for these demonstrations will be "THE RELEASE OF OUR POLITICAL PRISONERS." Arrangements have been made for addresses in all languages by some [illegible] speakers. [illegible] May Day Proclamation of the Central Executive Committee of the Party. All revolutionary workers of New York will turn out on this day to demonstrate the solidarity of labor in the class struggle.

COMING-OUT CELEBRATION of BENJAMIN GITLOW, C. E. RUTHENBERG and I. E. FERGUSON from Sing Sing and Auburn Prisons, Central Opera House, 265 East 67th St.

FRIDAY, MAY 12th, 8 P. M.

[illegible] understanding."

So spoke Clare Sheridan, noted English sculptress, who modeled busts of Lenin and Trotsky and the other Russian leaders, addressing the Central Trades and Labor Council of Greater New York.

"I have found the rich and the well-to-do," she continued, "completely out of touch, ignorant, of the elementary facts of life. The so-called 'upper class' doesn't seem to understand the struggle for existence which is the daily and ever present problem of hundreds of millions.

"In behalf of Russian famine relief I have addressed several meetings attended by the people I speak of, and I succeeded in raising only a few hundred dollars. Once I went to Boston, spoke in a filled theater and only $300 was given. Then I addressed a meeting of workers here in Webster Hall, and the working men and women there pledged more than $9,000 for the relief of starving Russian children.

"And I want to say to you that were I a mother and found my babes starving before my eyes, as the children of Russia are starving, I would do the same to them as the Russian mothers are doing to their children. I would kill them."

Following Mrs. Sheridan's appeal Captain Paxton Hibben, secretary of the American Committee for the Relief of Russian Children, told the delegates that there still are 7,000,000 Russians facing starvation by next August unless food reaches them in the meantime.

"The people who say the famine is ended, or nearly ended," he said, "are stopping relief." He bitterly criticized the American Relief Administration for its delay in getting grain to the 33,000,000 persons in Russia who have been on the verge of starvation.

"Before agreeing to send food to the Russians and their children out of the appropriation made by Congress," he said, "that committee forced the Russians to withdraw $12,200,000 in gold left in their treasury and spent it in the United States for grain. Although the Russians did this, not one half of the grain ordered reached Russia in time for planting."

The appeal was concluded by Joseph Manley, secretary-treasurer of the Trade Union National Committee for Russian Relief, which has been indorsed by the Central Trades and Labor Council and labor organizations throughout the country.

America, land of [illegible] state power, always acting in favor of the lords and masters—as all capitalist States must do—crushing the workers and stamping out their desires and yearnings for peace and more freedom!

America, land of weakened and rotten labor organizations, whose labor leaders will not fight but, terrified and cowardly, yield to the slightest threat and betray the workers into the hands of their exploiters in the name of "public welfare," or patriotism!

It is quite logical, therefore, that just in America, where the workers have not yet learned the necessity of amalgamating their organization into one solid UNIT; where the capitalists, acting as a single integer, move at one impetus, sticking to one another through thick and thin—when it means a struggle against the workers—the demands of the ten million jobless men and women, unorganized, not yet conscious of their misery, should be disregarded.

Want is bringing the ten million unemployed together. Their savings are fast vanishing. Industry will not long grant them work. They are learning, slowly learning. In the East and West, wherever factories have been erected to exploit human labor; wherever men have been denied the right to work and are HUNGERING, STARVING; STEALING, MURDERING, their CHILDREN PALE, ANAEMIC, TUBERCULOUS — FOR WANT OF FOOD—, they are forming their councils—to demand, to act!

WORK, the unemployed demand. WORK OR COMPENSATION.

You who have the power to give work, and you who hold the strings to the public treasury! It would be well to give these 10,000,000 work. It would be well for your peace and the peace of the country to which you are so devoted. Workless, hungry men are a menace to a country. The demand for work has caused many a rebellion. The demand for bread has caused many a revolution. The workers of America are slowly learning who you are—you who hold the power of gold and State in your hands. They are learning that the employer is no friend, but a foe.

ORGANIZATION AND UNITY has become the slogan. Workers on the job and workers without a job have one interest—a common interest. They must stick together, fight together, one must not scab on the other—neither the jobless on the worker, nor the worker on the jobless.

May Day is the Day of Unity—International Solidarity.

The Unemployed greet May Day. The Councils of Unemployed hail May Day as a Day of Solidarity with the masses of unemployed in England, Sweden, Austria, Switzerland, Canada—wherever workers are deprived of the right to work.

Workers of America, Germany, Russia, Italy, France, Spain, Great Britain, Japan—workers of the whole world! Workers with a job and without a job! YOUR INTERESTS ARE ONE!

[illegible]

We're Freedom's Pioneers.

CHORUS

O, slaves may beg, and cowards whine,
We scorn their foolish fears.
We dare and plan to lead the van,
With Freedom's Pioneers.

Too long upon our toil were built
The palaces of power,
When at our word these [illegible] of gold
Would crumble in an hour;
Now each day brings on exultant wings
To their unwilling ears,
The shouts that greet our marching feet,
"'Tis Freedom's Pioneers."

CHORUS

The rich man's hate, the rich man's pride
Hath held us long in awe,
Our Right to Life is still denied,
And wealth still rules the law.
But man shall bow no longer now,
But welcomes with his cheers
The ringing stroke to break his yoke
Of FREEDOM'S Pioneers.

Doors of New York State Prisons Swinging Open come to you again, toughened by the year and a half in prison."

Feels Reality of Struggle

Ruthenberg told of the effect that prison has upon a revolutionist. He served ten months in Ohio, in the early days of the war, and had been at liberty for some time when he was incarcerated in New York's prisons.

"Being sent to prison makes one feel the reality of the struggle of the working class," said Ruthenberg, telling of the results of 10 months under the lash of capitalism in Ohio. "As a result of those 10 months in prison, I came out with more fervor in the struggle against capitalism," he said, saying that he felt that he had done his best work for the cause from December, 1918, to May 1919.

"Prison puts iron into your soul," he said. "More than speech-making, more than going about among the workers, prison makes one feel the reality of the class struggle. In December, 1918, I came out of prison determined to strike my hardest blows at capitalism. I have come out of Sing Sing no less determined.

Feels Joys of Comradeship

"During our months in prison, my fingers have figuratively itched to get into the work for the cause.

"That one cannot give one's efforts for the cause while in prison hurts more than any physical suffering.

"Every man and woman that capitalism puts into prison will come out more than ever determined to help accomplish its destruction.

"It was a great pleasure to me to feel the comradeship of our movement while in prison, and I want to assure you all that I feel keenly the comradeship so evident in this gathering here this afternoon."

Edgar Owens, secretary of the National Defense Committee, acted as chairman while among the others who spoke were A. B. Martin, secretary of the Friends of Soviet Russia; William F. Dunne, of The Worker; Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, of the Workers' Defense Union, and James P. Cannon, chairman of the Workers Party.

Cannon Speaks for Party

"Our comrades as they come from prison will find the movement the same in some respects, different in other respects," said Cannon. "But they will quickly see that our movement is beginning to find itself. During the time they have been absent from among us we have prepared the way for the greater work that must and will be done in the near future.

"We are building the Workers Party to become the centralized party of the rebel, dauntless workers of the United States," he said, in conclusion, arousing the applause of all present.

The occasion was considerably enlivened by the singing of "The International" and "The Red Flag."

Ferguson left for Chicago on Tuesday where he will make the final preparations for the appeal in the case of himself and Ruthenberg before the New York Court of Appeals the latter part of the month.

[illegible] Chicago has turned in [illegible]. And the money continues to pour into the Chicago office.

LYNN, Mass., has just concluded a most successful collection.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., is arranging a flower drive on May 1. May 1 will be a day of great activities. The International Labor Day will be a day of demonstrating labor's international solidarity. It will show whether the workers of America, too, feel and understand that solidarity is not a matter of sentiment, but of ACTION. This Labor Day must be understood as a Day of Action for Soviet Russia.

The Workers' Relief Club of PORTLAND, Ore., held a bazaar and collected $1035. The workers do not know how much they can do until they really do it.

SAN FRANCISCO is collecting sacks of grain. The donors are attaching their names to the Roll Calls and will be known in Soviet Russia as the Givers of Grain.

MUSKEGON, Mich., just held a raffle, which netted $500.

CLEVELAND is conducting a most successful house-to-house pledge drive. Measured by present results, this will be one of the most successful drives in Cleveland.

DETROIT is arranging a Spring Festival on April 30. Detroit has arranged the most unique affairs for collecting funds, so that this one will probably yield an equally large amount of money.

ANSONIA, Conn., held a meeting recently. While the collection was being taken, an Englishman arose and contributed $142, but refused to give his name. He merely wanted to be known as an "Englishman."

NEW YORK is preparing for a two-days drive, May 6 and 7, "a Subbotnik of proletarian effort and sacrifice." Thousands of comrades will combine their efforts to make this the biggest thing that the New York Branch has done.

PHILADELPHIA has secured the endorsement of its Central Labor Council.

DULUTH and SUPERIOR conducted a joint Tag Day. Favored by excellent weather, and with their forces well organized, the two cities attained excellent results.

New Shipments to Russia.

The last shipment announced to take place on March 31, was not on the SS. Westport but on SS. Ridando.

There was an additional cargo of 12 tons, making a total of 52 tons. SS. Westport sailed on April 15, containing 63 bales of clothing, 12 bags of corn, flour, etc., 4 cases of canned milk and 1 case of medicine, weighing more than 10 tons.

Leaders of Last Two Weeks

The leaders of the past two weeks have been: Chicago $8,000, Los Angeles $1,500, New York $1,290, Vancouver $1,000, Brockton, Mass. $700, Muskegon, Mich. $500, Detroit $800, Hungarian Section of Workers Party, New York $400, Philadelphia $341, P. [illegible] the workers.

[illegible] This [illegible]

In this work there is a job for every WORKERS PARTY member and also for every radical and revolutionary reader.

Work for Party Units

It goes without saying that every Workers Party Local and Branch should receive every week a bundle of WORKERS.

Locals should organize their branches for this work, giving to each Branch a number of papers to sell, proportioning the number to the membership.

English-speaking Branches should be able to handle at least twice as many WORKERS as foreign language Branches.

We offer this suggestion to Workers Party Locals with the hope that they will assume the responsibility for at least two copies of The Worker per member. Concerted action, organized effort will mean a growing circulation.

Subscription Cards

THE WORKER prints three denominations of subscription cards. Locals and Branches should have these on hand at all times. They will be sent to Locals on credit.

Locals should keep these for use at street and hall meetings and for sale thru party members. Order them in the denomination you wish: yearly, $2, half-yearly, $1, and three month cards at 50 cents.

The Worker must be pushed at all meetings and subscription cards are necessary for successful canvassing.

News Stand Distribution

How many news stands in your city have The Worker for sale and whose fault is it if there are not more? Maybe, just perhaps, the fault lies with the Local because it has not attempted to place The Worker on more of them.

Comrades can place The Worker on many news stands with a little effort. The Local should apportion the news stands of each city to the Branches and make them responsible for placing a bundle with each.

News stand sales can be increased many times with a little energetic action by the membership.

Sales in Labor Unions

If there is one place where The Worker should be sold it is in the labor unions. This is a special field wherein the work for Worker readers who are union men and women is cut out for them.

The Worker bears a special message for union members. Let every union member reader take a bundle of The Worker for sale in his union. Neither your best union work nor any work in the revolutionary movement will be complete without his special bit of propaganda. Sell The Worker to the union member.

For the Individual

Whether you are a Workers Party member or not, whether you are a member of any union or any party, if you are a radical and have at heart the best interests of the workers, you will find among the enumerated lines of work a place for your conscientious efforts.

If you believe The Worker serves the workers in this mighty struggle of the classes it is your bounden duty to increase its usefulness.

And this you can do only by increasing its circulation. The usefulness of workers in this revolutionary movement is to be judged by their work and their work only.

The Worker depends upon them for its circulation. Devote your efforts to aiding The Worker and you best serve the Cause that leads on to victory.

[illegible] Effort to [illegible]eak Strike

[illegible] most serious attempt to break the backbone of the Lawrence strike was made by the Mayor's special committee composed of clergymen. The first announcement of the plan was made thru the newspapers.

This committee of the Mayor's was appointed during the second week of the strike, avowedly for the purpose of bringing the committee of the strikers together with the bosses, with the hope that when they were together an agreement could be reached.

Strikers Will Meet Bosses

The clergymen at once secured conferences with the leaders of the strike and learned that the strikers would meet with the bosses at any time.

Nothing had been heard from the committee up until this time; but evidently they approached the bosses to learn what the latter would do, and learned that they would not meet with the strike committees.

The bosses said that they would be glad to meet with representatives of the strikers, but not with the strike committees because the latter were controlled by union officers, by men who are not citizens of Lawrence.

This move was intended to divide the ranks from the committees. The next move was to get committees that are acceptable to the bosses. This was to be accomplished by our clergymen committee calling shop meetings.

The shop meetings were arranged to take place in various school houses. Some meetings were called for four o'clock Friday; others on Saturday at 10 A. M.

Strikers Hold Meetings

Special meetings were hurriedly called for Friday afternoon, Saturday morning and afternoon, on the Common, to discuss the action of the Mayor's committee.

The strikers were urged to stay away from these school house meetings and have nothing to do with the citizens' committee.

It is interesting to note the results of the meetings called by the clergymen committee. From the Arcadia Mill just 40 out of several hundred workers showed up; Plymouth Mill, Everett, 50; and later on at other places none appeared. Much attention was given to the Pacific Mill, employing 8100, but here they registered total failure. It is very apparent that the scheme will fail utterly. The committees of five and seven that were selected from the small numbers that appeared at the meetings will not have the brass to contend that they represent the strikers.

All the newspapers wrote up this scheme as if it had the backing of the strikers and reported the meetings as if crowds had attended—all the papers except the Lawrence Sunday Sun, which ridicules all attempts to settle the strike without dealing with the strikers.

Great writers have not mean souls. They do not limit their affections. They pity all suffering, strive to ease it. They take compassion on the poor players who perform in the great tragedy, or the tragi-comedy, of destiny. Pity is the very basis of genius.—ANATOLE FRANCE.

[illegible] This is the first [illegible] in recent years [illegible] in this country is the willing instrument of the [illegible] lords and that a charge of treason can be made to hold [illegible] men who resist industrial tyranny.

The indictment and trial of the 23 miners in West Virginia is arousing nation-wide indignation and protest and it should; it should also serve to convince the believers in the forms and phrases of democracy as a panacea for the ills of society that with an instrument forged especially for their purposes the capitalists of America do not need to even go outside their law—altho they often do—when they wish to mobilize the agencies of capitalist government to crush labor unions, to jail and legally murder the best fighters in the far-flung battle-line of labor.

A perusal of the charges in the indictment show that there is not even an attempt made to prove conspiracy or overt acts to overthrow the government of West Virginia. The counts are as follows:

"First—That the defendants, with their confederates, intended to invade Logan and Mingo Counties, and by force, violence, murder and open warfare to deprive the people residing in said counties and members and citizens of the State of West Virginia of the protection afforded them by the laws of the State of West Virginia.

"Second—To destroy and nullify by force of arms, violence, murder and open warfare, martial law in said Mingo County, and the military occupation in said county, which martial law had been duly proclaimed by the Governor of the State of West Virginia.

"Third—To release from imprisonment persons who had been duly and legally arrested and incarcerated in the jails of Mingo County for violation of the law and violation of the martial law proclamation of the Governor.

"Fourth—To take possession of the Counties of Logan and Mingo in the said State and to prevent the execution of the laws of the said State in said counties and to deprive the people of said counties of the protection afforded by the laws of the said State.

"Fifth—Especially to destroy and nullify martial law in said Mingo County, and to nullify the proclamation of the Chief Executive of the State.

"Sixth—The release of prisoners duly held in jail in Mingo County as also stated in the first count."

Martial law had been declared in Mingo county at the request of steel trust officials by a steel trust governor. The civil rights of the residents had been suspended and the only law was that of the six-shooters and rifles of the gunmen backed up by the state militia. Miners had been arrested on trumped-up charges and were being held in jail in constant danger of their lives from the drunken, blood-mad thugs imported into the district by the coal operators and to whose tender mercies the entire county and its population had been turned over.

Government had already been overthrown by the industrial lords and their henchmen and a military dictatorship and terror substituted for it.

It is this brazen usurpation of the powers of political government by corporations that the miners are accused of conspiring against. As a matter of fact all the miners were trying to do was to recover the constitutional rights taken from the strikers, their sympathizers and the populace in general.

For this grave offense in this era of capitalist military dictatorships in industrial regions 23 men are being tried for treason to the state of West Virginia.

As evidence of the rapidity with which the mask of democratic pretense is being torn from the dictatorship of capitalism, the West Virginia trials are illuminating. Just as important as supporting the nation-wide strike of the miners is the necessity of not allowing the interest in the outcome of the prosecutions to slacken.

The workers must indicate in the most emphatic terms possible their intention to see that capitalism gets no more victims in West Virginia.

Massachusetts Quarrymen Stand United in Strike

By CALEB HARRISON

CAPE ANN, MASS.—This is one huge rock, solid granite. Gloucester, the fishing town, and Rockport are two cities located at the extreme point of the cape. Between these cities, and a little to the north, is Lanesville. Around these three towns are the granite quarries.

Great slabs of granite are broken off and lifted from their resting place of ages, and sent into the market for the uses of man.

From the smaller pieces that gather during this work, certain of the workmen, with hammer and chisel, hew out thousands of paving blocks. It is rough, heavy work, and the workmen are of the sturdiest kind.

There are four unions of these workers, all of them a part of the American Federation of Labor. They are the Granite Cutters' Union, the Quarrymen's Union, the Paving Stone Cutters' Union, and the Hoisting Engineers' Union.

In the past, as usual, in an industry containing unions of various trades, these organizations found themselves at odds with one another, and rivals during controversies with employers.

This year there is a strike in the industry and we find all the workers out and the unions working in the most harmonious co-operation.

The strike started when the boss announced that he would no longer deal with the unions when the contract expired at the end of March.

He was thru with collective bargaining, he said, and the reason was that he wanted to reduce wages 20 per cent. The men struck and are still striking. Not a single one remained to scab.

There are many conservative workers in this industry, Yankees from staid old New England families. There are some foreigners, too, Swedes and Finns, who are radical. The Finns belong to the Workers Party. Under the influence of the party, the unions are working together holding meetings. I addressd one of these meetings held in Finnish Workers' Hall. It was an excellent gathering, the hall was packed.

The Mayor of Gloucester and the city councilmen were present and made speeches. They all spoke before I did, and I learned they were present because the company had imported strike breakers from Boston and secured permits from the mayor of Rockport to carry guns. Now they carry guns and clubs. The mayor of Gloucester told the audience that he would have all who invaded Gloucester disarmed or arrested. The authorities of Gloucester are particularly incensed because there has not been a single act of violence, nor anything approaching violence, since the strike began. There is no picketing. Everyone is puzzled by the action of the company. The strikers do not seem to know that such is the way of capitalism.

It also indicates that an attempt will be made to bring in scabs. If the bosses do the strikers are firm and determined and will be able to meet the situation as long as their ranks remain unbroken.

This strike is another example of the growing spirit of solidarity that is now permeating the ranks of the workers.

"I Lied," Admits Witness in Sacco Case Confession

which the defendants' lives were sworn away.

Gould, it appears from his affidavit, was on the crime scene and was shot through the coat by one of the occupants of the bandit car as it passed within five to ten feet from him. He got a close view of the man in the seat beside the driver, a position corresponding to that of the bandit whom the commonwealth sought to identify as Sacco. Neither Sacco nor Vanzetti, he declares positively after seeing photographs of both of them, and Sacco in person, is the man whom he saw and of whom he retains a distinct mental image.

Police Knew of Him

The affidavit also reveals the significant circumstance that the police knew of Gould's existence and of his first-rate opportunity to observe at least one of the bandits, but after a perfunctory interrogation by Jeremiah J. Gallivan, Chief of Police of South Braintree, they never made any effort to bring him into court. The defense located him in Portland, Me., after many months' searching.

In speaking to Harold Williams, Assistant District Attorney, on the morning before he took the stand, Pelser had asserted repeatedly, he now says, that he had not seen anyone enough to identify. Williams, however, showed him several photographs and sent him down to take a personal look at Sacco.

Pelser is extremely vague and noncommittal in explaining the considerations which led him to testify despite the fact that he could not do so honestly. He does say that when he persisted in his assertion that he could not identify, Williams had said, "You know right well that's the man."

Who put the words about Sacco being the "dead image" of the bandit into his mouth—words which he admits he does not normally use—Pelser does not reveal.

"I don't know how I was forced to say them words," he said in answer to a question put to him by the attorney.

Pelser came to the office of Attorney Moore of his own free will on February 4 and voluntarily made the confession which has just been filed. His statement is in the form of an interrogation by the attorney recorded by a stenographer. An affidavit to the effect that everything included in the statement was voluntarily and truthfully said, forms a part of the record. It was sworn to before Stephen Bresnehan, Justice of the Peace, and in the presence of Thomas Doyle, Morris Gebelow and Miss W. S. Preed.

Gould was at the time of the crime a salesman of a paste for sharpening razors. He plied his trade at factory doors, and was in front of the South Braintree factory because he knew that the men were to be paid off that day. The affidavit is a recital in detail of everything he knows in regard to the crimes committed there in his presence. It says in part:

"That the affiant sat down in the jail room while Moore and Sacco conversed one with the other for a period of upwards of ten minutes and during all of said time the affiant studied the features and all of the characteristics of Sacco and that immediately thereafter on leaving the jail the affiant stated to Moore that he was positive, and the affiant does now state that he is positive, that the said Sacco is not one and the same man as the man that the affiant saw on April 15th, 1920."

Pelser's testimony, as amended in the confession, jibes with the statement given before the trial to Robert Reid, defense investigator, but which he disclaimed on the witness stand. He now specificaly swears that the version of what he saw—and especially of what he did not see—which he gave to Reid was the correct one.

The motion will have to be ruled on by Judge Webster Thayer. Other motions predicated upon other new evidence—according to the attorney, of far more significant import—will be made in the next few weeks.

One of our good workers in Tiffins, Ohio, writes, "I would like the paper very much and I would miss it very much because I get the truth out of it. I am a painter and work is very scarce this winter so keeps our money matters close, but we cannot do without the paper."

German Majority Socialists Shy at Communists

By M. PHILIPS PRICE

BERLIN.—In spite of the decisions of the Three Internationals' Conference that joint demonstrations be held on April 20, the German Majority Socialists announce that they intend not to allow the Communists on their platform that day.

The reason given is that the Russian Communists do not demonstrate together with the Mensheviki and Social-Revolutionaries, and that a united front cannot be formed in the west unless it is formed in Russia also.

EDITOR'S NOTE:—Reports state that the Communists and Independent Socialists held tremendous demonstrations in Berlin and other German cities on April 20. In Berlin the crowds paraded under the muzzles of the Majority Socialists' machine guns. No reports were received of Majority Socialist meetings.

Italian Radicals Will Rally for "Il Martello"

On Saturday, April 29, at Tammany Hall, the Italian radicals of New York City and vicinity will gather at the third annual festival of Il Martello, the fighting labor weekly edited by Carlo Tresca. The struggle for existence put up by this paper is a most remarkable one and typifies the tenacity and determination shown in every trench of the class struggle.

During the war-time hysteria, the Italian radicals were the chosen target of A. Mitchel Palmer and Wm. J. Flynn in their radical hunting activities. Scarcely a day went by that the newspapers were not filled with accusations of Italian plots and conspiracies. The Italian radicals have withstood these attacks with courage and endurance, keeping their ranks closed and a united front. They have done this single-handed thru their own resources with little or no help from the English-speaking comrades and sympathizers.

About the most difficult task which they were forced to face was that of keeping alive their newspapers in spite of censorship and suppression. "Il Martello," which replaced "L'Avvinire (crushed by the infamous Lamar during the war), has managed to keep in the field although it was suppressed nineteen times in the last two years. Like most labor papers, "Il Martello" has to face the difficulties of meeting the enormous expense, so to cover the deficit which accumulates every year the editor calls upon supporters and friends to come to the rescue once a year.

An elaborate musical program has been arranged including songs from all the famous operas sung by stars from the Chicago Opera Co., and the beautiful "Dance of the Hours" from La Gioconda by twelve members of the Metropolitan Ballet. Because of the tremendous crowd that gathered last year at Arlington Hall, hundreds were turned away, so to insure an enjoyable and interesting evening for all, one of the biggest halls in the city has been secured.

Militant organizations and individuals of all nationalities have already given their complete support, and Il Martello's Ball promises to be an international May Day gathering of all who can sing, laugh and dance without forgetting that every radical newspaper is a vital weapon and should be supported.

Jobless Council Begins Vigorous Outdoor Drive

The Unemployment Council of New York, which did conspicuous work during the winter among the unemployed and made the question of unemployment an urgent one, is planning a most active campaign during the coming months.

The industrial situation in the United States cannot find a permanently stable basis. Hence, there cannot be the slightest doubt but that next fall and winter the army of the unemployed, as large if not larger than at present, will be in a critical position. Their savings gone, the unemployed will be prone to action.

The Unemployment Council therefore will conduct a drive of propaganda and organization, so that its slogan of WORK OR COMPENSATION will lead the workers in their action next autumn.

May 1 will be an active day for the Unemployment Council and Council of Unemployed. At 10.30 A.M. there will be a meeting at South Ferry, in front of 25 South Street. At 2 P.M. the Councils will participate in the Amnesty Alliance Demonstration at 110th St. and 5th Ave., in a united front to demand the release of class-war prisoners. At 5.30 P.M. there will be a meeting at 10th Street and 2nd Ave., at 8 P. M., a demonstration at Rutgers Square.

The summer campaign is on.

HARD TIMES IN SWEDEN

One of our subscribers in Sweden sends an interesting account on conditions there.

He reports, "Here is a real hard time right now. Because of the extreme reformist policy of the labor unions the wages are going down from 50 to 60 per cent. this year and that's forcing the members of reformist organizations to realize the impossiblity of gaining any power to better their conditions thru the reformist organizations and a great many of these members are just now beginning to vote for Communist delegates to labor union central bodies. Very little of the metal industry is running and what is active is working mainly on orders for Soviet Russia.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

The trouble with the man who has to be starved into thinking is that the first full meal is likely to rob him of his powers of thought.

BREAD and IRON

vs.

BLOOD and IRON

There are two conflicting policies toward Soviet Russia: "Blood and Iron" is the policy of the capitalists; "Bread and Iron" is the policy of the workers.

The international capitalist bund has tried its policy of "Blood and Iron" for five long years, keeping the world in senseless turmoil, polluting the press with endless lies, and wasting mountains of wealth in furious assaults upon the First Workers' Republic.

The merciless struggle is almost over. The capitalists have been defeated. "Blood and Iron" has failed.

Soviet Russia has fought her way valiantly thru to a right to life and an opportunity to lay the foundation of a better world. Genoa had to be and Russia had to be there. Cowering behind their painted masks and meek beneath their blatant boasts, the capitalist diplomats flocked around the hated representatives of Soviet Russia to bargain insidiously against each other for the best terms they could get.

This is the hour to strike for victory. Now is the time for the workers of the world to put their policy of "Bread and Iron" into effect. "Bread and Iron" can win. With the workers' backing, "Bread and Iron" will surely triumph.

The first half of this policy has been carried out extensively. Bread the working masses have given and are still generously giving to their struggling comrades in Soviet Russia. The fearful famine has been checked and continued effort may conservatively hope to overcome it completely before winter returns.

On to the second half of the workers' policy! Now for the "Iron." Give "Iron" to strengthen the First Workers' Republic. Soviet Russia grievously needs "Iron"—everything from nails to locomotives, from pins to dynamos. Tools and machinery of all kinds are sorely wanted and must be had to convert the vast realms of Russia, over one-fifth of the whole habitable world, into a flourishing labor commonwealth.

Every worker will benefit by the achievement of Soviet Russia, and the children of all the workers will inherit greater security and richer life. Take part, therefore, in the great work. Though the skill of your hands and the love of your heart must remain afar, send your tools to help build the mighty structure. Contribute in money whatever you can, whether it be to buy a hammer or a saw, a tractor or a thresher. Join with the comrades in your shop, in your organization, to make a united gift. Workers, sympathizers, be generous and true!

[illegible] for vigorous resistance against the capitalist offensive, [illegible] in united trade-union action, the Italian Railwaymen's Union, headed by Socialists, Anarchists and Syndicalists, has taken the initiative of calling upon the representatives of the Left political parties of Italy, (Anarchists, Communists, Republicans and Socialists) to meet and discuss the creation of a so-called "Alliance of Labor."

Seek Unity of Action

The Communist Party declined to participate in this conference, but in the letter which it sent explaining its absence, it declared its readiness to do everything in its power to bring about unity of action in the ranks of the Italian proletariat.

Moreover, this is what the C. P. I. has been striving for since last August when it proposed to the Trade Union Conference of Verona that a united trade-union front be formed.

This motion was of course rejected by the majority, consisting of bureaucrats and functionaries of the Italian C. G. L. (General Confederation of Labor).

Today, when the situation has become untenable for the heads of the unions, the leaders of the railwaymen have thought this an opportune moment for calling a conference of the "vanguard" political parties at Rome, for the purpose of laying the foundation for a preliminary "Entente," and of establishing an "Alliance of Labor" by bringing their influence to bear upon their respective trade-union organizations.

Recognize Need of Unity

The Communist Party of Italy, altho refusing to take part in the Conference, has recognised the importance of such a step towards proletarian unity, but it was constrained to point out that this "unity" carries the germ of sterility that exposes it to the danger of becoming a purely formal alliance, devoid of all power, as long as it is not based upon the unification of all pending demands, upon the energetic struggle to improve the proletarian standard of living and upon the use of trade-union direct action as far as the general strike.

However, the first conference of the Executive Committees of these "revolutionary" political parties has taken no such action whatever.

On the other hand, while preserving its independence and freedom of action, the C. P. I. has encouraged its adherents to support those points on the program that contributed to the foundation of a united proletarian front.

The preliminary conference of the "Alliance of Labor" was followed by an assembly that took place on the 19th of February, participated in by the leaders and executive committee of five of the most important Italian labor organizations, namely, the C. G. L., the Railwaymen's Union, the Italian Syndicalist Union, the Syndicalist Labor Union and the Federation of Harbor Workers.

In the recess between the first and second session, the Communist minorities in the C. G. L. and the Railwaymen's Union asked thru their official representative body, the Communist Trade Union Committee, that representation should be extended on a proportional basis.

Minority Refused Representation

To this request D'Aragona answered in the name of the trade-union bureaucracy that the C. G. L. statutes did not give a political committee the right to appoint representatives of the C. G. L.

As if the Communist Trade Union Committee which acts in a trade-union capacity were a political committee!

The minority of the Syndicalist Union, which, like the Communists, is in favor of the Moscow Red Union International, was also refused representation.

In this manner, more than 500,000 of the best, most class-conscious Italian workers found themselves shut out from this conference, which was to form an "Alliance of Labor."

The whole of the National Committee is in the hands of the reformists. Is this not sufficient proof that the "Alliance of Labor" is nothing more than an agreement between the leaders of the various trade-unions? The agreement and unity which will take place among the workers, will have to undo all the intrigues of these trade-union bureaucrats.

Soon after this sham "unity" was [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] From the very start their program is doomed to defeat, for instead of concentrating all the isolated and sectional divisions into one class army it is based upon the only foundation possible for them: the restoration of civil rights and liberties and the defense of the general conquests of the working class.

By general conquests our trade-union bureaucrats mean the eight-hour day, but they are dumb as to the question of wages and labor-contracts, because these are already conquests of a definite kind.

As for weapons, we see that the "Alliance of Labor" does not exclude the general strike, whereas the Communists propose the united front in order to arrive at the general strike.

Seek Lost Reputations

The governmental crisis which has just come to an end has demonstrated that the entire policy of the reformists, while using the proletarian masses as a lever, is itself pulling toward class collaboration.

The "united front," as the gentlemen of the C. G. L. desire it, is also designed to regain for these gentlemen their political reputations and to sustain them in the opinion of the proletariat. But we believe that they are laboring under an illusion. The Italian Communists are on their guard to see that the "defeatists" of the proletarian movement in Italy are paid in kind and that the movement of proletarian demands follows the only path of success—that of the Social Revolution.

The actual reason for the refusal of America to finance the restoration of Europe is that the American government has not sufficiently large sums at its disposal and that the private capitalists are at present engaged in the exploitation of Central and South America.

The capitalist groups interested in exports to Europe are extending credits to private European capitalists.

Under such circumstances, if the United States should appear at the Genoa Conference with empty hands it would risk being told:

"The cancellation of the debts would considerably contribute to the salvation of Europe, in which America is so much interested. France for instance has to pay as much in interest on its debts to the Allies as it can receive from Germany in the way of reparation payments."

The absence of America means that the Genoa Conference, even if successful, will be able to do very little in the economic field for the restoration of European industry.

Here Is Text of "United Front" Resolutions Adopted at Berlin by the Three Internationals

THE WORKER has just received the complete text of the resolutions adopted by the Berlin Conference of the three Internationals, the Third, Two and One-Half, and Second. It is as follows:—

"UNITED FRONT" RESOLUTIONS

The Conference of the Executives of London, Moscow and Vienna unanimously agrees that, however desirable may be the unification of the class organizations of the proletariat, there shall be no immediate question except of common deliberations for concrete objects by all the tendencies represented at this Congress.

The Conference therefore proposes that the Executives give their assent to the constitution of an organizing committee of nine members, having a mandate to organize further conferences of the three Executives, also larger conferences to which shall be invited parties not belonging to either of the three Internationals. Each Executive shall be free to choose as it pleases the three persons who are to represent it. In this organizing committee no decisions shall be taken by the majority; its mission is to express the points of view which are common to the three Executives as they present themselves at the given time.

United Trade Union Front

The Conference considers it useful that the organizing committee should undertake the attempt to bring about non-binding conversations between the representatives of the Amsterdam International and the Red International of Labor Unions, in order to examine by what means may be assured the re-establishment and maintenance, both nationally and internationally, of a united Trade Union front.

Russian Social Revolutionaries and Georgia

The Conference takes note of the declaration made by the representatives of the Communist International, that the 47 Social Revolutionaries may have, in their trial, whatever defenders they desire, and, as the Soviet Press announced before this Congress, the menace of condemnation to death shall be excluded from their trial; the trial shall be open to the public, representatives of the three Executives may be present, and for the information of their members, may have access to the shorthand reports.

The Conference records that each of the three Executives declares itself willing to receive and examine the documents expressing the various points of view on the question of Georgia.

The Conference instructs the organizing committee to draw up a report based on the conclusions [illegible] conference in April [illegible] the period of the Genoa Conference. The Conference [illegible] of holding a general [illegible] as soon as possible.

It is the mission of the [illegible] to inform the parties [illegible] them of the progress that the [illegible] a general congress has made [illegible] the Berlin deliberations.

The Executives will give [illegible] presentatives on the organizing committee full power to carry [illegible] finite conclusion the deliberations of the Berlin Conference concerning [illegible] calling of a general conference.

For the United Action of the Proletariat

The organization of a general conference during the course of [illegible] month was impossible, for the reasons indicated above.

The present Conference declares it to be an indispensable duty, in view of the offensive by international capitalist Imperialism, to manifest immediately, in an international action, the united will of the conscious international proletariat.

The Conference therefore invites the workers of all countries to organize during the Genoa Conference on April 20th, or, if that is impossible, on May 1st, powerful gatherings of the masses, demonstrating with the greatest unity possible for:

The eight-hour day.

To combat unemployment, which is infinitely increased by the Reparations policy of the Capitalist Powers.

For united action by the proletariat against the capitalist offensive.

For the Russian Revolution; for famine-stricken Russia; for the establishment of political and economic relations between Soviet Russia and all States.

The reconstruction of the United Front of the proletariat in all countries and in the International.

The signatories were: Clara Z kin, Radek and Frossard for Third International; Otto W Vandervelde and J. R. MacDo for the Second; and Frederick Ad Bracke and Crispien for the T and-a-Half.

All Organized Labor Must Present United Front to Capitalism's Offensiv

the Amsterdam and the Red Trade Union Internationals in order jointly to consider ways and means for countering the offensive of capital, the Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International declares that:—

1—The steps taken by our Norwegian comrades with a view of realizing the united front of the organized proletariat thruout the world, are in accordance with similar endeavors on the part of the Executive Bureau of the Red Trade Union International which has repeatedly requested the Executive of the Amsterdam Trade Union International to carry on a joint campaign for certain immediate demands, without, however, having at any time received a satisfactory answer.

2—The Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International nevertheless still declares its willingness to participate either in an international conference to which it proposes to invite all Communist and Socialist parties and all other worker's organizations, or in an international trade-union conference, in order to organize jointly the resistance against the aggression of capital.

3—The Executive Committee instructs the Executive Bureau to get into communication with those organizations which will take upon themselves the initiative in calling such a conference.

4—All organizations affiliated to the Red Trade Union International which are in a position to make concrete and practical proposals on this matter are to be invited to submit such proposals first to the Executive Bureau which will discuss them in detail and also make the necessary arrangements for carrying them thru.

4—Organizations belonging to the Red Trade Union International must not participate in any conference or congress whatsoever, to which official representatives of the Red Trade Union International have not been invited.

In conclusion the Executive Committee advises the Norwegian Federation to elaborate a concrete plan of action which in its opinion would provide a satisfactory basis for the international collaboration of the Red Trade Union and Amsterdam Internationals.

The Capitalist Offensive and the Proletarian United Front.

1—The offensive measures which the capitalists thruout the world are at present carrying out, constitute an attempt at solving the economic problems born of and intensified by the war by using both economic and political weapons to compel the proletariat to take upon its shoulders the costs of the war and the burden of its aftermath—the crisis.

The latter obliges the capitalists of all countries to reduce the costs of production.

The disorganization of the proletariat renders it an easy prey for the bourgeoisie which, always attacking at the point of the least resistance, cuts down costs of production by lowering wages, lengthening hours and intensifying exploitation, thus robbing the proletariat of the most elementary achievements gained in the past and forcing it into the deepest misery.

2—This offensive has been well planned and organized by world capital, and only differs in its external form in the various countries.

In countries with a high rate of exchange, wages are reduced; while in those whose currency has depreciated, wages are not being increased in proportion to the steadily declining purchasing power of money.

Both methods achieve the same result—increasing pauperisation of large masses of labor and the imperilling of its bare existence.

To this labor retorts with vague indignation and an evergrowing determination to close its ranks and fight for a way out of its unbearable need.

3—The reformist leaders of the Amsterdam Trade Union International have shown themselves incapable of organizing the masses to ward off the capitalist offensive.

Until very recently the leaders of Amsterdam even denied that the capitalists were getting ready for attack and endeavored to conciliate labor by praising the League of Nations and the methods of cooperation with the bourgeoisie both on the industrial and the political field.

And tho the failure of their policy and their tactics has meanwhile become obvious, the leaders of Amsterdam have done nothing whatsoever to mass the proletariat for defense; they have contented themselves with futile complaints.

Neither in the United States, nor in Great Britain, Germany, Switzerland, Sweden or France, have the opportunist trade-union leaders attempted to unite and organize all proletarian forces against capital's power.

Neither nationally nor internationally have the leaders of Amsterdam dared to attempt a [illegible]

The bureaucracy [illegible] the battling workers in the 1921 British miners' strike.

In Czecho-Slovakia and in Switzerland the officialdom of the trade-unions is sabotaging the united defensive fight against the capitalist offensive, because it fears that this united defensive might result in a weakening of the power of capital.

4—This refusal on the part of the trade-union bureaucracy to prepare and carry thru the struggle of the entire working class has in many instances seriously interfered with the development of the proletarian defensive, and this is being understood by ever greater masses of workers.

The determination to struggle which is daily gaining ground among labor, is the best preliminary for the united front which, if no other course proves possible, must be organized even against the wishes of the Amsterdam officialdom.

The followers of the Red Trade Union International, the revolutionary Syndicalists and the Communists must take the initiative in establishing the united front against the offensive of capital.

The purpose and the aim of this united front is the unity of all workers, both within and outside of the Amsterdam Trade Union International, who are determined to take up the fight against wage reductions, extension of working hours, intensified exploitation and cheap woman and child labor, which is more and more becoming a weapon in the hands of the employers, and, finally, against the general daily hardships of a worker's life.

5—The strongly organized employer class dominates the state apparatus and uses it in all its ramifications against labor which will be compelled to turn the fight for safeguarding its immediate economic interests into an attack against the bourgeois state with a view of overthrowing it and replacing the old apparatus by a class organization of its own.

6—The united front must become a fact both on a national and international scale.

The chief difference between us and the Amsterdamers is that we are prepared to employ all possible weapons against every conceivable form of capitalist exploitation (wage reductions, lengthening of working hours, intensified exploitation).

The Amsterdamers, on the other hand, not only decline to fight for the dictatorship of the proletariat, but also carefully avoid every serious contest on the economic field, being convinced that such a contest would at present endanger capitalist reconstruction.

We are for countering capital's offensive, because we hold that to be the only means by which labor can be saved from enslavement. We advocate the struggle because we are not concerned with capitalist reconstruction, but solely with the destruction of the capitalist economic system.

We are confident that the working class has sufficient strength to rebuild the economic structure and the state so as to make exploitation impossible.

We are adverse to capitalist reconstruction, because as a result of the situation created by the war's devastation, this is only possible by forcing millions of European workers to lower their living standard below the barest existence minimum, by creating a giant army of unemployed in perpetuo as a result of intensifying colonial exploitation, by the continuation of war armaments, and by new imperialist wars.

7—We are willing and eager to fight side by side with all workers, private and state employees.

We are taking up this struggle, in order to enroll millions of unemployed, who are now doomed to death by starvation, in the army of production and secondly because a decent standard of living will revive the will to battle of the working class.

We are prepared to fight in the front ranks, no matter what the sacrifices, and battle shoulder to shoulder with all those who have as yet no clear conception of the necessity for a struggle for the entire economic and political power.

8—We call upon all labor organizations thruout the world to form a united front together with us on the basis of the defense of the economic interests of the working class. We furthermore declare our readiness to wage warfare for this aim with all workers' organizations, no matter what their political outlook.

We deem it essential that pressure be everywhere brought to bear upon the trade-union leaders to prepare for, and conduct such a campaign.

Only after representatives of the various trade-unions and leaders in their endeavors to save the bourgeoisie persist in declining to participate in joint defensive warfare, shall we attempt to organize the struggle without and, if need be, even against them.

9—Wage disputes of the trades of minor importance in the process of production must be combined with the struggles of those workers essential for the maintenance of the economic life of the bourgeois state. Strikes of railwaymen, seamen, miners and other trades of international importance in a given country must be actively supported by the same trades in the adjoining states.

In countries with a depreciated currency the best basis for a united front is the uniformly organized struggle against the increase of prices (the control of production, commerce and prices by the working class) for the burden of taxation and the war debts being saddled on the possessing class.

In colonial and semi-colonial countries, as for instance India and China, labor has to defend itself against aggression of both the domestic bourgeoisie and the foreign imperialists.

The Red Trade Union International and the workers of the capitalist countries must advise and support the young revolutionary proletariat of the Far East in its struggle for decent living conditions and against domestic and foreign exploiters.

10—The revolutionary labor unions must everywhere take the initiative in creating the united front, of course on the basis of the class struggle and not on that of collaboration between the classes.

This united front must be hinged on certain specified demands all labor is interested in (wage disputes, working hours, standard of living, woman and child labor, etc.)

The revolutionary labor unions and their leaders must do everything in their power to bring these struggles to a victorious end.

11—The united front is thus to be built up for purposes of warfare in which the revolutionary organizations must fight shoulder to shoulder with reformist and other worker's organizations as long as the latter are determined to wage the battle for everyday demands of labor.

Action, absolute and definitive refusal to participate in any cooperation whatsoever with the capitalist class on the part of the reformist and other workers' organizations, and retention of organizational and political independence on our part are the preliminary conditions for a united front.

A united front does under no circumstances imply that the Red Trade Unions have deserted either their principles or have relinquished their program and tactics.

In concluding with other workers' organizations an agreement for the purpose of jointly conducting a certain action, the revolutionary organizations propagate their ideas and their principles.

United front means common struggle with proletarians who differ with us as to the ultimate aim and with semi-proletarians in town and country who are willing to fight with us against the capitalists and landowners.

The united front means the community of struggle of the proletarian class against its enemy, the bourgeoisie, and is as such radically distinguished from Amsterdam's policy of cooperation with the same class.

12—The leaders of the Amsterdam Trade Union International and its affiliated bodies look askance at the desire of the working class for unity upon the basis of a common defense against capitalist aggression.

This is the ultimate reason for the wellplanned attempts of influential circles within the Amsterdam Trade Union International to split the trade-union movement, at a time when the capitalist offensive has reached its culminating point and the bourgeoisie is everywhere adopting brutal measures against the workers' organizations.

In France, for instance, the trade-union movement has been manoeuvred into a perilous situation due to the tactics of the reformists, while in Switzerland similar tactics are at present being employed with a like determination.

Here one of the Amsterdam leaders has moved the expulsion of one of the strongest sections of the Metal Workers' Union, because it did not approve of his reformist tactics.

The same attitude towards the united front of the trade-unions is met with in other countries.

The Amsterdam leaders respond to the elementary desire of the working class for unity in especially difficult times by favoring all attempts at splitting the trade-union movement and preferring collaboration with the bourgeoisie to an understanding with the revolutionary workers.

13—These tactics of the leaders of the Amsterdam Trade Union International and its national sections cannot prevent the Red Trade Union International and its affiliated organizations from proposing, whenever and wherever that is possible, the union of the actions of the workers.

Hence we suggest that our organizations continue to enlighten the workers on the imperative necessity for unity.

Wherever reformist trade-union leaders decline to come to an understanding with our organizations because they are revolutionary or Communist, we advise our followers to disregard the leaders of the reformist trade-unions and appeal directly to the broad masses organized in such unions, thus exposing the ers' criminal tactics and their re to all labor.

14—It is necessary everywhere call upon both the adherents of Amsterdam Trade Union Interna nal and the Anarchists to prep and conduct the struggle toget with the Communists, Syndicali and members of the Red tra unions.

While declining to abandon principles, we must nevertheless serve stringent class discipline everywhere workers having a di rent stand-point but determ upon a struggle, to join them i

15—All our adherents must na ally and internationally be unite the Red Trade Union Internat as a compact centre of revolution energy.

After the other workers fight si by side with us, practice and exp rience of the struggle will very so make the workers discover the ut futility of employing reformist a syndicalist halfway measures a methods in the battle, and it will possible to overcome them.

The example is set in the cou of the struggle by the followers the Red Trade Union Internatio who keep faith under all circumst ces and are deterred by no no matter how great, together sharp and matter-of-fact criticism the shortcomings and weakness the other methods of struggle help the proletariat to attain 16—Simultaneously with activities for uniting all labor for the purpose of fense, the revolutionary must continue their work of uniting the [illegible] class.

The possibility of uniting of various political [illegible] crete and practical [illegible] fensive and offensive [illegible] in proportion [illegible] the work of the revolutionary unions in propagating their idea organizing their followers more intense, more certain aims and more systematic.

DISCUSS UNITED FRONT

The English (downtown) Branch, Workers Party, will have a general discussion on the question of the United Front, Wednesday night, May 3, at 61 Canal St. Albert Verblin will lead the discussion. All are welcome.

[illegible] Fears United [illegible] Proposals for May Day

The proposal of the Workers Party to form a united front of labor for the celebration of International Labor Day (May First), has met with a similar reception at the hands of the Socialist Party as a proposal along the same line by the Communists of Germany received from the Scheidemann-Ebert "Majorities" in Germany.

Once more the dominant element of the Socialist Party showed their kinship to the most reactionary labor faction in all Europe by this similarity of reaction to an identical proposition.

In Milwaukee, Wis., the May Day conference of radical organizations under the lead of the Workers Party, invited the Socialist Party and the Federated Trades Council to participate.

The S. P. refused to give the floor to the delegation sent to present the invitation, while the Executive Board of the Federated Trades, controlled by the S. P., tried to suppress all knowledge of the receipt of such a communication.

This was blocked by Workers Party members who were delegates to the Council, and the invitation was ordered read despite the efforts of the gang to side-track it on the plea of "too much business."

Meeting Is Adjourned

An interesting and heated discussion resulted and the meeting was adjourned by the steam roller before a motion to refer it back to the Executive Board for action, then on the floor, could be voted on.

In Schenectady, N. Y., the Socialist local, altho small and uninfluential, took very much the same attitude, and struck an attitude that the only kind of a united front of labor in which they were interested was that of membership in their own little local.

Schenectady and Milwaukee are two examples of the rottenness of labor reformism gone to seed. In the former the idol of the S. P., George R. Lunn, served the same master whether as "Socialist" mayor or "Democratic" congressman, and the handful of remaining S. P. loyalists seem to have learned nothing and forgotten nothing.

In Milwaukee a bluff individualist of low ward heeler type considers it profitable to label his political machine with the "Social-Democratic" label, and in return for the questionable prestige his vote brings to the national Socialist Party he is allowed to boss the show on the national field as well.

Scheidemann and Noske are opposed to a united front of labor. So are "Socialist" Congressman Berger and Democratic Congressman Lunn. So are Elbert H. Gary and his Supreme Court Chief, Bill Taft. They are all in good company and class kinship.

Conflicting Tendencies

On the other hand it should be noted that just as the Independent of Germany did lay aside their personal prejudices and take part in the joint activity, so a number of S. P. Locals have also come into May Day conferences with the Workers Party and the local trade unions.

This is true notably in Baltimore in many Massachusetts towns, and is the case of one New York local.

Two such diametrically opposite tendencies in one organization, each going its own way and doing as it pleases, could be tolerated only in an unprincipled and moribund office-hunting alliance like the dominant group now in control of the S. P. political shell.

Exhibitions of attitude like that on the "United Front for May Day" issue will soon alienate whatever decent membership continues fealty to them. They have no message for the workers of America. They exist only to divide the ranks of labor and serve the capitalist class with the vituperation they heap upon those who expose their bankruptcy of principle. "By their deeds ye shall know them," and their deeds are exactly identical with those of the most reactionary group of the Right Wing of the German movement.

MEETINGS FOR MAY DAY

Rochester, N. Y., will see a demonstration in which the Amalgamated Clothing Workers are running the meeting jointly with the Workers Party and other local groups upon the basis of the Workers Party Central Executive Committee's united front program, unchanged, and with Robert Minor and Ignazio [illegible], both party speakers, on the program for addresses in English and Italian, respectively.

St. Paul and Minneapolis will also hold meetings with T. B. Lewis as the principal speaker.

At Gardner, Mass., the meeting [illegible] under the auspices of a conference including, besides the Party, the Carpenters' Union, Painters Union, and two Lithuanian Fraternal organizations. The members of the Finnish Branch Socialist Party, tried to prevent the participation of the unions but were outvoted. The speakers will be Dr A. F. Konikow and M. Plepys.

At Norwood, Mass., the meeting will be held in the New South Theatre, with Mrs. Eva Hoffman as the English speaker and others to talk in Russian and Lithuanian.

Strikers Join in Meeting

Lanesville, Mass., will have a meeting at Finnish Hall, under auspices in which the striking quarrymen's union is taking a leading part. H. Canter will be the speaker.

Edgar Owens, Secretary of the National Defense Committee will be the principal speaker at the meetings at Springfield and Worcester. There will also be a Socialist speaker at Springfield.

At Fitchburg, J. P. Reid, of Providence, R. I., will be the speaker. At Chelsea, James P. Cannon, H. S. Bloomfield and R. J. Zelms will be the speakers.

At Superior, Wisc., an extensive musical program has been arranged for the meeting at Workers' Hall, Tower Ave. and Fifth Street, May 1. Frank E. Miner, District Organizer and member of the Minnesota Legislature, will be the principal speaker in English.

Outvoted at Superior, Wisc.

A spirited fight for the participation of the Local Trades Assembly was made by our delegates, but they were outvoted. It is not known at this time whether the I. W. W. will participate. Here the local Finnish branch with 150 members is the largest single branch in the local. They maintain the headquarters and have an orchestra, dramatic club, male choir, brass band and athletic club. The English branch has been organized only recently with [illegible] members but all are active.

The recently organized Young Workers League is also showing splendid strength, and meets every week with educational and literary programs as their principal activity.

In work on behalf of the Friends of Soviet Russia this local has also been very successful, collecting over 800 in one tag day at Superior, and 1600 in Duluth.

At Wilmington, Del., there will be a May Day program consisting of speakers in English and Italian, and some excellent musical numbers.

In Newark, N. J., there is a May Day conference composed of party branches and various labor organizations that will hold a meeting in the Newark Labor Lyceum, 704 S. 4th St., on Monday, May 1st, with Rose Pastor Stoker and Stephen Bircher as speakers. Of the proceeds 50 percent will go to Famine Relief, 25 percent to the Miners Strike Fund, and 25 percent to the National Defense Committee.

Chicago and Vicinity

A joint meeting will be held under the auspices of a conference made up of Carpenters Unions, Machinist Locals, Joint Board of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, Proletarian Party, Socialist Labor Party, Left Paole Zion and all branches of the Workers Party. The principal speaker will be W. Z. Foster, who will also talk at separate meetings conducted at different times by the Bohemian, Italian and Finnish branches.

At Joliet, Ill., David J. Bentall will be the principal speaker, and four local unions participating in the conference.

At Moline, Ill., and Davenport, Ia., Arne Swabeck will be the principal speaker.

The entire speaking force of District Eight (Chicago) has been placed at the disposal of the St. Louis district for an intensive campaign of the coal fields, and Browder, Swabeck, Carney and Backall making up the first contingent during and after May Day.

At [illegible], Ohio, [illegible] English [illegible] the Workers Party with twelve charter members [illegible]. Sacco-Vanzetti literature is also being sold and a [illegible] is being raised for the Defense Fund.

His Illinois itinerary has not yet been made up but acceptances have been received from Rockford and Moline, Ill., and Racine, Wisc.

Advance acceptances from St. Louis and Superior, Wisc., indicate that his stay in districts [illegible] are also going to be effective in arousing sentiment for the release of all our class war prisoners.

The district organizers in these two districts welcome his services and one of them asks for more time than it is possible to allow any one district.

Two dates have already been fixed for his return trip, Youngstown, Ohio, for a return picnic date, and Detroit, Mich., where other meetings made it impossible to arrange his meeting on this tour.

All locals east of Omaha desiring Coldwell dates upon the basis of dividing the net proceeds, one-third to the local, one-third to the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee, and one-third to the National Defense Committee, the national office to furnish advertising matter, should write at once.

Administrative Council of Party Takes Up Problem of Industrial Activitie.

The principal decision of the recent meeting of the Administrative Council of the Workers Party was on the question of industrial organization activity of party members, and the relation of such activity toward broader groups of radical and progressive workers such as the Trade Union Educational League.

The committee decided that while our own party members must organize their nuclei within the unions on strictly party lines, they should also take an active part in promoting such "Left" movements as the Trade Union Educational League, and thru their constructive activity within these organizations keep their policies in harmony with the program of the Red Trade Union International.

The actual structure of the industrial organization work of the party is to be created on the basis of the following report, submitted by a special sub-committee and approved with minor corrections, by the committee.

A report on the release of Ferguson, Ruthenberg and Gitlow on bail and the negotiations on the release of Larkin and Winitsky was presented by the Defense Secretary.

The manager of the Hungarian Printing Plant, sought to be made a party institution, was requested to remain at his post until the conclusion of the investigation into the matter by the Finance and Press committees.

A survey of the affairs of the party papers printed in New York City will be a part of this investigation.

The status of unorganized or nominally organized districts was taken up, one proposal being to manage these from the national office until such time as a district organization could be set up and maintained, the other was to attach them to contiguous districts. Action was postponed pending further study of the question.

DISTRICT TWO IS BUSY

The District Organizer reports after a tour of the district, that City Central Committees are organized in New Haven and Hartford, Conn., in Essex, Hudson and Passaic Counties, New Jersey, in New York, Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse, and in the "Capital District," which takes in Albany, Cohoes, Johnston, Schenectady and Troy. The formation of a City Central Committee is a very real criterion of organization development as it means that the various branches of the party in each city have really gone together for effective work.

The total membership in the district is estimated at 4,500, in a total of 120 branches. Minor meetings were held in six cities. The district convention is booked for July 1st and 2nd.

Workers Party Branch of Neffs, Ohio, had a benefit dance and raised $165.38 for the Friends of Soviet Russia.

[illegible] in America

The [illegible] of a [illegible] in the City Central Committee [illegible] in favor of an alliance for the coming Congressional [illegible] of all political parties that accept the [illegible] of independent political action on the part of the working class [illegible] of the united front in America down [illegible] of theoretical generalities to a concrete [illegible].

[illegible] to accept the united front tactic [illegible].

The [illegible] of the resolution is that the interests of the [illegible] demand the application of the united front tactic on the political field, in the form of an alliance of all parties [illegible] to represent the working class. Do existing conditions justify that [illegible]?

No one but a hopeless dogmatist would deny that it would be a step forward if the American workers could be weaned away from the two capitalist parties.

The class struggle on the political field will begin in earnest when the bulk of the proletariat will cast its ballot for other than capitalist parties.

One of the indications of a growing class-consciousness is the tendency for the proletariat to break away from the Democratic and Republican parties.

Is there such a tendency on the part of the American workers to break away from the Republican and Democratic parties? And if there is would an alliance of all working class parties help in crystallyzing that tendency?

Certain it is that the objective conditions speak in favor of the possibility of getting the workers to leave the capitalist parties. The merciless wage-slashing drive, the determined open-shop campaign, the five or six million unemployed, all favor that possibility.

Within the last few years the American workers have jumped in quick succession from the fold of the Republican to that of the Democratic party and back again. This indicates the existence of a fermentation amongst them.

They are not entirely satisfied and are changing parties in the hope of getting something better. True, thus far their memory has been short and consequently they have jumped from the Republican frying pan into the Democratic fire and then reversed the process.

But it is inconceivable that they will continue to do so for a long period of time. At the time of the exodus of the Wilson administration [illegible] crisis of unemployment had just begun and one of the reasons for the Republican land-slide was the hope that the bosses would open the factories under a Republican regime.

But the factories are still closed, the crisis has not abated in the least and it is not reasonable to expect that under these conditions, the workers are in a mood to throw both capitalist parties overboard?

That the tendency to leave the old parties has a basis in fact and is no mere figment of our imagination is evident to all who are acquainted with recent developments in the labor movement.

Beginning with 1918, Labor Parties have sprung up all over the country independently of one another. Bridgeport, Hartford, Chicago, New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania have all had their labor parties. They have disappeared from the political arena, but the significance of their spontaneous rise cannot be ignored.

The recent Chicago conference can in a larger sense, be interpreted only as a movement on the part of the workers towards independent political action. The movement is hesitating; it has many obstacles to overcome, but no one can deny the existence of the movement.

All-in-all, it is safe to assert that there is a real sentiment on the part of the workers to leave the capitalist parties, and it needs only the formation of a Labor Party to crystallize that sentiment and once—and for all tear the workers away from the Democratic and Republican party.

There is, however, and unfortunately so, no Labor Party. Does that mean, then, that we must wait till one is formed? That would mean to accept the absurdity that without a Labor Party there can be no united front.

Under the circumstances, a united front of all existing parties believing in independent political action for the workers, is the best that we can hope to achieve. And that is a highly desirable thing.

First, because it would, to a smaller degree, accomplish what a Labor Party could do, namely, help tear the workers away from the capitalist parties. Certainly those workers who are ready to leave the old parties will not be encouraged to do so if they see all the proletarian parties and factions fighting around like cats and dogs. There's nothing that discourages workers who have evolved a minimum degree of class consciousness, so much, as the lack of unity on the part of those who claim to represent them. They generally turn away in disgust.

Second, the formation of such a united front will be a powerful push towards the creation of a Labor Party.

No doubt but that such a united front would obtain the backing of the more progressive unions. There would be formed a Labor Party in embryo and that would be a step towards the formation of a real Labor Party.

No doubt exists that if we consider the resolution in favor of an alliance of all political parties claiming to represent the workers, from the point of view of the effect that such an alliance will have upon the proletarian movement, we must accept the resolution without hesitation.

But, the question can be asked (and undoubtedly will be) how about the Workers Party? Can we afford to enter into an alliance with all varieties of reformists? Would it not be a compromise of our revolutionary principles to work hand in-hand with Hillquit and his kind.

First of all, the united front on the political field does not mean an organic unity of parties. We keep our organization intact; we propagate our principles; we reserve absolute right to criticize the theories and tactics of any other party.

We are united temporarily on the basis of such immediate demands as are agreeable to all factions. If the Socialists and Farmer-Laborites believe in the eight-hour day, in the prevention of the use of injunctions in strikes and if we also believe in these and similar immediate demands then the obvious thing for us to do (at least obvious to the ordinary worker) is to unite on the basis of these immediate demands.

The Workers Party has nothing to lose and everything to gain if it adopts the tactic advocated in the resolution. If the other parties accept, it means that the progress of the proletarian movement is furthered, and everything that furthers the progress of the proletarian movement is in the interest of the Workers Party because its interests are identical with those of the proletariat as a whole.

The Workers Party can not afford to be manoeuvered into a position where it will appear that it is the cause of the splitting up of the proletarian vote. We, above all, must stand for the unity of the workers in all fields.

If the other parties refuse to accept our offer of a united front in election campaigns, then our position will be tremendously strengthened.

We shall be able to show that the accusation of the opportunists that we are the disrupters and split-makers is a mere shame and hypocrisy used by them to prejudice the workers against us.

It is absolutely incorrect to consider the proposed temporary alliance of political parties as a union with the leaders of the reformist parties. It is far more correct to assert that it is a union with whatever proletarian elements exist within the reformist parties and, most important, with all the workers who are under the influence of those parties.

The acceptance of the resolution will mean that we really have serious intentions of going to the masses of becoming a party of the masses.

No one will claim that the application of the united-front tactic on the political field, will mean the creation of a mass movement in the immediate future.

It will mean the beginning of a mass movement and that fact alone outweighs all the possible objections that can be advanced in opposition to a united front of all proletarian parties.

LINDGREN GOES ON TOUR

Edward Lindgren, organizer for District No. 2, of the Workers Party will make a two-weeks' tour of the central parts of New York State during the weeks from May 3 to 17, inclusive.

He will make the following towns for organization purposes:

May 3, Binghamton; May 4, Spencer; May 5, Oneonta; May 6, 7, 8, Capital District which includes Albany, Schenectady, Troy, Cohoes, Johnstown and Gloversville; May 9 and 10, Utica; May 11, Syracuse; May 12, Ithaca; May 13, Newfields; May 14, Geneva; May 15, Pennelsville; May 16 and 17, Syracuse.

Brownsville Branch, N.Y. Workers Party, is supporting the "Worker" Opera benefit to the limit of its strength. Its first order was for thirteen tickets and there is a promise of many more to come. What is your branch doing?

Several members of the Yorkville Branch [illegible] THE WORKER by obtaining subscriptions for it among their friends and fellow-workers. Particularly inspiring was the report of Comrade Kuppersmith, Branch Organizer and the individual comrade most responsible for the subscription drive.

Other interesting features of the meeting, which was held at the Branch's temporary headquarters at 143 E. 103rd Street, included a report from the committee charged with locating headquarters in the Yorkville section, and a keenly contested discussion on the European Labor Movement in its relation to America which was led by Comrade Procope, a member of the Branch recently returned from Europe. Following this discussion there were short talks by different comrades on the work of the Unemployment Council and on the plan for a city-wide Subbotnik for the F. S. R. on May 6 and 7. The Educational Director announced another interesting educational program for the next meeting on May 1.

Arrangements were made for full participation in the May Day demonstrations at 110th Street and Fifth Avenue, the Oriental comrades undertaking the work of making a banner for the occasion.

Y.W.L. NEWS

Comrade Kun Lesley of Newark reports the existence of a Y.W.L. in that city with 40 good standing members. They organized during the latter part of January with a mere handful, but with hard and consistent work, now have a functioning branch. Delegates to the National Convention have already been elected.

Camden, N. J., after trying for a long time, at last managed to get a Y.W.L. started. Comrade Edna Morrow, the secretary, writes: "We have read and discussed the Y.W.L. program, and do heartily endorse its principles." Everyone is full of pep. They expect to have a big league soon.

The Elizabeth I. Y. P. S. L. has elected its delegates to the National Convention. Everyone there is hoping that we shall soon have a large and united movement.

Our Comrades in Toledo will hold their May Day demonstration on April 30th—and intend to make it a special occasion to get members for the Y.W.L. They want to get a special Y.W.L. speaker for the celebration. We have made arrangements for someone to be there.

All who desire to contribute funds to defray the expenses of bringing a delegate from West Virginia to the National Convention, should send same to this office as soon as possible. All the miners in Coketon have been locked out for a long time—and now the strike is on—they cannot, therefore, raise any money themselves but depend upon our assistance.

Chicago held its City Convention April 18th. It passed resolutions on the United Front; Industrial Activity, Genoa Conference, and Political Subordination to the Workers Party. Five delegates to the National Convention were elected. According to a census of the Chicago Y.W.L. more than 50 per cent. of the membership belong to unions, one of their members is a business agent for an important local of the Building Trades, and three are delegates to the Chicago Federation of Labor.

CLEVELAND C.C.C. ACTIVE

A number of successful meetings mark the activity of the local at Cleveland, Ohio. An open forum is also conducted at which Elmer Boich, Tom Clifford, and Jim Corrigan have been speakers.

A large and growing new English branch was recently organized. On Sunday, April 30, a mass meeting was held at Workers Home, 15810 Holmes Ave., 2 p. m., at which the united front policy of the Workers Party against the open-shop campaign, which is particularly strong in Cleveland, was capably presented.

KANSAS CITY, KANS.

The Party conducts an open forum three times a month and reports extensive unemployment "because the Stockyard workers are good strikers."

A lively branch of the F.S.R. is made up of delegates of ten organizations, and at an entertainment on Decoration Day a phonograph will be raffled off for the benefit of the famine relief.

The Relief Society for the People of Soviet Russia, affiliated with the Friends of Soviet Russia, are giving a theatre party on Friday night, May 5th. "[illegible]" at the Art Theatre in Madison Square Garden will be the play presented. Tickets may be secured at the headquarters, [illegible] Fifth Ave., and at the door.

All Out on May Day

This issue of THE WORKER will reach a large number of its readers on the eve of many May Day demonstrations.

It cannot be emphasized too strongly that every reader of these words should do all in his power to make these demonstrations successful achievements in the forward march of the working class.

Last week 100,000 workers marched in Vienna in the demonstrations called for by the united front conference of the three Internationals. Another 100,000 demonstrated in the streets of Berlin under the guns of the ruling social-democracy.

Great preparations had been made, as we went to press, for the celebration of International May Day by the workers of all countries.

Demonstrations, mass meetings, parades will be held in all sections of this country under the inspiration of the young American Communist movement.

There will be more real agitation and propaganda for Communism in this country during the celebration of International May Day, 1922, than we have been able to carry on during the three years existence of our movement. It will be the first May Day of the Workers Party.

This day, May Day, 1922, should therefore mark the beginning of new and greater struggles. Let all workers be idle for capitalism, but not idle for their own cause on this day.

In New York City plans have been formulated for wonderful open air demonstrations at 110th Street and Park Circle, in Manhattan, and at Grand Street Extension and Havemeyer Ave., in Brooklyn.

Turn out to these gatherings. Help restore the pre-war custom of mass demonstrations in the streets of New York.

Forward to May Day! Forward, All! Forward, Everywhere!

"God save labor from the courts!" was one of Samuel Gompers' bright sayings before the Lockwood Committee of the New York State Legislature. But capitalism doesn't recognize God and it does own the courts. So labor had better put its trust in its own strength, and develop that, until it becomes greater than the strength of capitalism, and then it will not be compelled to look around for [illegible] even for a Gompers.

Here Is the Latest

We offer the accompanying as absolutely the latest plan to overthrow the Soviet Regime in Red Russia.

Alexander Maximov, professor of anatomy in the imperial military academy at Petrograd since 1903, and ranking as a general in the former czarist army, NOW TEACHING BIOLOGY AT THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO, declares:—

"If the 30,000 Communists who are engineering things in Russia could be killed off by outside nations, the bootless, gunless, hungry Red Army could be routed. But the Communists must not be imprisoned nor exiled, they must be killed.

"BUT, THE FRENCH AND BRITISH GOVERNMENTS CANNOT GET THEIR WORKERS TO MARCH AGAINST THE RUSSIAN WORKERS."

Well, there you have it. Maximov says what should be done, and then confesses, "It can't be did."

What Maximov proposes is just what Lloyd George and his fellow imperialist diplomats have been trying to do for the past four years.

The Genoa Conference is testimony to the fact that they could not get the workers of their own countries to murder the Communists of Russia. They have failed.

So Maximov had better confine himself to his biological studies at the Standard Oil-controlled university on Chicago's midway. We assure him, John D. Rockefeller will have no fault to find with his teachings.

Lady Astor is here proclaiming herself the real representative of British opinion. She classifies Margot Asquith, of autobiography fame, as an "irresponsible." And her message to Irish-Americans is:—"If I were an Irish-American I'd never send a cent across to Ireland to help them fight. That means only self-destruction." Wonder where Lady Astor was all the time the big war was going on and the United States government was loaning billions to Great Britain to destroy lives and property in Europe? The Irish can be depended on to see thru the Lady's hypocricy.

We Rejoice! We Fight On!

We rejoice in the release, even on bail, of Ruthenberg, Ferguson and Gitlow, from the prisons of Auburn and Sing Sing.

We fight on that they may never again be compelled to return to the steel chambers of the capitalist inquisition; that all those now shackled in mind and body may be liberated, and that all others threatened with persecution may be freed of the charges against them.

Not including the two convictions of our comrades on so-called "criminal anarchy" charges before Judge Gibbs, Bronx County, April 25, there are nine Communist prisoners in New York State.

Gitlow, Ferguson and Ruthenberg have just been released on bail under certificates of reasonable doubt from Judge Benjamin N. Cardozo, of the Court of Appeals.

Larkin will no doubt also secure release on bail from Judge Cardozo, the cases of these four defendants being under the same indictment.

This group of appeals will come up for oral argument before the entire court of appeals the last of May or the beginning of June.

The printed arguments in the Ferguson-Ruthenberg case, and in the Gitlow case, were written by Ferguson at Sing Sing.

The appeal of Harry Winitsky has not yet been filed in the Appellate Division, but will be ready for argument within a very short time.

Meanwhile, on Wednesday, May 3, there will be presented an application to the Supreme Court, Motion Term, for a certificate of reasonable doubt and bail for Winitsky.

A written memorandum of argument is being prepared [illegible]

[illegible] others on bail.

The case of Paul Manko, [illegible] put a leaflet of the Communist [illegible] for the Appellate Division by [illegible] A certificate of reasonable doubt [illegible]

The appeal of [illegible] of Cortland, N. Y., is in the hands of Attorney Walter Nelles.

Gus Alonen and Carl Paivio did not appeal their cases. They will complete their minimum sentences [illegible] within the next two or three months. Deportation warrants have been served on them while in prison.

That is the outlook as it presents itself to our comrades in their struggle with the capitalist class.

That the court attack against Communists continues is shown in the brutal conviction of Mrs. [illegible] and Mrs. [illegible] Jurson in the Bronx County Supreme Court. They were charged with distributing Communist leaflets [illegible] to May Day, one year ago.

At the same time the court [illegible] the bail of [illegible] Leisman, facing similar charges, from [illegible] to [illegible] because the "prosecuting attorney has suspicions."

The cases of these women comrades must be stubbornly fought. If there is a sentence to state prison (the women come up for sentence May 3rd), then demonstrations must be arranged and a systematic campaign of protest planned.

In the language of our Comrade Ferguson, "My heart aches at the thought of these women comrades going to prison. We must put up a fight for them, the biggest fight that we know how."

Remember, Comrades! We rejoice! We fight on!

The West Virginia Treason Trial

"The System" is again on the trail of treason in West Virginia.

Sixty-three years ago "The System" was chattel slavery and the treason was committed by John Brown and a handful of social pioneers who raided the arsenal at Harpers Ferry to secure the weapons they thought necessary to carry on the struggle for its abolition.

This week "The System" is wage slavery and the treason has been committed by 700 coal miners who inspired and led an armed march of workers thru the unorganized coal fields of West Virginia in an effort to rid them of the Cossacks and hired assassins of the mine owners.

John Brown was convicted and hung up by the neck until dead by "The System" of the middle of the last century.

But a million men, the armies of The North, soon marched to battle in a great Civil War singing:

"John Brown's body lies a mouldering in the grave,
"But his soul goes marching on."

And the system of chattel slavery perished.

In the same little court house, at Charles Town, West Va., where John Brown was convicted for his faith in the cause of abolition, these 700 coal miners, the abolitionists of today, are now on trial.

Somewhere between 8,000 and 10,000 workers were actually engaged in the armed march. The most able have been picked for punishment by a judicial system that takes its dictates today, as in the past, from organized greed.

Wage slavery, capitalism, is on trial in that West Virginia court house, not the forward-looking forces of organized labor.

Chattel slavery went to its death with the martyrdom of John Brown. Whatever the results of the trial of the coal miners, the John Browns of today, the coal monarchs must see their doom in the rising power of the slaves of the mines.

The czars of the coal industry, with their political instruments, including the power that sits in Washington that sent fleets of airships and clouds of poison gas against the workers in revolt, are using the same weapons that the ruling class has always used.

They know no better, can do nothing else. The system of capitalism will pass just as all oppressive social systems before it.

On the ashes of capitalism, and out of the agony and martyrdom of those who today see the light and struggle for the new dawn, there will rise the new social order, Communism, that recognizes no classes, that will be without slaves.

Famine in New York City

There are 60,000 starving children in the public schools of New York City. In the public records they are merely classified as "handicapped."

This vertable army of hungering boys and girls includes crippled, tubercular, cardiac and otherwise unfortunate children whose condition is directly, or indirectly, due to semi-starvation.

John J. Lyons, secretary of state and chairman of the School Children's Welfare League, describes their condition as "bordering on famine." Lyons says:—

> "I am confident that not one citizen in 10,000 even dreams of the fact that right here in this rich and beautiful New York City there is an actual famine condition pulling down thousands of our little children—if famine, indeed, means lack of proper and sufficient nourishment.
> "Thousands of children, physically deficient, are compelled, because of the poverty of their parents or guardians, to go breakfastless to school every day. They sit at their desks, wan and faint, until noonday, and then, unless help comes from the outside, they again go without nourishment.
> "By night-time they are desperate for food, but they cannot be cretain even then of getting the right sort of things to eat. In many poor homes I have discovered the wife and mother and even the children deprive themselves of food to some extent at least, in order that the husband and father may be kept strong and well so he can maintain a roof over the heads of them all."

Lyons is an official of the capitalist system. Capitalism is not interested in bettering the conditions of the workers.

The exploiters are just now active in taking advantage of the fact that there are 10,000,000 jobless bread winners in the land.

They hope that the hungry boy or girl at school will force the father or mother, or big brother or sister in the factory to accept a job at reduced wages and a longer work-day.

The profiteers are therefore happy because 60,000 school children are starving in New York City. They are happy because similar conditions prevail in other cities. It helps them in their business.

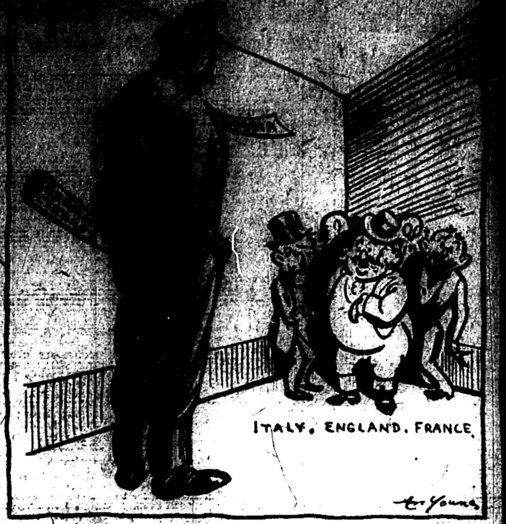
Only the workers can change this condition. They must abolish the social system that lives because they suffer.

Only the workers, thru their organized and enlightened power, can usher in the Comunist society that will provide first and only for those who labor.

The Communist Republic of Russia has not been able to realize Communism. It is struggling to do so.

Let Emma Goldman and the New York World, who are worrying so much because some children in Soviet Russia, in the shadow of the great Volga famine, are suffering, look to the children of New York City.

There is a difference between Soviet Russia and the United States. Communism in Russia is striving to realize the new day. Capitalism in the United States is struggling with all its power to oppose its coming. Where do you stand?



IN A CORNER

He Cancels His Subsciption

The editorship of this paper strives to score at least 100 per cent. in satisfying its readers. But we must admit we face a difficult task.

When we fail, far be it from us to bring our troubles to the attention of our remaining readers. But here is an exception.

The other day we came down to start the day's work with a letter awaiting us as follows:—

Belleville, Ill., May 4, 1922.

Editor, The Worker:—

> Dear Sir:—You may cancel my subscription as it is about to expire anyway. I can't agree with the writers of The Worker. You will notice by the enclosed slip that you are drifting to the pope. It is known all over Europe how easy the Popish system can fool the Americans.
> I am for the working people. Government ownership without the pope. The Popish system has always been always will be for master [illegible]
> It is too cunning for you labor writers.—Albert Salomon.

Enclosed with the above letter was a clipping from a recent issue of The Workers containing the following:—

> Those French diplomats and imperialists are a touchy lot. They resent even the Pope having a desire that some good may come out of the Genoa Conference, that it may lead to universal peace, to disarmament, claiming that the "best guarantee of tranquility is not a forest of bayonets." The French must have their forests of bayonets, their armies, their navy. But it wouldn't hurt to let the Pope talk about disarmement. Since when did capitalism and imperialism go to church for their ethics and morals?

It is difficult to take our correspondent seriously. We urge our comrades at Belleville, Illinois, especially the coal miners who have a little spare time on their hands, to drop around and have a talk with him.

The above paragraph merely points out how powerless is the pope, the church, religion, when transgressing the desires of capitalist nations.

The pope was practically silenced during the war. He is being silenced whenever necessary now that the war is over.

The opium that religion feeds the workers must be 100 per cent. strong or capitalism will have none of it.

Under Communism there will be real religious freedom for the first time in all history. But under Communism, religion will be compelled to face the white glare of the highest truths that can be attained by intellectually as well as economically freed peoples.

We hope our subscriber changes his mind and continues as a reader of THE WORKER. Then perhaps he will soon be writing us as "DEAR COMRADE" and not as "Dear Sir." He has some good stuff in him and should join the only world movement worth while.

At Communnism's Foot Stool

The capitalist world, thru its serville press, was startled the other day by learning that Tchitcherin and other Soviet delegates at Genoa had attended a luncheon tendered by the king of Italy to the Economic Conference.

Clever propagandists under the thumbs of the allied diplomats tried to make it appear that the spokesmen of the Workers' Republic were again betraying their faith.

They pointed to the fact that Communists in Italy, and in other countries, will not lunch with a king. Then why the Russian Communists?

There is this difference. At Rome the Italian king rules as a monarch over a subject people. The Communists of Italy are still a minority. They are fighting the system, of which the king is but a puppet. They try to typify the class struggle in their attitude toward the king, who retains power thru the passive consent of the majority. It is part of their effort to develop their minority into a majority.

At Genoa Italy's king plays a different role. Instead of sitting on a throne erected for him by capitalism, he is kneeling on Communism's foot stool. Above him, more powerful than world capitalism itself, in the persons of its delegates, sits the Russian Communist Republic.

The Workers' Republic lives in Russia. After four years of super-human effort, it stands victorious against the capitalist world. Its delegates are at Genoa as the representatives of a victor, not a vanquished nation.

It is under these circumstances that the Russian Communists can receive the attention of Italy's king, to use him, and the representatives of other capitalist nations for what they are worth to further establish the power of labor in Soviet Russia, in order that in time it may be better able to come to the rescue of enslaved labor in the remaining capitalist nations upon this globe.

Zinoviev Sees United Front Aiding Rising Tide of Revolution

EDITOR'S NOTE: In another column we publish the decisions of the "United Front" Conference of the three Internationals held recently at Berlin. This "United Front" policy is discussed in brief by Gregory Zinoviev, chairman of the Third (Communist) International as follows:

By GREGORY ZINOVIEV

Inevitably the Russian Revolution has had an immense effect on the world revolutionary movement. And just as the defeat of the proletaria in capitalist countries has influence the policy of Russia, so the nece sary concessions to the peasants traders in this country has reduce the pace of the revolutionary move ment thruout the world.

But it was a perversion of th facts to say that the cause of th new tactics lay in the egoistic inter ests of the Soviet Government.

Gompers Backs "Socialists" in War on Revolutionists in Labor Unions

Worst Reaction and Yellows Unite at Cleveland Convention of Ladies' Garment Workers

Events transpiring at the convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union at Cleveland indicate that the Socialist Party and the Gompers' controlling machine in the American Federation of Labor have virtually entered into an alliance against the radicals in the A. F. of L.

Gompers hurried to Cleveland from Washington, the A. F. of L. headquarters, to become the central figure in a dramatic stage play demanding that the "Socialist," Schlesinger, president of the Jewish "Socialist" Daily, Forward, should continue in the fight for the presidency of the Ladies' Garment Workers, opposing the growing strength of the radicals in the organization.

This stage play was quickly followed by a concerted drive on the part of the Gompers-Hillquit-Schlesinger-Daily Forward Alliance to throw out elected delegates who had criticized the officialdom of the union.

Thus the Schlesinger regime in the International today, repeats the attack of Gompers-Rickert reactionists in the United Garment Workers, at Nashville, Tenn., in 1914.

Samuel Gompers, Warren S. Stone, head of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the [illegible] Party, the Call, the Forward, and an array of smaller talent constitute the artillery brought to bear upon the militants in the convention.

Fundamentally it is a Gompers-Schlesinger-Socialist Party combine against radicalism. Gompers warring against the Trade Union Educational League, of which William Z, Foster is secretary, and the Socialist Party, supported by the Call and the Forward, desperately battling the Communist movement in its heroic efforts to develop a revolutionary class-conscious spirit in the ranks of the American working class.

Under the hypocritical cry of "unity" these reactionary forces gathered about the Schlesinger regime in the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union staged the unseating of Samuel Rothman of Local No. 1, New York, by a vote of 126 to 67, with 40 delegates abstaining at the second day's session of the convention.

He Dared to Criticise

"Lese majeste" was Rothman's crime. He had dared to criticize, had had the effrontery to disagree with the ruling element in the union.

Thus is repeated the attack of the Socialist Party officialdom upon the party's "left wing" in 1919, which resulted in its rapid decay until the convention just held at Cleveland represented a mere handful of reactionaries.

Thus is the battle line, from Gompers to Hillquit, being arrayed against the revolutionary movement in the unions, the threat to both their political and economic misleadership.

Enemies in the past, Gompers and Hillquit and Berger, now unite, in their farcical "unity," the slogan of which might well be, "Down with the radicals! Down with the Communists!"

As we go to press there are other radical delegates awaiting judgment before the inquisition of the Schlesinger-Hillquit credentials committee at Cleveland.

Many of these delegates were elected from New York City, where they received the support of the Communist Jewish daily, the Freiheit, as opposed to the yellow "Socialist" Jewish daily, the Forward.

Radek Views Berlin Effort Toward Unity

By KARL RADEK

Representative of the Third (Communist) International at the Berlin Conference

The conference of the three Executives which was brought about to discuss the question of calling a general International Workers' Conference against the robber plans of Genoa, has disbanded without being able to decide upon the convocation of the World Congress.

At a time when the representatives of the capitalistic robber states are meeting in Genoa to confer about a new means of plundering the world, the international proletariat has not summoned up sufficient energy and resoluteness to demonstrate jointly against international capitalism.

Regrets the Results

That is the first result that must be established, established with deep mourning. And since this result is brought up, we must simultaneously establish why it is that the conference is impossible at this particular time.

The accepted joint resolution of the three Executives establishes the reason for the failure of the proposal for a World Congress when it says:

"That the representatives of the Second International have reported that they consider it impossible to prepare for a general conference during the month of April and during the time of the Genoa Conference."

Thus this statement explains in bare words that the Communist International and the Vienna Working Union saw no obstacles in the way of the immediate convocation of the World Congress, but that the opposition of the Second International frustrated the plan.

Second Fails Again

The reason for this attitude of the Second International is easily understood if it is known that this organization, representing one section of the proletariat, refused absolutely to take up the slogans of the demonstration which was to take place instead of the World Congress and to raise the cry "Down with the Versailles Peace!"

How can this be explained? The three strongest parties of the Second

Two Views in Clash at Big Convention

(BY OUR STAFF WRITER)

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—The conflicting viewpoints of Communists and Socialists came to open clash upon the floor of the convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union here, Wednesday, after three days of speech making on every variety of subject.

The Convention has been much agitated about the left bloc consisting of delegates who accept the Workers Party program.

In an effort to cut down the influence of this bloc the seating of a half dozen delegates known as supporters of the left position has been challenged. In the first two contests the administration won unseating Samuel Rothman and Samuel Shelly, the latter by a vote of 107 to 77.

During the discussion of these cases many charges of being disruptionists were hurled at the left bloc. These charges were boldly met by Charles E. Ruthenberg, Executive Secretary, Workers Party, when he addressed the convention.

After reviewing the capitalist offensive against organized labor, Ruthenberg said:

"I speak to you as a Communist, as one who accepts the leadership of the Communist International.

"There has been much discussion of the purposes of the left Communist bloc in this convention.

"They have but one purpose in

Reaction Makes Strange Bed Fellows

The New York Times, official expression of the money power, joins Gompers in his attack on William Z. Foster, and urges a split in the American Federation of Labor. This endorsement, which will no doubt be followed by support from other capitalist organs, tears the mask from the "unity" pleas made by Gompers, supported by Stone, Schlesinger and Socialist Party satellites at the Cleveland Convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. Under the title of "Gompers and Foster," The Times, May 2, has the following:

GOMPERS AND FOSTER

In coming out against W. Z. Foster and his radical propaganda Mr. Gompers has taken a stand that is not unlikely to end in a cleavage within the American Federation of Labor. The charge is specific.

W. Z. Foster, who had no money, went to Moscow and came back and announced that he was building a great secret machine to undermine the American labor movement and turn it over to the Red International, owned by Lenin. He began publication of an expensive magazine and proclaimed "a thousand secret agents in a thousand communities."

Behind this charge lies a decade of "boring from within" the Federation. Three years ago the borers gained authority to organize the steel industry. The movement is said to have caught Mr. Gompers unawares. When the strike was called he was in Europe. On his return he supported it with his customary vehemence, tho the organizers and strike leaders, Foster and John Fitzpatrick, were declared Bolsheviki. When the strike was lost, the Interchurch World Movement investigated the steel industry. Its report glozed over the character of the strike leaders and ignored the purpose behind the strike. It was largely influenced by a radical "bureau of research," which took part in the investigation and in writing the report; but it was authorized by a committee of nine clergymen, including three Bishops, and has proved a tower of strength for radical propaganda.

An equally significant crisis occurred two years ago at the Federation meeting in Montreal. Advocates of the Plumb Plan proposed public ownership and democratic control of the railways. Mr. Gompers and his lieutenants fought them to the last ditch, but they won by an overwhelming majority. When the resolution was introduced again last year at Denver he offered no opposition. At the outset of the present coal strike the miners and the railway brotherhoods formed an alliance which, though guarded in its terms, was clearly inspired by the radical Triple Alliance in England.

Foster's visit to Lenin and his gilded return show that, at least in Russia, there are substantial hopes of arraying unskilled, proletarian labor against the existing order. In choosing a confessed apostleship of Bolshevism as the point of attack, Mr. Gompers evinces his instinct for the jugular vein. The American Federation originated as a protest against the dominance of the unskilled in the Knights of Labor, and it may well be that a split will restore it to the guidance of thoroly American craftsmen.

Communists in Britain for United Front

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Closest to the young Communist movement of the United States, stands the Communist movement in Great Britain, facing similar problems and similar tasks. The actions of the recent Communist Party Congress in Britain will therefore be of especial interest to the vanguard of labor in this country. Charles Ashleigh, recently deported to England after serving a sentence at the Leavenworth Prison, writes of this congress as follows:

By CHARLES ASHLEIGH

The Communist Party of Great Britain met on March 18 and 19 in a Policy Conference, in order to ratify the Theses on the international situation and the united front, and to decide the Party's new electoral and industrial policies.

One hundred and fifty-nine delegates, representing 147 branches of the Party, were present, together with the Party officials, the Executive Committee and the editors of Party organs.

Meet in Town Hall

It will probably surprise Americans when they learn that this conference was held in a town hall. But so it was. The Borough of St. Pancras, a borough of London, is controlled by the Labor Party, and the Labor Party of St. Pancras receives

Death Chills Seize Meeting of Socialists

By C. E. RUTHENBERG,

Executive Secretary, Workers Party

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—After four days of gloomy sessions the Socialist Party convention came to a close. The end came in an atmosphere in which there was that coldness which presages the coming of death.

A delegate, in a final effort to create some appearance of life, moved that Morris Hillquit make a closing speech on the most significant achievement of the convention.

Hillquit complied, but it was a doleful effort. The weight of the four days of gloom was too great even for him, and tho he uttered words of hope the tone of the utterance was hopeless.

Contact by Greetings

The most significant achievement [illegible] conveyed messages of greetings and received such messages from conventions of labor unions.

He urged that the National Convention of the party let no convention of a labor union pass without sending the greetings of the Socialist Party.

Thus, he said, contact and co-operation would be established with the organized labor movement.

Position of Workers Party

This gem as to the most significant achievement of the convention is typical of the policies of the Socialist Party.

The Socialists will sent greetings and hope to receive them; the Communists, as shown by the program of the Workers Party, put themselves in the forefront of the struggles in which the organized workers engage.

They propose to win the support of the organized and unorganized masses by the services they render in the immediate struggles of the workers.

The Socialists consider the exchange of greetings a significant achievement, the Communists to lead and win a strike, to unite weak craft unions in greater industrial unions, to take the lead and thru actual work in the unions to mobilize and unify the workers' organizations.

Senile Decay of Party

Among the resolutions adopted by the Socialist Party National Convention is one providing for the celebration of the "coming of age" of the organization on its twenty-first anniversary in July of this year.

Observance of the work of the convention gives one the impression of premature old age and that the "coming of age" anniversary comes co-incident with the senile decay of the party.

This convention certainly marks the lowest ebb of Socialism in this country as represented by the Socialist Party.

Seated in the front of a large hall before a speakers' stand draped with the American flag were less than 25 delegates.

All Enthusiasm Gone

A glance at these delegates tells the story of the Socialist Party. A majority of them are portly, gray-haired men with a look of petty-bourgeois prosperity about them. They talk in the language of past Socialist conventions, but there is no

[illegible] opened the attack on the [illegible] in the convention with the well-known spy bugaboo. He declared:

"The labor movement is full of spies. If a man talks about boring from within, you want to be afraid of him. Nine times out of ten they are paid spies. And you'd be surprised how cheap they buy them."

This must have made some of the yellow "Socialists" squirm, since the policy of the Socialist Party toward the labor movement has always been one of "bore from within." Didn't "Vic" Berger always attend A. F. of L. conventions for that purpose?

Then Gompers and Schlesinger sang the same song of "unity," unity against the revolutionists in the labor unions. Gompers put it this way:

"There is necessity for unity and harmony in your industry. No man can justify himself to his conscience if he injects the slightest thing that may divide your judgment and your action."

A Mirror for Ervin

And the next day Rothman was unseated and other radical delegates were destined to walk the plank.

Schlesinger presented a goodly number of the delegates from the Socialist Party convention to the convention.

Morris Hillquit, who is now leading but a handful of the former membership of the Socialist Party into the 2½ International, said

"On the point of unity all differences should be submerged, and we should be as one."

And according to his own paper, Charles W. Ervin, editor of the New York Socialist daily, The Call, denounced those who were planning to divide the workers. Ervin should have been gazing into a mirror as he made that speech.

B. Charney Vladeck, business manager of the Forward, and former "Socialist" alderman in New York City, smiled at his own wit when he said:

"It is more important for the cause of the revolution to have 130,000 working people organized than it is to have 130,000 dentists and real estate men in a Communist Party."

Evidently Vladeck was trying to direct attention away from the fact that the membership of the Socialist Party that remains is made up of the little business men and would-be professionals.

Steel Union Marks Time at Convention Meeting at Detroit

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

DETROIT, MICH.—Facing the fight of its life, the convention of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers opened here Tuesday in the local Labor Temple.

Frank Martel, president Detroit Federation of Labor, welcomed the delegates on behalf of organized labor.

Z. V. [illegible], representing the National Catholic Welfare Council, was introduced as first speaker. Judge Jeffries, Detroit, made a splendid talk, [illegible] stating that the workers must organize for power. He was given an ovation at the conclusion of his address.

William [illegible] received a great reception as spokesman for the Trade Union Russian Famine Relief Committee.

The question of a contribution and endorsement of the Trade Union Famine Relief Committee will come before the convention later.

The convention which is made up of 110 delegates, meets at a time when the association is fighting for its life. Seventeen locals of the union are on strike or locked out in the steel towns.

President Tighe stated that the financing of strikes was a terrible burden upon the organization. He said the steel companies were willing to recognize a union of skilled workers. The present trouble arises over the inclusion of unskilled workers in the ranks of the association.

He also stated that in spite of the oppression and murderous methods of the steel trust, no new policies would be launched by the convention. Purely routine business is considered. Noticeable among the delegates is the large percentage of old men. Forty per cent of the membership is out of employment. Convention expects to be in session 12 days.

Altho this organization officially did much to cause the failure of the steel strike, William Z. Foster's "Labor Herald" sells well among the delegates.

BERLIN.—Hugo Stinnes, dictator of Germany, has obtained control of the wood pulp, paper making establishments, printers' ink and other essentials of newspaper making to such an extent that rival capitalist papers fear extinction.

[illegible] vs. Gompers

A Challenge Accepted

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, inaugurated his war on the radicals in the A. F. of L. at a meeting of Chicago labor officials, April 11. At that time Gompers challenged Foster to a presentation of their respective views to a committee of trade unionists. Foster accepted the challenge in an open letter, dated April 20th, but it seems that Gompers prefers to carry on his anti-radical fight in the newspapers. Foster's open letter to Gompers is as follows:—

An Open Letter to Gompers

Chicago, April 20th, 1922.

Mr. Samuel Gompers, President,
American Federation of Labor,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir and Brother:—

At a meeting on April 11th, in the Hotel Morrison, Chicago, which was attended by several hundred local union presidents and other trade union officials, you issued me a challenge which I must accept. During the meeting an A. F. of L. organizer made a virulent attack upon the proposition of amalgamation of the unions by industry, as outlined in the resolution recently adopted by the Chicago Federation of Labor. In reply, I offered to debate the question with him on any trade union platform in this city. He made no response. But later on, when you took the floor, you expressed some surprise that I had not done you "the honor" of challenging you, and you also added that you would be willing to have a committee appointed, consisting of three reputable trade unionists, to which both you and I might submit our respective views regarding the general question of industrial unionism versus craft unionism.

Considering your high office in the movement, I would not have been presumptuous enough to have so challenged you to such a debate, but seeing that it is your own proposition, I herewith accept your offer, and am holding myself in readiness to present my arguments to the proposed committee as soon as it is selected. The personnel of the committee, and the manner of its selection, I am willing to leave entirely in your hands.

My contention is that craft unionism is obsolete. The old type of organization, based upon trade lines, can no longer cope successfully with Organized Capital. To fit modern conditions our unions must be based upon the lines of industry rather than upon those of craft. The necessary industrial unionism will be arrived at, not thru the founding of ideal dual unions, but by amalgamating the old organizations. Already the trade unions, by federations and other get-together devices, have made much progress in the direction of industrial unionism. I hold that this tendency should be consciously encouraged; we should not simply blunder along blindly. The thing that must be done is to boldly proclaim our inevitable goal of one union for each industry, and to adopt every practical means that will tend to get us there at the earliest date.

Awaiting your pleasure, I am

Fraternally yours,
WILLIAM Z. FOSTER

Gompers Opens Newspaper Attack

Samuel Gompers began his newspaper attack last Monday in a statement that is lauded in the New York Times editorial reproduced on Page One. The reply by Foster was as follows:

By WILLIAM Z. FOSTER

"Either he (Gompers) must prove his statements and innuendoes or stand convicted of flagrantly unfair propaganda.

"As far as the books of our organization are concerned, I stand ready to submit them to any reputable auditing company.

"The Trade Union Educational League operates in broad daylight. Its plan of organization was announced publicly several months ago. It is purely an educational organization, designed to strengthen the trade unions and to give them a more militant philosophy. I have been working constantly along these lines for ten years.

"The explanation of Mr. Gompers's broadside is that he suffers from an anti-Russian complex. Where Russia is concerned he is more heartless and reactionary than the employing class themselves.

"Another factor making for Mr. Gompers's blast is that he fears the new spirit of progress now taking shape among the rank and file of trade unions. Under his leadership the trade union movement has come to a standstill politically, industrially and philosophically. The Trade Union Educational League is working to break this deadlock and to give the movement the impetus to progress which it now stands so sadly in need of. Hence Mr. Gompers's violent opposition. He hopes to break its influence by waving the bloody shirt."

Ruthenberg Speaks for Communists at Cleveland I. L. G. W. U. Convention

harmony with the principles of the Communist International to build up a more unified, more militant organization.

They propose to do that by taking their places in your union and fighting the present battles of your organization. They do not come to you with mere words of greeting (greetings of the Socialist Party had just been expressed) but with deeds. They will stand in the forefront of your battle, one of the places of danger.

"Their task is not to destroy, but to build up, to unite your present organization, to help upbuild an industrial union of all the needle trades, to unite all the unions of the United States against the capitalist aggressive and to create an International United Front.

"That is the policy of the Workers Party and those delegates who are acting under its program."

Ruthenberg's appearance had been greeted with a great ovation and his speech met with the same response.

Abraham Cahan, editor of the Forward, who had evidently been held in reserve for the task, followed Ruthenberg and launched into an attack on the Third International and the "left" delegates.

He took up the twenty-one points of the third international and angrily denounced the Communists for dividing the revolutionists from the Socialist organizations the world over.

He said that while the Communist International now advocated the united front it was only because the needs of Russia and the failure of the world revolution made that necessary.

While paying his respect to the sincerity of Ruthenberg and some Communists he denounced the Leftists in the union as a disgruntled element using the cloak of Communism for other purposes.

He closed with a moving appeal, evidently pre-arranged, for the reelection of President Schlesinger as president of the union, urging the left element to please be good and join in one happy family with the [illegible] fought in order to retain the services of Schlesinger.

Caroline Lowe addressed the convention in the interest of the members of the I. W. W. in federal prisons and met with a hearty response. A representative of the striking textile workers of New England was also given a hearing and received an enthusiastic reception.

THE CASE OF SHELLY

Samuel Shelly, the second unseated delegate of Local No. 1, New York, the largest local in the International with about 13,000 members, was charged by the credentials committee with helping an employer to get rid of an undesirable worker from his shop.

Shelly denied having any knowledge of the affair. He denied he was ever in the shop in question.

Delegate [illegible] of the New York Dress and Waistmakers Joint Board, Delegate [illegible], manager of the Los Angeles Joint Board, Delegate Wechsler of the New York Raincoat Makers Union and Delegate Shane, manager of Local No. 1, New York, opposed the recommendation of the credentials committee to unseat Shelly. They all spoke highly of his services in the union for many years as a loyal member of the International.

The credentials committee was charged with trying to oust Shelly from the convention because he belongs to the "left" elements. On first ballot the vote stood 97 against unseating and 95 for.

The "rights" demanded a second vote and Shelly was unseated by a vote of 107 to 77.

NO COLLECTION

Anna Leisman, charged with distributing Communist leaflets [illegible] May Day one year ago, was declared guilty by a jury on Wednesday. Judge Gibbs will pass sentence Monday.

It was announced, as we went to press, that [illegible] had refused to leave prison, claiming that the $15,000 bail imposed amounted to discrimination against him.

On the day that I. E. Ferguson and C. E. Ruthenberg were released from prison, April 24th, on a certificate of reasonable doubt under $5,000 bail—they had been convicted of violation of the infamous Criminal Anarchy Act of New York in October, 1920—Minnie Kalnin and Tina Jurson were found guilty of violation of the same Act.

Anna Leisman on Trial

On Monday, May 1st, Anna Leisman went to trial in the same court in which Mrs. Kalnin and Mrs. Jurson had been found guilty just one week before.

These three women were charged with distributing leaflets which the Grand Jury of Bronx County declared to be violations of the Criminal Anarchy Act. The distribution took place April 30th, 1921.

In spite of Judge Cardozo's statement when he issued the certificate of reasonable doubt in the Ferguson Ruthenberg case that, "he found reasonable doubt whether the statute has been properly construed," the Criminal Anarchy Act is running full steam ahead in the so-called "red" cases. Regarding these three women there is every indication of a police frameup.

Facts Showing Frame-up

Here are the facts. The National Defense Committee had arranged a May Day demonstration at the Lexington Opera House for May 1st 1921. Leaflets announcing the meeting were issued, and the three women were among those who took part in the distribution.

They were arrested April 30th, 1921 while in the act of distributing the announcements. They were brought to jail and searched. Their keys were taken from them and two members of the bomb squad went to their apartments and without warrant searched their places. The police claim to have found a quantity of leaflets of two kinds: "May Day Red Labor Day" issued by the American Freedom Foundation, and "May Day of the Revolution," this latter signed by the Executive Committee of the United Communist Party.

Face 100 Per Cent Americanism

The women swore they had no leaflets other than the announcements of the Lexington Opera House meeting. But they are Russian women and their English is rather faulty. And they were tried by a jury of 100 per cent Americans. A verdict of guilty was almost inevitable. Mrs. Jurson and Mrs. Kalnin will be sentenced Monday, May 8th.

Mrs. Leisman went to trial May 1st. Conditions surrounding her arrest were practically identical with the arrests of the other two women. There is this difference, however. Mrs. Leisman's apartment was not searched. But she too is a Russian. And she, too, is being tried by a jury of 100 per cent Americans. No doubt she too will be found guilty and sentenced to a term of years in the prisons of New York.

Cash Loans Aid Party's Literature Department

As the Workers Party grows and its activities increase every line of Party work shows the effect.

This development is reflected in the growth of the business of the Literature Department which functions as the Party's distributors of its English printed propaganda.

The four months of the Party's existence has seen this department develop into one of the most substantial assets of the organization.

From nothing the Department has grown until the sum total of its monthly sales exceeds the fondest hopes of the most sanguine.

Party locals and District offices are backing the Department with full support as is proven by the increasing daily orders received.

One of the finest examples of loyal support rendered this Department has been the response of the membership to the Literature Loan Campaign.

This campaign was started for the purpose of raising funds with which to set up the Department and stock it with the literature needed.

More than a thousand dollars has been received in loans in this campaign. Most of this sum will be repaid in literature, thus making a profit to the literature department and at the same time furnishing the needed cash with which to do business.

The Department has also instituted a form of loan to be repaid in cash. May Day brought the first response on this. $75 being received from a South Slavic Branch in Kansas City and from Comrade Yusic of Bessemer, Pa. Below are listed a number of loans received recently. Henry S. Peduson, $5; Arve S. Wellins, $3; J. Polin and Natt Peterson, $10; Arne Halonen, $5; Henry Joshi, $5; Aune Jarvela, $3; Geo. Laitimer, $5; Otto Ronkanen, $5; Finnish Branch, Springfield, Mass., $5; K. Gagialis, $5; F. Buck, $5; Lewis Fisher, $5; Theodore Tofas, $5; H. Baridjanian, $3; Samuel Harkison, $3; V. Prusia, $3; H. Veshya, $5; Alex Madyarich, $5; John Francic, $3; Total $88.00. Previously acknowledged, $403.00. Total published receipts, $491.00.

GHOST OF THE DEAD "HUN":—"Well, Buddy, they fixed us right, didn't they? You're out of a job, and I don't need one."

Genoa and the Famine

There is something insidious in the persistent stream of lies announcing the end of the famine.

The fact that the entire capitalist press is giving the widest publicity to the false statements sent out by Hoover's American Relief Administration that the famine is under control, should put thinking people on their guard.

On the face of it this report is unbelievable, and authoritative comments on the progress of the famine show that unless all efforts are strained until the next harvest, the extension of the famine over a still wider area embracing many millions more, is to be expected.

What, then, is the meaning of this new campaign of lying which is having its pernicious effects in the slowing-up of relief work.

One must look at the gathering at Genoa, where the diplomats of the capitalist world are attempting to wrest more concessions from the Soviet Government, in order to grasp the full meaning of Hoover's insidious propaganda.

It can only be regarded as a threat to compel the Soviet Government to bow to the dictates of world capitalism if it desires to have the relief continued.

America is not an active participant at Genoa, but she is bringing pressure to bear all the same indirectly by threatening to leave millions to their terrible fate unless Russia humbles herself in the dust.

Meanwhile millions are left to die while Hoover again plays politics. It is needless to go at length into statistics to prove that the Hoover plant is working overtime on lies.

One short statement from the foremost authority on the famine, Dr. Nansen, is enough to rout this dastardly propaganda: "It is inevitable that 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 people must starve to death. The famine has developed into dimensions which surpass anything the Soviet Government and we others had thought possible."

Relief must continue till the next harvest; a let-up would be disastrous. The Friends of Soviet Russia in New York have organized a city-wide drive for May 6th to 7th, and it asks all friends of the famine victims to volunteer at one of the following stations: 1347 Boston Road, 1403 Fifth Ave., 350 E. 81st St., 201 West 13th St., 240 E. 23rd St., 62 Canal St., 226 Roebling St., 10 Siegel St., 248 Sackman St., and 208 E. 12th St.

The Drive for Tools

BERLIN, April 1, 1922.

TO ALL NATIONAL COMMITTEES AND FAMINE RELIEF ORGANIZATIONS, AFFILIATED TO THE INTERNATIONAL WORKER'S RELIEF COMMITTEE FOR THE STARVING RUSSIANS, AND TO ALL COMMUNIST PARTIES.

Dear Comrades:—We received a radio from Moscow on March 11, to arrange a week for the collection of tools. The International Committee has decided to begin this propaganda-week on May first, in view of the significance of this day. Propaganda is to begin immediately.

It is to be intensified during the Genoa Conference, and during the preparatory work for May first and is to come to its climax at the meetings and demonstrations on that day.

The speakers shall point out the political importance of the international relief work, emphasizing the importance of the existence of the Soviet Republic for the working class.

They shall report on its achievements and make a mighty and sincere appeal to all workers to donate tools freely during the week of May first to seventh, showing by this their active international solidarity and demonstrating productive help as a new means of supporting Russia.

To be successful, local and district committees are immediately to be formed. The offices where the collected tools are to be delivered must be announced.

This new action must be given great publicity. The entire labor press is to be employed in this campaign of agitation and collection. But in this matter we must also utilize the bourgeois papers, the local press and the country press.

The national committees must notify the sections and groups by circulars and give them the necessary instructions. All local branches shall utilize their organizational apparatus for this week of collection.

Where it is possible, contact with the trade unions and the other labor parties must be sought with a view to common action. If, however, the central committees of these organizations refuse collaboration, the attempt must be made with their local branches to obtain joint collection offices.

The following telegram has been sent to several organizations:—"International Committee resolved international week collecting tools, May 1st to 7th."

Use this telegram directly for your propaganda. A general appeal will follow in a few days.

Fraternal greetings,
WORKERS' INTERNATIONAL

[illegible] March on the Open Shop

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

CHICAGO.—One hundred and [illegible] thousand union men paraded thru the loop, Chicago's busiest section, protesting in particular against the so-called citizens' committee, organized to "enforce" the Landis' Award, and in general against the open shop plan and the concerted effort on the part of the employers to enslave labor.

The demonstration was promoted by the Joint Publicity Committee of the Building Trades Council, and tho initiated by them, practically every union affiliated with the Chicago Federation of Labor was represented, and some of them solidly. Fifty-two unions officially participated in the slap at the citizens' committee and the Landis' Award.

Traffic was completely tied up in the loop for about an hour while the union men enthusiastically marched in attest to their solidarity. The parade was headed by about two thousand union ex-soldiers.

While proceeding to the Municipal Pier, the culminating point of the procession, the paraders passed a building at Michigan and Ohio streets built under the conditions of the citizens committee by scab labor. The structure, a four story building, was surrounded by about fifty uniformed policemen. Lusty jeers and cries of "scab" rang out from the marchers who shook their fists menacingly.

"We are fighting against the open shop; We will never submit to the so-called citizens' committee. The intention of the citizens' committee is to enslave the working class; Without organization we are slaves; Workmen unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains," were but few of the inscriptions on the thousands of banners carried. Some flouted the capitalist press for its complete harmony with the handful of plutocrats who were endeavoring to dictate terms to labor or introduce the open shop.

Cheering greeting the laborites all along the route. The marchers poured onto the Municipal Pier, a structure reaching out into Lake Michigan for a mile, and overflowed the Auditorium where the speeches were delivered. Thousands were turned away, as the hall seats but ten thousand, and the place was crowded to the rafters.

BERNE.—The International Federation of Metal Workers is engaged in a bitter struggle against an attempt by Danish, Hungarian, German, Italian and other employers to lengthen working hours from 46, now prevailing, to 48 and to cut wages.

[illegible] in the Needle In[illegible]

EDITOR'S NOTE.—[illegible] these articles by J. B. Salutsky, as follows:

By J. B. SALUTSKY

The two largest units of the needle industry, the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, are in the midst of their regular biennial conventions.

The I. L. G. W. U. met in Cleveland May 1st, and the A. C. W. of A. will gather in Chicago, May 8th.

Another of the five trade-unions composing the needle industry, the relatively small Fur Workers' International, is to meet in convention shortly after the big conventions.

Struggles Rich in Experience

Both, the I. L. G. W. U. and the A. C. W. of A., come to their conventions enriched with experience. Both will have to check up on a great number of things.

In the last two years nearly every unit of the needle industry went thru an intense struggle, in some cases, virtually a struggle for life.

Thus, the Fur Workers' International fought a battle royal in the summer and fall of 1920, a struggle which lasted thirty weeks and tested every ounce of vitality of the union.

It survived, has recuperated and is now on its feet, once more, vigorous and assertive.

And the I. L. G. W. U. met face to face its employers, and for over two months the contest was on, bitter, ferocious.

The International scored a victory, tho the contest is not finally settled and a new clash is not improbable by the time the convention will have started in.

The Amalgamated, again, went thru its military baptism in the supreme struggle of 1920-21. For fully six months the lockout of 60,000 New York workers kept in the balance the fate of the union.

The onslaught made by the "open shoppers" on the Amalgamated was as thoro and concentrated in method of fighting as it was unscrupulous and reckless in choice of means.

The Union smashed the open-shoppers and now after not fully one year of peaceful, contractual relations, with "impartial" methods of healing wounds, the New York manufacturers' Association itself closed its doors.

And as sequel to it came the other day the renewal of the agreement on satisfactory terms between the Amalgamated and the employers of Chicago and Rochester.

The conventions will check up on the experiences made thru the recent struggles. The past will either weigh heavily on the future, if former mistakes will be incorporated in new laws, or the future will profit by past performances if proper lessons will be drawn, and new legislation will legislate out what is obsolete or decidedly wrong.

For let there be no mistaken expectation: the future of the needle industry is not paved with roses: the situation is pregnant with struggle and fight is not an impossibility.

The whole fabric of organized labor in the United States will have to put up a scrap or it will be put out of its own. So let no complacency take the place of vigilance.

"Lefts" and "Rights"

The elections of the delegates to the conventions of both the I. L. G. W. U. and the A. C. W. of A. were marked with serious internal discord. Particularly so in the case of the New York locals of the I. L. G. W. U.

In the largest local unions of the I. L. G. W. U. the administration candidates were badly beaten. The president of the International did not "run" from his own local and his slate was snowed under by opposition ballots.

The General Secretary Treasurer of the International was outvoted heavily as delegate to the convention.

The opposition carried Locals 1, 9, 3, 22 and many others "in toto" or partly.

In the case of the Amalgamated the contest did not include the national administration. The division was designated as between right and left, and the group calling itself left has scored many victories.

One would naturally turn to the programs advanced in the electioneering to find the key to the coming conventions, to determine the possible psychology of the debate on the points at issue. But it would all be in vain.

The "lefts" in the A. C. W. of A. presented no program whatsoever. They went on their record of support given the National Administration in its recent fight on the corrupt ringleadership of the Children's Clothing trade, a spiritual off shoot of the defunct United Garment Workers.

The Jewish "Socialist" Daily Forward, for reasons of political expediency, saw fit to take the side of the ringleaders, and the lefts had stood unqualifiedly by the General Officers of the Amalgamated in the fight for decency and clean methods in unionism.

However all this, important and valuable as it may be, is not a program.

The nearest to a statement of principles could perhaps be found in the declaration made by the candidates of the opposition in the I. L. G. W. U. Candidates of locals 1—9—22 declared for—

1. Proportional representation at conventions.
2. Officers shall hold no office longer than two years.
3. General Executive Board Members shall not appoint themselves to paid offices.

Real Issues in the Convention

Not going into the merits of the points advanced one is forced to discard them as a program. At least, not a program for the coming conventions where by far larger stakes are in sight. One who knows the industry and its problems would ask in surprise: Why are not such issues in the front of the discussion as, for instance, the following:

1. The problem of organization such as shop-representation instead of or in addition temporarily to the system of organization by locals which has to say the least become obsolete and inefficient.
2. The question of the use of injunctions in disputes with capital, as a means of defense and attack, and the propriety of labor standing up for the principle of inviolability of agreements.
3. The readjustment of relationship between leadership and rank and file.
4. The amalgamation of all needle unions into one consolidated union.

Incidentally a point of importance which should interest the conventions is the case of the staggering costs of strikes in recent years.

The strike of the Fur Workers in New York in the summer and fall of 1920, which lasted six months and engaged from six to nine thousand people involved the expenditure of over one million dollars.

The lockout in the men's clothing industry fought by the Amalgamated during the winter and spring of 1921 consumed fully two million dollars.

And the strike of the I. L. G. W. U. to force the manufacturers in the cloak industry to stand by its agreement with the union lasted nine weeks and cost the organization fully one million dollars.

Not because any one entertains any doubts as to the propriety of these huge war costs is the issue noted. Seemingly the costs are inevitable.

But means are to be found to finance such wars, and improved methods by which these budgets can be taken care of, particularly, in such a way that no one shall doubt the possibility to raise such funds again, as the necessity may and will arise.

However, whether these issues were raised in the pre-convention campaigns or not, they will force their way to the attention of the delegates. The conventions will have to meet the issues, to face them.

By [illegible]

Edwin [illegible] Treasurer of the [illegible] of Lawrence, Mass., [illegible] before the Rotary Club of Lawrence in which he said that a wage cut was necessary to save the textile industry for New England.

He said that the competition of the Southern mills threatened to destroy the industry in the North, and his appeal was intended to prove that the workers of the northern mills must be made to bear the burden of the competitive struggle by accepting another wage cut.

He made no attempt to prove that the profits of the stockholders had vanished or even fallen off.

Last Thursday, April 29th, President McMahon spoke at a mass meeting of the strikers on the Common advertised by the United Textile Workers.

This is the first time that the U. T. W. appeared upon the Common since they refused to continue cooperation during the first week of the strike.

The O. B. U. has been holding forth there almost daily, and they have profited by the advantage; since it is the place where the strikers are accustomed to gather.

President McMahon announced in advance that he would answer President Greene's speech before the Rotary Club.

During his remarks, Treasurer Greene said, "We are facing a real problem, not a theoretical social question." To this remark McMahon replied, "Evidently, to him (Greene) the problem of profits is real; but how to give the textile workers a decent living, how to keep the mothers out of the mills, the children in the schools, and how to develop a stronger, happier, better educated people—these things are theoretical social questions. Very well, if these are 'theoretical social questions' the textile workers will fight until they become 'real problems' like questions of profit."

The rest of McMahon's argument was sufficient to prove that he is a sincere man and determined to fight out the issue against wage reductions squarely; even tho there were several points where he allowed the employer some favors. This point that McMahon is putting up an honest fight, should not be overlooked, for it can be clearly seen that he will listen to no compromise on the question of wage reductions.

Nevertheless, the O. B. U. elements decided that it should be their policy to stage a fight against McMahon at this meeting. Ever since the meeting was announced they were doing their utmost to influence the strikers to stay away. They arranged a meeting for their hall at the same time and advertised it heavily. About two score of O. B. U. sympathizers were placed close to the speaker's stand on the Common to act as clackers, they booed, hooted and kept up a continuous din while McMahon was speaking.

In spite of this McMahon spoke for over thirty minutes to four thousand strikers and it was considered a victory against the O. B. U. rough-house tactics inasmuch as the meeting was not actually broken up.

After the U. T. W. left the Common, the O. B. U. took possession of the speaker's stand and addressed the same crowd devoting most of their time to attacking McMahon and the U. T. W. calling them scabs, yellow strike-breakers etc.

Legere is a consistent dual-unionist, one who contends that everyone, and all organizations, but his own, has no right to existence, and if you don't accept that doctrine you shall be damned. It sounds good to the orthodox believers, but it is nasty and destructive in a strike.

In spite of this wretched spectacle of factional bitterness on one side, and austere alootness of the U. T. W. on the other side, the spirit of the strikers is unshaken. The strike is as strong as ever, picketing is renewed vigorously whenever scabs appear at any mill.

THE END OF LEVI

Paul Levi our readers will remember as an able Communist leader in Germany, who was some little while ago expelled for an attack upon the Party Executive, which amounted under the circumstances to something rather like treachery. Now this group shows the melancholy fate of any group which cuts aloof from the class-conscious proletariat. He and his group, not content with joining the right wing "Independent Socialists" have taken on themselves the task of anti-Russian propaganda in that organization. They issue a manifesto stating that:

They want to "express their recognition" of the "fact that in Russia, under the leadership of the Bolsheviks, the petty-bourgeoisie and petty-peasantry have become the ruling class, that capitalism and the bourgeoisie are reorganizing, and that the Russian workers, who have suffered so much, now must group themselves as a class, poor, miserable, disunited, oppressed, and gather together against the party which has been so long their leader,' etc., etc.—

By [illegible] WORKER

The International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, in common with the rest of the labor movement, has felt the evil effects of dual unionism.

Altho there has never been a dual union in the ladies' garment industry, yet the radicals there have been very much influenced by the teachings of the outside unions, and many spent years in a futile effort to organize a Textile Workers' branch of the I. W. W. which did not and could not perform the functions of a trade union.

All that they accomplished by their efforts was to isolate themselves from the mass of the workers.

During periods of strikes they rallied to the support of the union, but only to retire to their seclusion when the struggle was over.

There were attempts made to remedy this condition, for the radical workers instinctively felt the barrenness of their efforts; but these failed because the fallacy of dual unionism was not yet understood.

The propaganda groups that were organized had no definite plan of action, and their members refused to accept positions of responsibility.

Thus the Current Events Group, which at one time promised to become a factor in the union, failed to come up to expectations; the same reasons account for the failure of the Workers' Council movement in the I. L. G. W. after the 12-week strike in 1919.

The Workers' Council came into existence at the time when the Shop Steward movement was being heard of a great deal from England, and it was considerably influenced by the British events.

It aimed to reconstruct the union on a Shop Delegate system. The idea was to make the shop the unit of organization, to transfer the full control of the union to the rank and file thru their Shop Committees.

The women in the needle trades (contrary to accepted opinion that women are by nature conservative) readily responded to the new idea.

The Workers' Council became very popular amongst all the workers in the industry, because the principles advocated by it were particularly adaptable to conditions in the industry.

The International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union has faced many peculiar problems. Altho in existence but a few years, it has succeeded to a great extent in improving the conditions of the workers.

In order to evade the power of the union, the manufacturers began to transfer the industry into small towns, where it is more difficult for the union to reach the workers.

In the city many of the large shops were disbanded and the industry handed over to contractors.

The large number of the rank and file does not participate actively in the affairs of the organization as now constituted; in order to maintain the standards of the union it became necessary to mobilize the active elements and distribute them thru the unorganized shops, so that from the inside could be spread the message of unionism.

These problems of the unorganized and the out-of-town shop, among other difficulties, had become too serious to be handled by paid officials against whom workers have a distrust.

Only by organizing the union on a basis that would enlist greater numbers into its activities could the union hope to maintain itself.

The Workers Council offered a solution for these problems; but it was doomed to failure because, instead of acting as a propaganda group it aimed to replace the union and even undertook to conduct strikes.

Also the radicals of all the different shades of thought had not learned how to reach a common program and leave their differences aside while working for the agreed end; instead of this, each group tried to use the Council as a medium for the propagation of its pet ideas.

In spite of its mistakes, the Workers' Council accomplished some good work. It popularized the Shop Delegates System, and it compelled the officials who were desirous of enlisting the activities of the radicals (the only live wires in the organization) to grant them a concession.

This took the form of the organization of a Shop Delegates body in the union. The new institution was greeted with enthusiasm by the workers in the industry, who attended its meetings in great numbers, and a new spirit permeated the organization.

This new body began to assume responsibilities and soon decided that the Executive Committee, hitherto elected by the membership at large and responsible to no one during its term of office, should be elected and controlled by the Shop Representatives.

The officers of the I. L. G. W. became alarmed at the popularity of the new institution and its acts and immediately took steps to curb it.

They declared the decision of the Shop Delegates unconstitutional, and sent in a receiver to take charge of the office of the local.

Some of the radicals, still imbued with the idea of dual unionism, began to clamor for a split; but they were immediately opposed by others who had learned that the only way to revolutionize the union was to stick to it.

The saner counsels prevailed. They analyzed their mistakes, and patiently set themselves to the task of organizing a left-wing movement in the I. L. G. W. They have learned that a fundamental change in the form of organization cannot be accomplished on a local scale, but must begin thruout the organization and with the highest and lowest units.

The patient and systematic work which was undertaken by this left wing has been fruitful.

We now see a solid block of radicals organized in Shop Delegates Leagues, with branches in nearly every local of the I. L. G. W., in New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, and other centers where ladies' garments are made.

The members of the Shop Delegates League aim to get the support of the rank and file by participating in the daily activities of the union, and by patient and diligent work in the interest of the workers.

The recent organization campaign conducted by the Joint Board of Waist and Dress Industry was largely carried on by the radicals.

The success of these new policies has become evident during the recent election in the cloak industry—the stronghold of the official machine.

At the elections just held, after a two months' campaign during which the official machine in co-operation with the Daily Forward did their utmost to discredit the radicals, a complete victory was achieved in the largest local in the organization.

They elected their full slate, executive board, managers, and delegates to the convention.

The program upon which the fight was waged, as enunciated in the Shop Delegate League bulletin, is as follows:

1. To bring about the reconstruction of the union along Industrial lines.
2. To make the union a more militant and efficient organ of struggle by transferring power from union officials to the workers in the shops.
3. To abolish the sanctity of the collective agreement as a permanent institution.
4. To encourage solidarity of the labor forces of different industries, thereby strengthening the economic and social position of the working class.

The Shop Delegate League did carry on a spirited campaign for the election of delegates to the convention of the I. L. G. W., now being held in Cleveland. The convention issues were:

Rank and file control thru Shop Delegates.

Needle Trades Alliance.

Equal representation on all bodies of the International.

Establishment of Recall of Officers.

Uniform initiation fees, etc.

At last the radicals have found the road that leads to victory. It may not be a smooth road, and it may cost a few individual suspensions, and even expulsions, but in spite of all, thanks to our present knowledge of how to work in our union, the day is not far distant when our International Ladies Garment Workers' Union will take its place in the front ranks of Organized Labor in America.

CHARITY

This vice, if widespread, demoralizes the whole community. Other vices are a disgrace to those who indulge in them; but charity is a disgrace to the human race. Personal vices are recognized as evils to be shunned. Charity, though a deadly evil, passes for a virtue; it is a hypocrite in the guise of a saint; a confidence woman in the garb of a nun.—G. O. Unity House Joins in City-Wide Subbotnik

Some weeks ago the forty girls who live at the Unity House, ran a bazaar and collected $3,400 for the relief of the starving men, women and children of Soviet Russia.

Appreciating the dire necessity of redoubled efforts and aroused to even greater activity by the insidious propaganda of the Hoover Relief Administration, these girls have volunteered to give two days voluntary labor for Russian relief, during the city-wide SUBBOTNIK, organized by the FRIENDS OF SOVIET RUSSIA.

Their home at 135 Lexington Ave. will be used as a station for the drive. Warn Against Separate Agreements in Coal War

BY A MINER

Reports from Illinois claim that separate wage agreements are to be made in Kentucky and Tennessee, and hint that Illinois may do likewise.

Should the Illinois unions make separate wage agreements, it will not be the rank and file, but the men now occupying official position in the United Mine Workers of America in District 12, as the miners are against such action.

From Indiana comes a denial of any wage agreement being negotiated in Kentucky or Tennessee, so we the coal miners are no wiser than we were before. We have, however, the privilege of believing either report we choose.

The issue is up to the rank and file. Will we take the matter in our own hands or leave it to the officers as in the past and then grumble ever after?

There are many men in Clinton and Terre Haute, Indiana, that have worked only fourteen days in the past year and some have not worked in the mines at all, but have eked out an existence (miserable as it is) by picking up odd jobs.

These men strange as it may seem, are not scabs, they are among the staunchest supporters of the strike, and if men who have been out of work for a year will support a strike, the operators can never hope to starve the miners into submission.

Decisions of the Red Labor International

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Here is another installment of the decisions of the second conference of the Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International. The first installment appeared last week and dealt mainly with the capitalist offensive and the proletarian united front. This week's installment takes up the question of the disunity efforts of the Amsterdam Trade Union International and is as follows:

On the Amsterdamers' Disunity Endeavors

The reformist trade-union leaders strive to continue the policy of co-operation with the bourgeoisie advocated and practiced by them during and after the war, even thru a period of an intense crisis and of capital's general attack against labor.

The reformist trade-union leaders are so securely bound to bourgeois society as to make them try and nip in the bud every revolutionary movement of the proletariat. Capitalism can only hope to succeed in maintaining its chaotic economic system, provided it can do so at all, by forcing upon the proletariat a state of bondage. As, however, the reformist trade-union leaders adopt an hostile attitude toward every step of the working class beyond the limits of capitalist society, they will be compelled by the logic of events not only to abandon the revolutionary aims of the working class, but even in the case of mere wage disputes to oppose the working class or sections of it in increasing degree.

This attitude will, no matter whether they like it or not, force the reformist leaders into growing opposition to the masses of labor. In order to alienate labor from the influence of the revolutionary vanguard, to prevent the formation of the united front, so urgently demanded by labor against the always more aggressive measures of the employing class, and to maintain co-operation between labor and its exploiters, the Amsterdam leaders are today proceeding unscrupulously to split and destroy the trade-union mass organizations. The same people who stubbornly insist that the proletariat share the political power with the bourgeoisie on the basis of democracy, consider the principles of democracy as so many scraps of paper as soon as a democratic majority in the trade-unions decides in favor of revolutionary tactics.

Employ the Basest Weapons

What has occurred in Germany, France, Switzerland and other countries proves conclusively that in their endeavors to split the trade-unions, the Amsterdamers are not above employing the basest of weapons.

The tactics of cooperation and of avoiding the struggle, practised by the Amsterdamers are the reason for the rapid decline of the power of attraction of the trade-unions which have been deserted by millions of disappointed and despairing workers. The machinations of the Amsterdam leaders will ultimately result in the disintegration and destruction of the trade-unions, and that at a time when the employers' organizations are being developed and strengthened to an unheard of degree.

In stating these facts and branding the splitting and destruction of the trade-unions caused by the Amsterdamers as a base crime against the workers of the world the Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International appeals to the class conscious members of the trade-unions thruout the world to remain within the trade unions in accordance with the decisions of the First Congress in spite of the intrigues of the reformist leaders and to work persistently for their development into real militant organs.

Fight Against Expulsion

Wherever reformist officials of a union proceed to expel single members or even to dissolve whole sections, locals or branches, it is the duty of all revolutionary trade-union members immediately to launch a general and energetic movement of protest against the splitters and, by adopting corresponding resolutions, categorically to insist upon annulment of the expulsion and dissolution decrees. Expelled members and dissolved sections must exhaust all means on the statute books in fighting for readmittance to the entire organization. While this fight is going on, expelled locals must, if possible under observation of the rules and regulations of their union, fulfil their functions as hitherto. If more than one local of a union, and more than one union in a country have been expelled, the adherents of the Red Trade Union International must unite such locals or unions in order to create close connections between them and the organization already belonging to the Red Trade Union International.

A very effective protest action is the example set in Switzerland where revolutionary unions have accepted into their ranks expelled sections and groups of other trade unions at the same time guaranteeing them the rights acquired in their previous organizations.

Force Reactionaries to State Stand

In countries where, as in France, the Amsterdamers have carried out the split all along the line, the revolutionary organizations must demand reunion to be achieved on the basis of free speech and proportional representation in the administrative organs. Where, in spite of all endeavors in that direction, readmittance to the respective unions is not granted, or where whole unions have either been expelled from the national federation or have left of their own accord, such unions must demand their readmission of the executive of the national trade-union federation.

All these steps should, however, not be taken under the formal slogan of unity—it is important that the fact that such unity is absolutely essential for the struggle for the workers' daily interests and needs be brought home to the masses. The leaders of the Amsterdam Trade Union International must be compelled to declare which side of the fence they are on in such concrete questions as wage disputes, fight for the eight hour day, retention and extension of the right of the factory councils, whether or no they will continue to sabotage the necessary unity of labor in favor of the bourgeoisie.

With regard to the stubbornly repeated assertion of the Amsterdam leaders that the Red Trade Union International is endeavoring to split the trade-union movement, the Executive Committee declares most emphatically that all adherents of the Red Trade Union International must always respect the wishes of the majority of labor and at no time employ force in an endeavor to coerce such a majority into accepting their (the minority's) proposals. It is not difficult for the adherents of the Red Trade Union International to observe this rule, the less so as, in spite of the desperate resistance put up by the Amsterdam leaders, the cases where majorities of organized workers, both in locals and in whole unions, declare themselves in favor of the center of the revolutionary trade-union movement, the Red Trade Union International, are on the increase.

Trotsky Speaks on Disarmament

By LEON TROTSKY

PROCLAMATION TO THE RUSSIAN RED ARMY AND NAVY

The question of disarmament has been raised by Chicherin, our representative, and has since been withdrawn from the agenda at Genoa. The Russian delegation [illegible] that we sincerely desire peace and that we are ready to disarm on condition that those who have hitherto been [illegible] disarm at the same time.

The refusal of capitalist France to discuss our proposals signifies that the capitalist States, and first among them triumphant France, desire to keep in their hands a powerful weapon for the suppression of those who are weak and disarmed.

We desire that the pacific efforts of our Delegations shall be crowned with success, and we hope that European nations will compel the militant bourgeois to lend an attentive ear to our plans for peace.

Soldiers of the Red Army! Sailors of the Red Fleet! We extend our best wishes to the first efforts of our representatives and hope that the European people will force their militaristic bourgeois war lords to take heed of the cry for peace demanded by all nations.

As long as these bourgeois governments will reply with a categorical "No" to our proposal for disarmament, just so long will each of our men remain steadfastly at his post.

Proletarian Working Women! [illegible] of the Whole World!

Your life is a life of hunger; you have heard the knock of the bony finger of want on your own door; disease and care pass thru your low doors day in and day out.

But where do fugitives find a warm hearth, where does one always share the last crumb of bread with the hungry, where is there always a garment to clothe the naked?

In your homes, you working motherly women of the whole world!

In Russia want does not merely knock at the door, in Russia misery and hunger have fastened themselves upon the huts of the peasants and the homes of the workers. Their biting teeth are fearful for twenty-five million people and six and one-half million children.

If you can read, you proletarian women of the whole world, then in the last bit of newspaper that comes to your hand you see pictures of the want of the starving in Russia.

Suppose that Heaven alone is to blame, iron-willed, immovable, pitiless, as Heaven was this summer.

Suppose that gold and might-seeking powers filled with hate for revolutionary Russia had not refused all aid, had not denied her both hammer and nails, both plows and locomotives, both chemicals and books, in order to hinder the active constructive work of Socialism.

With full right may we declare that the exploiters, the capitalists, of all countries are responsible for the terrible need in Russia, responsible thru their iron-bound blockade, responsible thru the destruction caused by the White armies. The soldiers of the whole world have starved Russia, more greedy than swarms of locusts, more pitiless than the drought. They ate up all the bread of the land and left only misery and plague and hopeless poverty.

Proletarian Working Women! Let us not complain any more, we must help!

You own nothing? Endless treasures lie in your industrious hands, in your willing hearts, in your inventive heads.

Working Women of England, steeled as you are thru the hundred years of women's toil in the factories and your industrious work in the home, thru the hard and long struggles of yourselves and your husbands with Capitalism—do you still know what solidarity means? Have you not stood at the front when the English proletarians repelled the imperial beasts of prey with the mighty cry, "Hands off Russia!" Now show your understanding in the struggle of your Russian brothers. Send coal and food.

Women of old cultured France! War and need have oppressed you for many years. Thrust aside the victorious sword of the French militarists from the breasts of your proletarian Russian brothers. By your sisterly help repair the evil your government has done. Despite all need and devastation, you are rich, proletarian working women of France, if you would but give.

Women of Germany! How many unused tools and small machines are stored in the lumber rooms of an industrial country as highly developed as Germany. Industrious, clever working women, housewives of Germany? Can you not make clothes for the children from your own clothes, socks out of stockings? If you cannot take the precious, incomparable medicaments from the greedy Germans than at least you can buy some yourselves. Take from the tiny bit of money that you live on week by week, take but a small part, and buy medicines for Russia. Save those who are dying of cholera and of typhus in Russia.

You Women of Italy, [illegible] North America, Argentina [illegible] Women of [illegible] [illegible] Millions of hungry children's eyes are at you. Mothers, can you another little piece of bread mouth of a small Russian child

International are the English Labour Party, the Belgian Workers' Party and the German Social Democrats.

Who doubts that the German Social Democrats are against the Versailles Peace? The Versailles Peace is not only a strangling rope for the German proletariat, but also a Damocles sword suspended over the Government belonging to the Social Democrats.

The German Social Democrats would very willingly demonstrate against the Versailles Peace, but the Labour Party and the Belgian Workers' Party do not permit it. They do not permit it out of consideration for the Entente Governments and for the German Government.

Does Not Dare Protest

Altho the latter is collapsing under the pressure of the Versailles Peace it does not dare even to broach the question of the Versailles Peace at the Genoa Conference.

Thus, considering the vetoes of the reformist parties of the Entente countries, the German Social Democracy does not dare of its own accord to protest against the Versailles Peace.

Just as the German Government was filled with hopes by the whispered promises of the English Ambassador, Lord d'Abernon, so the German Social Democracy's efforts were centered on postponing the conference as far as possible.

Only it should not take place now, not during the Genoa Conference. "Perhaps in the summer," they said.

All attempts to make other reasons for the refusal of the present conference as important as this main reason, are merely an exchange of falsehoods.

When the question of Versailles was presented, the representatives of the Second International declared peremptorily that they would leave the Conference at the attempt to broach this question, at no other question, only at the question of the Peace of Versailles. And that is clear enough.

Refuse to Work with Communists

The representatives of the Second International naturally had other reasons, too, for their attitude. But these were not the ones which caused the postponement.

Who would believe that a certain Wels was opposed to the conference because of boiling indignation at the bad treatment of the Social Revolutionaries or Georgians, altho he had no fault to find with the occupation of the latter by German troops in the year 1918?

But everyone knows that the German Social Democracy refused until now, in economic fights, in tax fights, to sit at the same table with the Communists and together with them to fight for the alleviation of the burden which is almost crushing the proletariat.

The fear that it would be necessary to draw a lesson from the international united front for Germany's problems was the second reason why the German Social Democracy nursed the idea of frustrating the conference.

And the representatives of the Labour Party made no secret of the fact that they fear the united front with the Communists, because the Communists in the English Trade Unions in the coming large economic struggles—strengthened by the international united front can disturb and break the policy of the trade union bureaucracy.

Consideration for international victorious capital, and consideration for its own policy of coalition with the bourgeoisie, yielding to the capitalist offensive, the fear that this policy can be disturbed by the international united front—these were the reasons for the efforts of the Second International to dissolve the Berlin Conference.

Beginnings of United Front

The Second International succeeded—as was already said—in hindering the immediate convocation of the World Conference of the proletariat but—and this we establish as the second result of the Conference—it did not succeed in destroying the beginnings of the united front, modest as they may be. It had to consent to the appointment of a committee of the representatives of the three Executives, whose task it is to prepare for the calling of a World Congress and other conferences.

It has to agree to call together as early as April, international demonstrations against the offensive of capital, against the Genoa robber conference, for the recognition of Soviet Russia, and against the strangling reparations policy.

That is not much. But even that could only be accomplished by the spontaneously formed block of the Communists and the Vienna International, who jointly defended the idea of the united front.

Yellow "Vorwärts" Gets Polite

With a coarseness which is peculiar to it, the Berlin "Vorwärts" in its morning issue of April 6th reports that at the conference the Second International had taken up the joint declaration "in a certain measure out of politeness to the Vienna Working Union."

The Second International will undoubtedly do everything in the future, as it did at the Conference, to sabotage every concrete attempt to transform in action the impulse given by the International Conference.

But the conference of the three Executives has already shown that when the Communist International and the Vienna Working Union honorably and resolutely defend the thought of the united front, the attempts of the Second International to sabotage will run aground for a long time to come.

They will run aground not because the Communist International and the Vienna Working Union can overrule by majority vote any decision of the Second International, but because by their very attitude they manifest the ardent will of the proletariat for the united front.

Communists Counter-Attack

The Communist International openly abandoned every attempt to cause the Berlin Conference to frame nice sounding and far-reaching conclusions.

It knows very well that the big promises to the Second International are not worth the paper they are written on.

It is not a question of the promises that the Second International could make, but of the pressure upon it of the working masses, which will express itself most emphatically in the urgent questions of the proletarian necessities of life.

The Communist International intentionally did not begin an offensive at this conference against the unheard-of deeds of the Second International during and after the war.

Only when the Second International tried to take the offensive against the Communist International, did the Communist International delegation make a counter-attack which sufficed at least to hold back the Second International so that it did not shatter the Berlin Conference.

There is no doubt that the holding back of the Delegation of the Communist International will be considered a concession by many of our comrades. The delegation knew that. But it had to say to itself, "We are the representatives of the fighting movement of the proletariat."

Tenacious Fight; Not Parade

The successful fight of the proletariat is impossible without its unity for the defense of the interests nearest to the proletariat.

The proletariat will not assemble to speak sharply about the past, or to pronounce screamingly the demands of the present.

It will assemble in order to express most decisively its will for a united front. It will judge the parties not by what they say but by what they do. And therefore our holding back and moderation were the sharpest form of attack on the Second International.

Our moderation showed that we were forming the united front not as a parade for one day, but as a tenacious fight for the setting up and the preservation of the united front.

The quieter and more prudently we show this to the working masses in the future, the more will all the attacks of the Second International against the united front of the proletariat recoil to its disadvantage; this is the slogan of the Communist International in the given historical situation.

We have declared ourselves ready to participate in the united front, even with those who for eight years abandoned the interests of the proletariat.

United Front Idea Grows

Since we maintain this idea quietly, firmly and without a waver, we shall be capable of setting up the proletarian united front, even against the Second International, if it tries to disturb this united front. That is the result of the Berlin Conference.

When we conceived the idea of the united front, it was very clear to us that the idea could not be victorious in one hour, one day or even one month.

When we conceived the idea of the International Congress, the road to the international united front was shown us. This road proves to be impossible at the present time, but the idea of the united front has shown itself so strong that the Second International, which in the year 1921 gave it a serious setback, when it was first expressed in Germany thru the "Open Letter" of the Communist Party of Germany, can now only sabotage it in an underhand way.

The idea of the united front is beginning to go into effect, and it will go thru. This assurance strengthened the conference for all the Communist participants, in spite of the slight practical results of the first attempt.

Unanimously Endorse Resolutions

And we should not in the least undervalue the fact that since the idea of the united front was substantiated at the conference, it convinced the representatives of all shades of opinion in the Communist International of the justness of the idea of the united front much more than theoretic discussion could have done.

It can be stated that the delegation of the Communist International gave its unanimous endorsement to the joint resolution, which is undersigned by its representatives.

IRON HORSES

Izvestia, Moscow, March 15th, published the following letter from the famine area:—

"The volost (district) was allotted forty poods of corn, and was requested to draw them from the Sergileev county famine depot. But this has not been done so far, and cannot be done, because there are no horses left. The volost executive attempted to harness people to the carts, but they were too weak to walk five miles. And the starving volost, which has forgotten the taste and smell of bread, must give up all hope of these forty poods of corn—which would maintain it for two or three days longer—and await death by starvation in utter hopelessness!"

The peasants in the famine regions accept their fate stoically. Their horses are dead, and it is time to plow. They will patiently harness themselves to the plow, but the hunger ordeal has been long and strength has ebbed away. There is no hope for them unless they can get automotive farming machinery.

"Iron horses," tractors, are needed to replace the dead draft animals. The Friends of Soviet Russia, thanks to the generosity of workers and sympathizers, is about to send to the Volga district 20 tractors with complete operating equipment, including expert machinists.

This is a small but hopeful beginning. Help to increase this essential aid. No less than 2000 tractors with plows and other implements are needed to assure efficient cultivation of the Volga plains under present conditions.

And there is much more than hunger relief involved in the donation of these "iron horses." They may well prove vital to the existence of the world's first labor commonwealth and its unexampled policy of fair dealing with the oriental nations. The survival or fall of Soviet Russia will decide whether there shall be a peaceful or a bloody settlement between the Orient and the Occident.

Centuries of strife and woe, culminating in the miracle of 1917, have set the stage for a tremendous drama, fraught with incalculable significance for all of us today and for our children tomorrow. The vast Russian realm, embracing nearly one-fifth of the earth's habitable area and one-tenth of the human race, has arisen mightily in a key position as the possible peacemaker between the teeming East and the hustling West. Already Soviet Russia's policy of generosity and brotherhood toward the eastern peoples is bearing good fruit.

The old, grasping ruthless imperialism must not be allowed to come back to kill this heartening promise. Recurrence of famine is a serious menace in this direction.

Send "IRON HORSES" to plow for the famine-stricken peasants of Russia. Give the new, healing spirit of the Soviet Republic a chance to endure and redeem the world.

May Day Is Party's Red Letter Day

May Day, 1922, will always be remembered as a Red Letter Day in the history of the Workers Party.

The first May Day in the course of our existence as a party found us at the head of a united labor front in hundreds of cities in all parts of the United States, and the activity and ability of our spokesmen completely eclipsed those who shared the platform at these joint demonstrations.

In many cities our party was called upon to furnish the entire list of speakers because the co-operating elements were not able to supply any.

Everywhere the message of the Workers Party met with enthusiastic reception. The results of our first May Day unquestionably vindicate the united front policy as applied to specific immediate efforts by the workers in their own behalf.

Coldwell at Buffalo

In Buffalo, N. Y., Joseph M. Coldwell spoke at a tremendous open air demonstration at which the police renewed their courtship of writer's cramp trying to take down the speeches of our orators.

Permission to parade had been refused by the Mayor, but the meeting took on the proportions of a demonstration nevertheless.

Besides the Workers Party there were two carpenters' unions, one moulders', one electricians', one bakers', one railwaymen's local and a goodly number of fraternal groups.

In Rochester, N. Y., the Amalgamated Clothing Workers staged a wonderful parade, followed by a mass meeting at which Robert Minor and I. Camardo, both members of the Workers Party, spoke in English and Italian respectively.

Parade at Vineland, N. J.

In a tiny farmers' town of Vineland, N. J., the Amalgamated organization threw a real surprise into the townspeople by an unannounced parade, five hundred strong, headed by a large band, red flags, and all the other revolutionary trappings hitherto seen only in the biggest cities.

They marched past four scab shops of their trade and serenaded the unorganized workers. A meeting in the largest hall in town was addressed by William F. Kruse and I. Ciuetti, of Baltimore, both active in the Workers Party.

Not a single report of trouble marred the perfect success of our demonstrations, even in Pittsburgh, where a Coldwell meeting on behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti was stopped a few weeks ago, the meeting was allowed to proceed undisturbed.

In a few cases speakers representing other organizations tried to make tactical capital for their groups but they did not get far. Our speakers effectively squelched such efforts and those who made them, to the complete satisfaction of the audience, and then proceeded with the proper theme of the day—the need for a solid working class front against the attacks of the capitalists.

Fine reports were received from Philadelphia where Caleb Harrison spoke, from the entire Massachusetts district where Edgar Owens and James P. Cannon were sent from the National Office to help out the district speakers, and from many other points.

From Los Angeles a telegram on behalf of the release of all class war prisoners was sent broadcast. Further reports will be printed in our next issue.

FREE TICKETS TO STRIKERS

While it is found the admission charge meetings are generally more successful than those that are free, the Workers Party is careful not to let the admission charge militate against the attendance of working class elements to whom the admission charge is a real handicap. For instance, the Baltimore local distributed 100 tickets to the Robert Minor meeting among the strikers of the Western Maryland, and the subject of the lecture, "The Open Shop Drive, a Modern Return to Slavery," as well as the personality of the speaker assured a welcome to these tickets among the rebel workers.

NEWS STAND WORK

In Philadelphia the local has been deliberate in getting its major plans under way but it is hitting its full stride now. To boost the circulation of THE WORKER the City Central Committee in connection with the English Branch has organized a "Worker Distribution Club," to each of whose members a certain number of news-stands are assigned. Each news stand is given two or three copies as a starter and the quota increased as they need more. For the first month they do not expect any phenomenal results, but the sales are slowly growing and the plan is reported a success. Already the allotment for this work has increased from 125 to 225 per week.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

Thousands in New York City Demonstrate

"Free our political prisoners; Hail the United Front of the working class; Down with capitalism; Long live the International Workers Soviet Republic!" resounded thruout New York City on May Day.

In all parts of New York the Workers Party delivered its revolutionary message, to over ten thousand workers gathered in mass meetings and demonstrations.

May First not only demonstrated the eagerness of the masses of New York to voice their indignation with the murderous capitalist system, not only their revolutionary understanding and fervor; but by their enthusiastic response to the slogans of the Workers Party they showed their willingness to follow the leadership of a Party fighting for a new society based on the rule of the workers.

May Day signified for us, that the Workers Party is here to stay, grow, and become the recognized leader of the workers.

The New York Amnesty Demonstration arranged on 110th St. and Fifth Ave., drew over 5000 workers. The meeting was opened at 2 P. M. by P. J. McClellan in the name of the Amnesty Alliance.

At 4 P. M. the Socialist Party after endeavoring with their top-notch speakers to get the ear of the workers gave up their corner to the Demonstration and a second platform was presided over by William W. Weinstone, secretary of the Local N. Y.

Later in the day the two platforms were combined making one huge impressive gathering. Over 25 speakers addressed the demonstration, 20 of whom were members of the Workers Party including Lore, McClellan, Benjamin Gitlow, Weinstone, Engdahl, Amter, Huiswood, McCarthy and Katherine Gitlow.

The other speakers represented the Workers Defense, United Labor Council, United Toilers, and other organizations affiliated in the Alliance.

The Brooklyn Demonstration of the Amnesty Alliance was attended by over 1000 workers and adressed by the same and other speakers.

Benjamin Gitlow and M. J. Olgin, both of the Workers Party were the main speakers at the Manhattan Opera House where 3000 members of Local 1 and 9 of the International Ladies Garment Workers celebrated [illegible] Francisco.

The Lettish Branch of the Workers Party held their [illegible] on Saturday, in [illegible] Kruse and [illegible] Party spoke to about [illegible] nish Branch held their celebration on Monday night at the [illegible], 1000 workers attending. [illegible] and Amter spoke.

The Local also supplied speakers to adjoining cities. [illegible] spoke in Newark, Tom O'Flaherty in Connecticut, P. McClellan and others in Newark, Bayonne and other towns of New Jersey, Engdahl in Hartford.

Extensive literature was disposed of. The Local helped distribute part of the 25,000 proclamations of the Amnesty Alliance. It circulated 10,000 of the Workers Party proclamations, 2000 May Day issues of THE WORKER, and more than 1000 May 6th issues, as well as thousands of copies of other literature, and May Day United Front W. P. Buttons.

The Workers Party won its spurs on May Day. It showed up in most inspiring form. Next May Day holds out still greater prospects for the revolutionary party of the working class.

COLDWELL'S STORY STIRS

The nation-wide tour of Joseph M. Coldwell on behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti, the condemned Massachusetts labor leaders, under the auspices of the Workers Party, is meeting with good response everywhere. He has spent two weeks in the state of Ohio addressing meetings every night and reports that despite the hard times the crowds are good and the tour will show some surplus for the defense fund. Thousands of Sacco-Vanzetti pamphlets are being sold at these meetings and many signatures obtained for the release of all class-war prisoners.

After making May Day meetings at Erie and Buffalo, our veteran labor agitator is going into Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Missouri, before wending his way back East.

His itinerary for the next few weeks is as follows: May 9, Aurora, Ill., 10, Rockford, Ill.; 11, Gary Ind.; 12, Peoria, Ill., 13, Chicago, Ill.; 14, Maywood Ill., 15, Moline, Ill.; 16, Davenport, Ill.; 17, Racine, Wisc., 18, Waukegan, Ill.; 19, Milwaukee, Wisc.; 20, St. Paul, Minn.; 21, Minneapolis, Minn.; 22, Superior, Wisc.; 23, Negaunee, Mich.; 24, Newberry, Mich.; 25, Red Granite, Wisc., 26, International Falls, Minn., 28, Frederick, S. Dak., 29, St. Louis, Mo.

[illegible] Independence?

By [illegible]

The plea of independence of the Young Workers League from the Workers Party is being put forward by [illegible] whose [illegible] is to [illegible] of the Workers Party.

The issue of independence (?) is a false one by which they hope to [illegible] some honest [illegible] elements as well as to throw confusion into the ranks of our membership.

The plea is made that by political "independence" we will avoid splitting of the young movement into as many different camps as can be found in the old.

So they propose as a remedy the organization of another politically independent organization on the basis of age rather than principle.

They claim that "independence" appeals to the "sentimentality" of youth, and furnishes a basis for the unity of all elements, those who accept the leadership of the Young Communist International as well as the purely Centrist, or even Social-Democratic (S. P.) Juvenile auxiliaries.

If the plea were not prompted solely by dishonesty it would brand its proponents as a fine bunch of pipe-dreamers. What kind of an organization would be built out of such a unity, even granting the absurd idea of its possibility?

What the Young Workers' League expects to do at its coming national convention is to build a militant, active organization based upon a clear recognition of the class struggle and the necessity of active participation in it. We do not want a mere organizational unity on the basis of "sentimentality" such as doomed the first Y. P. S. L. to impotence.

We favor the political subordination of the Y. W. L. to the decisions of the Workers Party because the W. P. represents the only revolutionary unifying force in this country.

At its first convention it accomplished the seemingly impossible task of uniting a number of revolutionary political organizations under one banner, and its activity since that time has been such as to win the approval of the Communist Party, American Section of the Communist International.

To subordinate the political policies of the young organization to this real united front of the revolutionary elements means only to avoid political dissension within our ranks and unnecessary confusion among the masses.

To apply the policies of the Third International, and of its young section, the Young Communist International, [illegible] the social struggle, interests and activities of the American youth will be task enough for the Y. W. L. without usurping the work of the older movement.

We propose a relationship between the Y. W. L. and the W. P. similar to that now existing between the Young Communist International and the Communist International.

These would-be revolutionists who are advocating independence claim it is a question of "expediency". Yes, I agree with them, it is a question of expediency for the benefit of those who would like to use the Y. W. L. as a weapon with which to fight the party.

It certainly is expedient for them first to advocate independence, split the Y. W. L., and after they have split the forces of the young workers to affiliate our organization with the splitters of the Communist movement of America.

Most of those who raise the cry of "independence" do so only because it suits their purpose in grinding the axes of the elder movement. They claim they have among them adherents of (1) the I. W. W., (2) the Proletarian Party, (3) the United Toilers.

That the support of the I. W. W. cannot for a minute be considered a substitute for that of the W. P. is shown by the hostility of that organization toward the Third International, and its utter indifference to young organization work.

The Proletarian Party is but a pedagogical sect. The United Toilers have shown themselves to be undisciplined dualists and organization wreckers.

In this Y. W. L. fight they are only transferring their wrecking tactics from the elder field to the younger, and our members should be on guard against them.

There is a small element of sincere comrades who have made a fetish of "independence" for its own sake, who feel that the young movement is and can be self-sufficient in principle, policy, and resources. This element is used as a catspaw by the wily schemers of the older opponents of revolutionary unity in America. The experience of the past two years should show the practical impossibility of such a course, and in logic the creation of a young organization upon a basis of complete political autonomy would mean the development of another contestant upon the field of proletarian organization, it would hamper unification of our forces and further confuse the mass of workers about to be won to our cause.

The condition of the labor movement in this country at this time is such that every ounce of energy we can gather is necessary in order that we, the vanguard of the proletariat, may take an active part in the daily struggle of the working class and lead to victory over capitalism.

The duty of every true rebel is to get into the fight. Now is the time for action. Now more than ever before the working class needs our activity. We cannot refuse them.

Down with those who would split the Young Workers' Movement of this country! Forward to the battle, comrades! On with the struggle, the struggle to free the masses from capitalism and the evils that go with it.

Into the struggle we must go with our forces united in this, the greatest struggle in the history of mankind. Down with all disrupters!

Long live the united front of the young and adult workers, the united front of the revolutionary organizations, the Young Workers' League and the Workers Party of America!

DELEGATES TO BRITISH PARTY CONGRESS REMEMBER AMERICAN POLITICAL PRISONERS

Communist support—one of the first manifestations of the United Front.

The delegates were gathered in the [illegible] Hall of the building. A large square room upon the walls of which hang very indifferently executed paintings of bygone worshipful mayors. There was quite a gallery of them: pompous, be-whiskered persons for the most part, stiff and important in their red robes of office and their mayoral chains.

MacManus in Mayor's Chair

In the mayor's great oaken chair upon a dais sat Arthur MacManus, Chairman of the Party. The great carved back of the chair rose high above the head of this little man who with his revolutionary passion and keen proletarian intelligence directs the activities of the Party with the same cool and humorous effectiveness as he led the conference thru the mazes of discussion and parliamentary rulings.

It was a workingmen's assembly. Looking over the rows of delegates I noted the typical representatives of the various sections of British industry. There were miners from South Wales speaking with all the natural [illegible] oratory and passion of the Celt, harsh-voiced Scotsmen from the Clyde storm center, with stunted [illegible], stalwart seamen from Liverpool talking in the clipped Lancashire speech.

Here and there was an "intellectual," a journalist or professional man with the suave accent of the middle class university graduate. But they were in a very small minority and they made no attempt to dictate to the conference or to appropriate the lion's share of the talking, as do the American members of the middle class who have condescended to take part in the proletarian movement.

They [illegible] make the attempt for a very good reason: it wouldn't have succeeded. These British revolutionary workingmen knew just what they wanted and they were in no mood for dialectical niceties.

Few Flowery Speeches

There were very few flowery speeches. Anyone trying to waste the assembly's time by the exercise of ornamental oratory was soon [illegible] to heel.

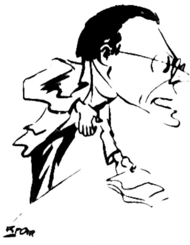
"We don't want any speeches!" would resound from various parts of the hall, and the elocutionist, looking somewhat sheepish, would either sit down or get down to business.

After MacManus' opening address, which was a succinct survey of the international and national situation, all newspaper men and other persons who were not delegates were asked to leave the hall.

Ashleigh Fraternal Delegate

I was present as fraternal delegate from America and after I had made the usual rather general talk which fraternal delegates always do, then the real business began.

And the real business went steadily on until Sunday night. There was but little debate: the times here in Great Britain are too hazardous. [illegible] the hand of the British master class is gripping the workers' unions by the throat and before this menace it was obvious to all that Communists must—by the sheer necessity of iron circumstance—work together with all sections of the workingclass movement to beat back the bosses' offensive and convert it if possible into a retreat.



T. A. JACKSON

One of the Editors of "The Communist," who piloted the "electoral policy resolution."

The engineering unions are locked out, which has added nearly a million more men to the two million unemployed. In a few days it is certain that the ship-building workers of all crafts would also be locked out.

The employers are demanding the cancellation of all those workshop rights for which the unions of Great Britain had been fighting for years, and which they have gained thru infinite sacrifice and struggle.

Wages are to be lowered again if the employers have their own way, and unionism faces the most critical period in its history since the elementary right to organize was wrung from the masters.

This was no time, therefore, for academic discussion, no time for revolutionary purists to insist upon long theoretical pronouncements. It was a gathering of warriors who were come together to consider means of doing battle.

"Unity" Conference Keynote

[illegible] unity with all workers who were opposing the attacks of the employing class, unity on the industrial and the political field: this was the keynote of the conference. There was no question of "sacrificing our principles" or "compromising."

It was understood that the Communist Party did not budge an inch from its revolutionary position, but the present tactics must be that of a solid union with the workers everywhere, in every sphere of their activity.

Few Purists Present

On the question of electoral policy when a resolution was introduced by T. A. Jackson which proposed that the Party should again apply for affiliation to the Labor Party, there was scanty opposition. Only a couple of "pure" Communists were among the 159, and their pleas for sectarian segregation were ineffectual.

The following specific applications of the United Front were adopted by the conference.

a. The Communist Party officially denies the charge that it desires to enter the Labor Party to disrupt it, and declares that it seeks affiliation in order to secure the political unity of the working class and to influence the Labor Party in the direction of communism.

b. The Communist Party is prepared generally to support Labor Party candidates at the polls but reserves itself the right to oppose in glaring reactionary cases where it is found that a considerable section of the working class supports such opposition.

c. The Communist Party declares its disapproval of all tactics having merely a disruptive effect on the working class movement, and of abusive attacks on the Labor Party, I. L. P., S. L. P., anarchists or any other working class elements and bodies; that the Communist Party should devote its energies to a straight attack on capitalism and the opposition parties.

Might I suggest that some of our American comrades read this last clause over five or six times and then devote a wholesome half hour to meditation upon it?

d. The Communist Party seeks to gain the confidence of the masses by approaching the workers in our propaganda campaigns in the most sympathetic manner and by members of the party assuming positions of responsibility and undertaking the defense of the working class on every issue large and small, affecting workingclass welfare.

e. The Communist Party grants permission and encourages party members to become individual members of the Labor Party, subject to Clause 12 of the constitution, in order to strengthen Communist influence in the Labor Party.

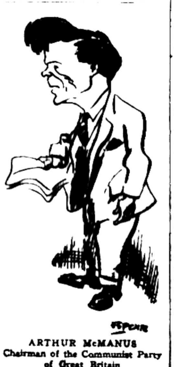
May Enter Conferences

f. The Communist Party declares its willingness at any time to enter into any conferences or negotiations between working class parties, that have for their object the consolidation of the workingclass movement, no matter whether these conferences or negotiations be initiated by Right or Left sections.

On the question of industrial policy, there was some discussion as to the relative functions of the communist workshop and union nuclei, the Red International of Labor Unions and the Workshop Committee movement.

It was decided eventually that the Party encourage the formation of workshop committees, and that the communist nuclei seek to guide such committees along the lines of communist activity.

Certain delegates argued that the workshop committees were the product of a temporary condition in industry such as that prevailing in the engineering industry during the war and that their importance was now being over stressed.



ARTHUR McMANUS
Chairman of the Communist Party of Great Britain

The majority opinion was, however, that crises were likely to occur again, at any time, which would necessitate the formation of such committees, and that therefore the workers should be familiarized with their structure and workings.

Basis for United Front

The following basis for the United Front was adopted by the conference:

In order that the policy of the United Front shall become effective in Great Britain, the following conditions are necessary:

1. A strict definition of the concrete demands upon which common action is proposed to be taken.

2. Freedom of criticism in all cases. Freedom of action in movements other than those upon which mutual agreement has been reached.

The Communist Party proclaims its complete unity with the workers in all struggles against (1) wage cuts and lengthening of hours, (2) attacks on protective regulations, trade union and political, won by the workers in the past, (3) attempts to smash workingclass organizations by the employers.

In addition there are specific demands upon which all workingclass organizations can be rallied to a common fight, such as:

(1) Work or full maintenance for the unemployed.

(2) Full recognition of the Soviet Republic.

On the basis of the above program the Communist Party expresses its willingness to join wholeheartedly with all other working class parties to obtain the aims set forth.

Finds Little Disagreement

The conference was not a good one for the writer of "feature stories." There was but little disagreement, no marked vehemence of discussion and no disorder.

It was a gathering of revolutionists schooled in the workshops and the mines and mills, tried in the industrial and political struggles of the working class, facing a situation of the utmost peril and urgency, and quietly determined to perfect their plans of battle.

So, for the person seeking cheap emotional thrills and "color," the offering was scanty. But for the revolutionist, the conference was a joy. Because it marked unmistakably the definite emergence of the British revolutionary movement from the period of romanticism and theoretical statement, to that of scientific, revolutionary application.

There was a young Welsh miner there who cried, "Comrades, we have come here, not to attend a debating society, but to plan fortifications of defense and new weapons of attack!" And there was no one present who did not think the same.

Do Not Forget America

And America? Well, America was not forgotten. For, after the conference had ended, with the full-throated singing of the "Internationale," many of the delegates went on to a meeting in the neighborhood which was held for the purpose of protesting against the imprisonment of American and British political and industrial prisoners.

In the great hall of the borough swimming baths hundreds of workers and delegates listened to the tale of the persecution of American workers by American capitalism. I painted for this stolid British audience some little pictures of free America. I told the tale of the lynching of Frank Little, of Tom Mooney and of the hundreds of members of the I. W. W. who still lie in prison.

And I told them of West Virginia and of Colorado, and these phlegmatic islanders leapt to their feet and shouted "Shame!"

The fighting Irish Communist, McAlpine, followed with the story of Jim Larkin and his comrades; and Tommy Clarke, one of the Clyde deportees, a bulky Scotsman built rather on the massive lines of our own Bill Dunne, spoke for Aldred, Tokpin, McLean and other revolutionists who are confined in British prisons.

And then came Dawson Large, a Labor Party member who spoke on the Sacco-Vanzetti case. It was hard for the audience to believe some of the things Large told them, for British capitalism has not yet resorted to the "frame-up" in order to rid itself of workingclass militants.

But we passed a unanimous resolution of protest, which was sent that night to Washington; and every member of a trade union in the union was pledged to bring up, in his union branch, the matter of Sacco and Vanzetti and other prisoners and to keep resolutions pouring in to the American Embassy and to Washington.

And then the delegates set out for the railroad stations; for they had to be home by Monday morning, so that the employed might be on the job and the unemployed register at their local labor exchanges lest they lose their weekly dole of fifteen shillings.

And a hundred and fifty [illegible] delegates were carrying to a hundred fifty cities and towns of Great Britain the message of the United Front, the call for a realignment of workingclass forces for the [illegible] great battle in the class struggle.

Now the Mexican workers are joining in the fight for the class war prisoners in this country. Mexican workers habe veen imprisoned in Texas jails for more than eight years for revolutionary activities, especially incidental to the overthrow of the Diaz regime. There are Ricardo Flores Magon and Librado Rivera at Leavenworth, and Jesus M. Rangel, Petro Parales, Abraham Cisnores, Jesus Gonzales, Leonardo Vasques and Charles Cline, in Texas jails. When we demand the release of our own prisoners, let us also remember our Mexican comrades. Set them all free!

Greetings to the Japanese

We send our comradely greetings across the broad expanse of the Pacific to the workers of Japan and congratulate them on their successful celebration of International May Day.

They marched, by the hundreds of thousands, thru the streets of their great industrial centers, Tokio, Yokohama, Osaka, Kobe and other cities.

This is the reply of Japanese labor, martyred, imprisoned, oppressed, to one of the most ruthless money oligarchies in the world.

It will give cheer to our Russian comrades of the Far Eastern Republic who have long looked for some sign of awakening from the Japanese masses.

The workers of Japan must help safeguard the eastern borders of the Red Workers' Republic, must force the withdrawal of Jap troops from Vladivostok.

As the workers of Japan walked the streets of the big cities in great demonstrations, the Imperial Crown Prince (Japan) was entertaining the Prince of Wales (British) at Kioto, the beautiful, ancient capital in Southern Japan. May Day parades were barred in Kioto for the benefit of the British Prince.

Yet the Prince of Wales might write to London to his father who sits upon the British throne and inform him that the day is coming when Japanese workers will not be the pawns of the world's imperialists.

He might also drop a postal card to his friend, Warren G. Harding, President, Washington, D. C., U. S. A., and inform him that the danger of war between Japan and the United States lessens.

The working masses of Japan, newest among the great capitalist nations, have defied the imperialists at home and declared their solidarity with aspiring labor thruout the whole world.

"Is this a Jewish union or is it an international union?" asked Luigi Antonini, of New York's Italian tailors, while Abraham Cahan, editor of the Forward, was denouncing the Communists at the Chicago convention. Antonini should know that Cahan isn't worried about race or nationality as long as he can make of the International a "right wing," anti-Communist union.

The "Unity" that Tears Down

The cry for "unity" was upon the lips of all speakers during the opening days of the convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union at Cleveland, Ohio.

Yet the first real act of the convention was the unseating of a delegate of one of the largest locals in the organization for the crime of criticizing its officialdom.

Woodrow Wilson in the days of his presidency sent men and women to prison, and crushed labor papers for this sort of lese majeste. Schlesinger unseats delegates guilty of this crime from his convention.

Perhaps the delegates who voted with the Schlesinger administration did not get the full significance of the rump convention of Socialists held near them in Cleveland. The Bergers and the Hillquits practiced the sort of "unity" that tears down, the "unity" that destroys, and they have nothing left.

The revolutionists in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union are going to remain in that organization, and help keep it in the vanguard of American labor, whether Schlesinger likes it or not.

The test vote on the unseating of Rothman shows they have one-third of the delegates in the convention with them.

Schlesinger must know the strength of his policies with his own convention if he must call the super-reactionary, Samuel Gompers, to his aid, and then begin throwing out opposition delegates.

No wonder he must go thru the hypocritical manoeuver of announcing his refusal to become a candidate to succeed himself, get the New York Times and other harlots of the kept press to shed bitter tears over his going, and then conveniently change his mind.

In the words of Charles E. Ruthenberg, executive secretary, Workers Party, in addressing the convention:—

"We speak of the 'leftism' in this convention, but 'leftism' means the unity of the workers. The Communist International offers a program of the United Front and calls upon the workers to follow it. Labor organizations should be proud to have members of the Workers Party in their ranks to work for its program."

The only real demand for unity in the American labor movement comes from its revolutionary elements. They will win that unity on the basis of the class conscious struggle of labor against capitalism. That is the only kind of working-class unity that is worth while. That is the only kind that wins. And it will win in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and all other organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, in spite of the Schlesingers and the Gompers.

Old Man Capitalism: "I tell you you are dead! Don't say you are not."
Senile Statesmen: "The idea of a corpse behaving like that."
Decrepit Monarchist: "It promised to be such a beautiful funeral."

It is charged that the workers in Indiana protested against the Harding regime in Washington by voting for Beveridge for Senator. But labor will never begin making real headway until it quits all factions of both the old parties. Labor must fight alone and win by its own efforts.

Socialists Join "The Elite"

Morris Hillquit, the intellectual leader of the Socialist Party, when Victor L. Berger permits him to be, announces that the Socialist Party has now joined "The Elite."

That is certainly getting a little Riverside Drive atmosphere into the working-class movement, or that small part of it occupied by the Socialists. Hillquit told the Cleveland Convention of the Socialist Party that:—

"The elite of the Socialist movement is in the Vienna Working Union," this being another name for the 2½ International.

And the Socialist Convention, with all the enthusiasm of a social climber moving onto "The Drive," voted for affiliation with the Vienna "Elite." And Hillquit knows.

The question is now raised whether Hillquit and his diminishing fold will be received at Vienna with greater welcome than at Moscow.

The Vienna Union stands for the dictatorship of the proletariat, for Soviet rule, and for a United Front with the Communist International. Hillquit stands for none of these. Berger certainly not. And Hillquit and Berger get four of the seven places on the party's national executive committee, two for New York and two for Milwaukee.

Some one cruelly suggests that the Socialist Party hereafter hold membership conventions instead of delegate conventions, after the fashion of the New England town meetings. If Hillquit is to be the perennial keynoter he must have someone to keynote to, and it is hard to get up enthusiasm facing a convention of 21 delegates.

And then if Hillquit is faced by the entire membership he can pick out "The Elite," those who are entitled to membership in "The Elite International."

As Berger admits, "A spirit without a body is a spook." He said it. The Socialist Party today is but the ghost of a once promising organization.

EXTRA! Sam Gompers forgot to attack Soviet Russia and the Communists in his speech for "beer and wine" and a wet U. S. A., at Madison Square Garden, New York City, recently.

Tchitcherin's Silk Hat Is Still in the Ring at Genoa

We Who Get Slapped

International May Day is a time for the expression of working-class solidarity. This also applies to working-class editors.

We wish to take this occasion, therefore, in our first issue after May Day, to express our solidarity with a fellow working-class editor, Claude McKay, of the Liberator.

The police may take exception; also the post office, because Comrade McKay's skin happens to be black, while ours is more or less white.

In the May Day issue of "The Liberator" McKay had an article reviewing the play, "He Who Gets Slapped." McKay, with Gropper, the cartoonist, were relegated to seats in the balcony, instead of being allowed to occupy the sacred precincts of the orchestra circle, reserved "for whites only." Gropper is white but McKay is black. And McKay, of course, came away feeling it was he who got slapped.

And then came the May Day Ball of The Liberator. There are workers with skins of many colors, white, black, brown, red and yellow. And no matter what race of workers you turn to, you will find there are some among them who are radical. And that is why radical workers of different races find their way to the affairs of The Liberator. It is for them a common meeting ground, for white, for negro, for Hindu, for Chinese, and workers of other races.

It therefore happened, in this common meeting place of the workers, that McKay danced with Crystal Eastman, another editor of The Liberator, sister of Max Eastman.

The police were there aching to get into action for May Day. Any excuse would do and forthwith, under orders of Police Captain Howard, of the Morals Squad, the dance was stopped. It was not "respectable" for McKay, black, to dance with Crystal Eastman, white.

And so McKay no doubt felt that he had again been slapped by a self-righteous capitalist system that can see no "respectability" in any of the acts of enlightened workers.

The hall was cleared with the usual police brutality. Workers of all races were clubbed and herded down the stairs and out-of-doors. There was no distinction shown here. Black and white were treated alike, and a Chinese radical who dared protest was placed under arrest.

This police raid on a working-class festivity isn't the affair of McKay, of Crystal Eastman, or the Chinese comrade who was thrown into a foul police station cell. It is the concern of every man and woman of labor.

The working class does not need either the night sticks of the police or the edicts of an "Anthony Comstock" to dictate its morality.

It knows that the wiping out of race hatred and race prejudice is one of the first necessities in the development of that class solidarity that is necessary to combat the world forces of capitalism.

Claude McKay, the gifted poet, wasn't slapped. Neither was our comrade, Crystal Eastman.

It is we, the whole working class, that has been slapped. We can slap back thru wiping out all race prejudices, uniting the workers of all colors and developing that class solidarity that will result in the abolition of capitalism and of all its hypocrisies.

France and Belgium are kicking over the traces at the Genoa Conference because they feel Lloyd George is stealing advantages from them for British capitalists. The capture of rich oil concessions for the British oil trust for instance. No wonder President Harding, thru his secretary of state, Hughes, also comes to bat with a refusal to recognize the Soviet Republic. It may take some time, but ultimately capitalism in these countries, France, Belgium, the United States and the rest will also be compelled to surrender.

Capital and Labor

By ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

Capital has always claimed the right to combine. Manufacturers meet and determine prices, even in spite of the great law of supply and demand.

Have the laborers the same right to consult and combine? The rich meet in the bank, the clubhouse or parlor. Workingmen, when they combine, gather in the street. All the organized forces of society are against them. Capital has the army and the navy, the legislative, judicial and executive departments.

Where the rich combine it is for the purpose of exchanging ideas. When the poor combine it is a conspiracy. If they act in concert, if they really do something, it is a mob. If they defend themselves, it is treason.

Ruthenberg Says Death Chills Seized the Socialist Party Convention at Cleveland enthusiasm no fervor in what they say.

The proceedings dragged along without a spark of life without an inspiring note. These men and women—mostly elderly men and women—are the last remnant of the faithful who cherish something which had reality in their younger days and who are unable to let go now that premature old age has come and death is near.

Recalls 1912 Convention

As I watched this convention at work my mind went back to the Socialist Party convention of 1912. Three hundred delegates sat in that convention, representing a membership of more than 100,000.

There was life, there was virility. In that convention some of the elderly men who sit in this convention repeating the old phrases struck the first of the blows which has brought senile decay co-incident with the "coming of age."

They drove out of the party the industrialist left with their anti-sabotage, anti-force and narrow definition of political action constitutional clauses.

My mind went back to the St. Louis Convention of 1917. A good many of these same elderly men sat in that convention, but for once their machine was unable to control.

To St. Louis there came a host of young worker-delegates determined to place the Socialist Party on record in opposition to the war. All the intrigue of the old leaders could not stop them; opposition, open and secret, was swept aside. A ringing declaration and program of action in opposition to the war was adopted.

But the old reactionary leaders kept the party machinery in their control and proceeded to sabotage the work of the convention by refusing to make an aggressive fight in accordance with the St. Louis Program.

These same elderly men were in control of the party machinery in 1919 when the Communist Left Wing won its victory.

Still Keep Party Control

They ruthlessly expelled the revolutionary element from the party holding control of their convention by aid of the police.

They succeeded in throwing the Communists out of the party and holding the party machinery, but with the Communists went the life and strength of the party.

Here in Cleveland they sit around the thing they won, mumbling the old phrases. Since 1919 the organization has lived upon the prestige won in the days when there was a live, enthusiastic fighting element in the party, but even the strength thus gained is waning.

These portly, elderly men know that the thing is dying, but they cannot let go.

They talk about this and that makeshift to infuse new life, but while they utter brave words they utter them in a hopeless spirit.

They know that in the year of "coming of age" death lurks around the corner.

Efforts at Resurrection

For two years after the Left Wing was thrown out of the party, and with it three-fourths of the membership, the reactionary Right Wingers who found themselves in complete control tried to build up their membership thru holding out to the revolutionary workers the bait of some kind of connection with the Third International.

They kept up the pretense of negotiations with the Third International until the Executive Committee of that body told their members that there was only one way in which they could affiliate and that was thru joining the Communist Party.

After receiving that slap in the face the Right Wing leaders no longer concealed their real attitude toward the Communist International.

They joined the ruling class lackeys in denouncing the international fighting organization of the revolutionary workers.

Having failed to infuse new life in their dying organization thru bringing it into contact with the Communist International this convention has done the next best thing by voting to affiliate with the International Working Union of Socialist Parties, better known as the Two-and-a-half International.

It Comes to Anchor?

Practically all of the first day's session was given up to the discussion of the question of international affiliation. Three propositions were before the body. The first provided for continuance of the policy adopted at the last convention of not affiliating with any international organizations; the second proposed sending delegates to the next conference of the Two-and-a-Half International, who were to make recommendations and the third for immediate affiliation with the Two-and-a-Half International.

The first proposition received one vote, the second nine votes and the third eleven votes. Thus, after three years of searching for an international haven the Socialist ship comes to anchor—that is, if joining the International of the parties of the vacillating center which is not quite sure whither it is going can be called coming to anchor.

No Platform Adopted

Altho the agenda of the Socialist convention included a proposed Congressional Program, no action was taken upon the matter, and the proposed program was referred to the National Executive Committee for adoption.

The last day and a half of the convention proceedings was taken up by discussion of how much the dues of the organization should be and similar routine matters and the adoption of a series of resolutions.

These resolutions, consisting of the usual pious wishes, cover amnesty for political prisoners, the trial of the miners at Charlestown, West Va., evacuation of Haiti, Pan-American Relations, a pledge of support to the striking miners, greetings to the Jewish Forward and the Negro question.

Another resolution demands the resumption of complete trade and diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia.

This is asked for, not as a working-class demand for the recognition of a working-class government but because "order, sanity and peace cannot be brought into the world, disorganized and distracted by devastating war, without the co-operation of one hundred and fifty millions of human beings constituting Soviet Russia."

The National Executive Committee elected consists of Victor Berger, Morris Hillquit, William H. Henry, James H. Maurer, Edmund T. Melms, George E. Roewer, Jr., and B. Charney Vladeck.

Militant Plea for Solidarity of All Labor Issued by "Amalgamated" Convention

(By Staff Writer for THE WORKER)

CHICAGO.—Sidney Hillman, President of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, opened the Fifth Biennial Convention of the Union now in session here with a bold declaration for industrial unionism and a suggestion interpreted as calling for consolidation of all the Needle Trades' organizations into a single industrial union. This was received with tremendous applause from the Convention. The key passages of Hillman's speech were:—

"I hope that you delegates to the convention will take account and examine the reasons why we have suffered less than most other organizations. In my judgment the real reason for our strength—and I hope that the convention will make it even stronger—is for our form of organization.

"It is because we are not a craft organization. It is because we do not permit an individual group here or there to assume responsibility for the organization as a whole.

"I know it is difficult to speak about industrial organization without the penalty of being proclaimed by the ignorant, or by the enemies of labor, as advocating One Big Union, or some other things that are made to appear very dangerous to the labor movement.

"I hope that you will not be swayed by temporary fears, that you will not be swayed by temporary passion."

"The industrial form of organization has been proven efficient. It protects labor, and not only does it protect labor, but it protects the employers who have made up their minds to deal with labor.

"When we agree the agreement holds for everybody. When we do not agree, we fight unitedly, so that our just cause will [illegible] sponsibility to the industry itself. It carries out its contract, and it carries out its obligations. It is responsible to the community in this city, and the community knows that no small group will precipitate a strike in our organization.

Strengthen Unified Front.

"They know that when the organization puts its stamp on a policy, every man and woman will know it is all right, and it is his or her obligation to accept that policy, because it is the policy of the organization.

"I hope that at this convention we will do everything possible to strengthen that unified front in our own industry.

"I hope I am permitted to express, if nothing else, at least a hope that the same unity will be extended on a larger area.

"May I be permitted to express the hope that in the very near future the delegates from all the needle trades will meet in convention? (Applause.)

"This is no time for division. This is the time for unity, closer and closer unity, because the enemy stands together to fight us, no matter what organization we belong to."

The Convention Responds.

The outline of policies, made in vigorous and unadorned language by its President, brought the Convention to a high key at the start.

Hillman drove his advocacy of industrial unionism beyond the point of "reasonable doubt" by pausing to compliment the leaders of the Chicago Federation of Labor whose recent stand for the consolidation of all craft organizations into the industrial form has raised a furor in the American Federation of Labor.

Significant also was his treatment of the American labor movement as a whole, as tho not regarding the independence of the Amalgamated from the main body of labor as permanent. Thus the Convention was launched in the belligerent spirit of unity.

What Schlossberg Said

Joseph Schlossberg, veteran in the labor movement, secretary of the Amalgamated since its organization in 1914, was introduced by President Hillman, amid great applause.

The warm reception tendered him by the delegates must have made The Forward followers squirm, since Schlossberg has been most

CHICAGO.—The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America has demonstrated that a labor organization with a true class spirit understands the great problems of [illegible] and aims to help to solve [illegible] problems. [illegible] are doing all they can for a practical solution of this problem.

In America, however, the Amalgamated is so far the only labor union that has taken a deep interest in this matter, and instead of being satisfied with words and phrases has approached the problem in a constructive manner.

The general executive board of the Amalgamated has proposed to the convention a detailed plan for aiding the only Workers' Republic in the world in its struggle against the economic demoralization.

This proposal is another example of the spirit of international solidarity that permeates our great clothing workers' union.

Million Dollar Corporation

The plan that the general executive board puts forth proposes the organization of a million dollar corporation consisting of Amalgamated members that will have as its object aid in the reconstruction of Soviet Russia.

The corporation is to be organized under the laws of the United States. It will aim to establish on a solid basis industrial undertakings in the Soviet Republic.

Machines and other necessary equipment will be supplied to the Russian workers to enable them to develop their productive capacity.

The million dollar corporation is only a beginning. More moneys will be secured when the plan will be popularized among the workers of America.

Amalgamated to Participate

The plan proposes that the general board of the Amalgamated shall be empowered to spend the necessary funds for the organization of this corporation. Subscriptions for shares in the corporation will be solicited as soon as the technical and legal arrangements have been perfected.

The business of the corporation will be based on the following:—

First:—A certain interest (probably [illegible] per cent) will be guaranteed on all investments.

Second:—It will make a stong appeal for working-class solidarity.

It is expected that the broad masses of the organized labor movement in this country will see the importance of this undertaking and contribute to its success. The control of the organization will be entirely in the hands of the organized workers.

It is certain that the convention will vote to subscribe for a certain

Cahan Farce Fails to take at Chicago

(Special to The Worker)

CHICAGO.—After an entrance thru the center aisle, cleverly timed for dramatic effect, Abraham Cahan, editor of The Forward, addressed the convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America (Wednesday) and lauched into an attack on the radicals in the labor unions, especially those in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union [illegible] run for reelection.

Cahan then undertook to justify the activities of the Forward in the notorious Harry Cohen affair. It was a diplomatic mixture of apology and self-justification for past support of Cohen.

(NOTE.—See Page 3 for explanation of this case.).

Then assuming a patronizing tone he declared he had always been willing to give advice and assistance to unions, and he was ready now to help the Amalgamated.

Turning toward Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated, and thumping the table, Cahan declared there was misunderstanding in the Harry Cohen affair, because there were some things he couldn't tell Hillman at this time.

At the conclusion of his speech the applause was notably weak.

Hillman immediately arose and replied in a few short, sharp sentences that rang out ever the tense audience like volleys of rifle fire:

"We will legislate the affairs and destiny of the Amalgamated ourselves. We appreciate advice to keep politics out of our organization, and what is more, we have the power to enforce it.

"It is the Amalgamated and the Amalgamated alone that kept the sweatshop from the clothing workers."

Without mentioning any names Hillman referred forcefully to "those who have participated in helping our enemies to destroy us," plainly meaning those who aided the Cohen gangs in their attacks on the Amalgamated. (Thunderous applause.)

Then Hillman quickly introduced Edward N. Nockels, Secretary, Chicago Federation of Labor. The surprise appearance of the C. F. of L. leader aroused tremendous enthusiasm.

Nockles gently expressed the hope that the Amalgamated would become affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. He mentioned John Fitzpatrick (loudly cheered). He praised the Amalgamated's spirit of solidarity and generous help for other unions in trouble. He demanded that all American Labor see the Mooney-Billings case thru and get them out.

Despite the tense excitement the remarkable Unity increases with each event. The Right Wing Opposition is hardly discernible among the delegates.

Don't Defend Your Home! It's Treason!

New Line-Up in Labor Movement

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers has cleared up one point on which there was some little confusion.

Developments at the gathering prove conclusively that there is no essential difference between reactionary labor leaders who reject the class struggle and those, who, like Schlesinger, mouth the phrases of the social revolution but repudiate it in deed.

To anyone familiar with the political expedients adopted by labor bureaucrats when threatened with defeat there is a good deal of amusement to be derived from witnessing the spectacle of "Socialists" descending to the low level of trickery, intimidation and fraud and the use of the hokum liberally splashed around for years by every international union president around election time.

The "left" elements in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union are to be congratulated on having secured this very desirable result. If they accomplish nothing else their work will have been worth while.

We have always contended that Sam Gompers, Morris Hillquit, "Charley" Ervin, George E. Roewer, Abe Cahan, members of the rescue force rushed to the assistance of Schlesinger, belonged to the same camp.

"Down with the mischief makers," was the slogan of Abe, according to "The Call." Concerning this staunch friend of officialdom it is enough to say that he delivered a bitter tirade against the Red Trade Union International at the convention, while his paper, the "Forward," on Monday, gave a seven-column head to a greeting to the convention from the Red Trade Union International—"sent thru the 'Forward'." This is Jesuitism of a type calculated to turn the followers of Ignatius Loyola green with envy.

The high light in the somewhat incoherent appeal of "Charley" Ervin was; "Your business is yours and no one else's." Just how the one and only apostle of Jeffersonian democracy reconciled this momentous utterance with his presence on the convention platform is a matter for his own conscience.

Morris Hillquit and George Roewer—lawyers—were also members of this devoted band of proletarian rescuers. They, too, were for unity—provided the status quo was maintained and no policy adopted that would interfere with the collection of liberal fees for legal services.

As for the crafty Sam, he needs the unit vote of the Ladies' Garment Workers at the next A. F. of L. convention and is there-

SCRANTON, PA.—The State Federation of Labor, in session here, after listening to Miss Maud Schwartz, speaking for the Trade Union Famine Relief, unanimously endorsed that organization on motion of Earl Gunther, representing the Stage Employees of Pittsburgh. A collection for the famine relief was taken among the delegates. The sum of $87.00 was donated.

The keen interest that organized labor is taking in the coal strike was shown when Dave Fowler, organizer for the United Mine Workers in the West Virginia district, addressed the convention.

Except when the convention hall was swept by a storm of applause at some telling point, a pin could have been heard to drop as the delegates listened to the story of the miners' fight for freedom.

PROTEST POLICE FRAME-UP! ATTEND MASS MEETING, WORKERS' HALL, 1347 [illegible] FRIDAY, MAY [illegible]

[illegible]aits Return [illegible]f Jim Larkin

By THOMAS J. O'FLAHERTY

Jim Larkin, General Secretary of the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union, who was convicted in April, 1920, on a charge of criminal anarchy together with Ferguson, Ruthenberg, Gitlow, Winitsky and others, was released from Comstock prison after serving 24 months of his sentence on a certificate of reasonable doubt in bail amounting to $15,000.

He was taken to the Tombs from Comstock by members of the Bomb Squad and haled before Judge Finch who again fixed bail at $15,000 pending his trial on another indictment alleging criminal anarchy for an article appearing in the same number of the Revolutionary Age which contained the Manifesto on which he was indicted, convicted and sentenced to from five to ten years imprisonment by Justice Bartow S. Weeks in 1920. Since then Judge Weeks has gone to the happy hunting grounds.

In addition to the two indictments there are other charges involving violation of the Immigration Laws pending against Larkin. A deportation warrant is in the possession of the authorities which it is expected will be executed as soon as the other indictments are disposed of.

Larkin's appeal from his conviction on the criminal anarchy charge will be heard in Albany, June 6.

Much interest is manifested among the Irish workers over his release. Increasing dissatisfaction among the workers with the tactics of the present administration of the Irish labor movement renders Larkin's release at this moment particularly interesting. Should the previous verdict be rescinded and Larkin allowed to return to Ireland he would appear on the troubled arena in Ireland with a prestige enhanced by his sacrifice here in America in behalf of the revolutionary movement, and would be in a position to infuse the old fighting spirit into the Irish Transport Workers' Union once the terror of the Irish bourgeoisie.

As evidence of the esteem in which Larkin is held by the Irish workers and their dissatisfaction with Liberty Hall officialdom, we quote the following resolution passed by a monster mass meeting held in the city of Dublin on the date of the general strike (or general lockout) called by the Irish labor leaders as a protest against the use of armed force by the contending parties in the present political confusion.

"Be it resolved that this mass meeting of Irish workers, citizens of the Irish Republic condemn the action of the Irish Labor Party in forcing this lockout in support of the Free State and that we further demand the release and return of Jim Larkin to his former position as leader of the Irish Labor Movement."

Tho Larkin left Ireland in 1914, he still retains his position as General Secretary of the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union which has a membership of 140,000 and is an up-to-date industrial union, with branches in every town and village in Ireland.

Jim Larkin's return to his native country will be a day of rejoicing for the Irish workingclass and for the capitalists it will mean plenty of trouble.

The Bindery Workers' Union of Cleveland, Ohio, has endorsed the amalgamation resolution of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

In concluding his argument against the [illegible] for industrializing the American Labor movement, Mr. Gompers briefly reviews the history of various political and industrial organizations. He says:

> The labor movement has also been attacked by those who have held that political parties offered to the workers their best hope of salvation. The Socialist Labor Party and the Socialist Party each in their day made glowing promises and each in the end demonstrated its unfitness and futility. The Socialist Labor Party has left but a flickering shadow. THE SOCIALIST PARTY IS A WITHERED AND BEDRAGGLED WRETCH SEEKING SHELTER IN WHATSOEVER HAVEN MAY BE RECKLESS ENOUGH OR GULLIBLE ENOUGH TO TAKE IT IN.

Gompers has described himself because it is in his withered arms that the remnants and the renegades of the Socialist Party have found haven and it is his senile kisses that welcome them to their last resting place.

Into his American Alliance for Labor and Democracy—financed from the Wilson slush fund—went the frightened hares of "socialism" when the war-clouds threatened; with their yellow hearts pounding madly in their throbbing bosoms the William English Wallings, the John Spargoes, the Chester M. Wrights, the Charles Edward Russells, the A. M. Simons, and the Winfield R. Gaylords all sought sanctuary under the Gompers' banner, and all were made welcome in return for their outpouring of venomous bile upon all who trod not servilely the Wilsonian path to destruction.

It was only the other day that Gompers paid tribute to Meyer London, "socialist" congressman, whose activities in congress in behalf of the workers are best represented by a great and aching void.

To-day we find him joining hands with the Hillquits and the Ervins in behalf of another "socialist," Schlessinger, of the International Ladies' Garment Workers. No longer does the "socialist" Call carry carping criticism of Gompers and the Gompers' policies. On the contrary it caters to his reactionary henchmen in official positions.

After all there is really nothing strange in all this seeming contradiction. Bitterly as they hate one another there is something else these individuals hate—and fear—more.

It is the rise of a movement of the workers that will judge them on their merits and—cast them into the scrap—heap with the rest of the carrion of capitalism.

Birds of a feather do not always flock together.

The turkey buzzard sometimes roosts with the vulture when disturbed at the feast.

The Roll Call Campaign

The Roll Call Campaign is at its height. Every section of the country, all parts of Canada and other parts of the world know about the Roll Call Campaign of the Friends of Soviet Russia.

More than 200,000 Roll Calls were sent out, and the returns have been magnificent. Nothing done by the American workers can compare with this drive.

The prize thus far belongs to Chicago. Chicago undertook to circularize a large number of papers and periodicals. The Chicago branch, counting some of the livest wires in the country, flooded the whole Chicago district with the Roll Calls. And the returns have been in proportion. NEARLY $1,000 EVERY DAY HAS BEEN SENT TO THE NATIONAL OFFICE FROM CHICAGO!

It can be done where the spirit urges one.

In other parts, the campaign is still in full swing. Even in the mining districts, where 750,000 miners and their families are in deadly struggle with the coal masters of the country—even in the hills where, only during strikes, the miners learn the color of American skies and get acquainted with their families—even where hunger stalks among the working population of the United States, the Roll Call has penetrated—and funds come for the starving in Soviet Russia.

International working-class solidarity is becoming stronger. It is the sole hope of the working class. Suffering is forging the bonds. Suffering holds them tight.

Some Branch Activities

LOS ANGELES held a May Day picnic and up to the time of writing had cleared a profit of $1,000.

EVERETT, Wash., held a Baby Shower which was a "glorious success." Women of all classes, working women, church women, merchants, boys and girls—everybody put his full energy into the affair, and the result was a tremendous success.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., induced the 48th Convention of the Lake Erie Section of the Social Turners to contribute $100, for the purchase of tractors, and moved that each local circulate subscription lists for the same purpose. Four tractors and gang plows will, in all probability, be the contribution of this section of the Social Turners.

BUTTE, Mont., recently held a tag day and dance and netted $312.

NEW YORK CITY just held a tag day that brought in more than $10,000. The New York Branch is arranging a river excursion, with every manner of entertainment provided.

Activities Among the Women

SYRACUSE has arranged for a motion picture benefit to last four days. Russian famine slides will also be shown.

CANTON, O., Women's Committee is giving a bazaar on May 30.

MONTREAL, Can., has organized a women's branch which has connected up with the National Women's Division of the F. S. R.

SUPERIOR, Wis., writes: "The work among the women in Superior is well on its way. We are not working separately as a women's organization, but with the executive committee of the F. S. R. At the tag day of Superior, over 50 Finnish women were canvassing. More than 30 of our women went to Duluth and assisted there. Five women were at Cloquet. The whole city seemed covered with tags. Population is 5,000 and over $500 worth of tags was sold."

THE BIG CONTRIBUTIONS OF THE TWO WEEKS

Chicago, $9,000; Lithuanian Section of F. S.R., Brooklyn, $3,813; Appeal to Reason, $2,778; Hungarian Section, New York City, $1,130; Cleveland, $816; Seattle $[illegible]; Springfield, Mass., $[illegible]; San Francisco, $[illegible]; Spravedlnost, Chicago, $322; Women's Division F.S.R., Butte, Mont., $312; Haverhill, Mass., $300; Gardner, Mass., $300; New York City, $[illegible]; P. MAY DAY IN ITALY

ROME.—Protests in the capitalist press are continuing against the action of the Italian government in declaring May 1 a national holiday. The cabinet ordered the holiday to avoid making an issue with the thousands of government employees on railroads, telephone systems and elsewhere who had announced their intention of observing the international revolutionary labor day by not reporting for work. The Corriere della Sera, organ of the Roman financial interests, declares the government has given official recognition to revolution by the proclamation.

In spite of the fact that Judge Cardoza of the New York Court of Appeals has ordered the release on bail of the men convicted here a year and a half ago of alleged anarchy, saying he found "reasonable doubt whether the statute had been properly construed," the state criminal anarchy act is running full blast in the trial courts of New York City.

While Isaac E. Ferguson, Charles E. Ruthenberg, Benjamin Gitlow, Harry Winitsky and James Larkin were being given their liberty pending decision by the Court of Appeals in their cases, New York City prosecutors, judges and juries were convicting and sentencing to long terms in prison three women under this same law which was enacted 20 years ago as a result of the agitation created subsequent to the assassination of President McKinley.

The Latest Chapter

The latest chapter in the story of this savage wielding of this statute as a lash over the heads of workers was enacted last Monday by Judge Louis D. Gibbs, in the Bronx County court, and is as follows:

Mrs. Minnie Kolnin, of 336 Beekman Ave., was sentenced to serve from two years and nine months to seven years.

Mrs. Anna Leisman, of 702 East 138th St., was sentenced to serve from one year and nine months to six years.

Mrs. Tina Jurson, of 334 Beekman Ave., who was convicted April 24, will come up for sentence before Judge Gibbs, Monday, May 15th.

Both Mrs. Kolnin and Mrs. Jurson have husbands living, and Mrs. Jurson has a small child. Mrs. Leisman is a widow and earns her living as a worker on men's hats. All are natives of Russia.

Distributed May Day Leaflets

All three of the prisoners were arrested on the same day, April 30, 1921. Mrs. Kolnin and Mrs. Jurson were seized as they were distributing May Day circulars for a mass meeting held under the auspices of the National Defense Committee.

In commenting on the sentences imposed, Edgar Owens, secretary of the National Defense Committee, said:

"Judge Gibbs told Mrs. Jurson that if she came into court prepared to 'tell the truth,' he would be inclined to deal leniently with her, because, he said, the district attorney had informed him that she was 'a dupe of Mrs. Kalinin' and not primarily responsible.

"The judge's insolence seems to know no limits. Not satisfied with conducting the case in an atmosphere of prejudice, and brow-beating the defendants all thru the trials, he deliberately insulted Mrs. Jurson with his damnable insinuations, that if she would 'tell the truth,' he would be lenient."

Judge Hits at Soviet Rule

Repeating scenes enacted during the espionage trials during the war, notably that of Rose Pastor Stokes, at Kansas City, Mo., Judge Gibbs, while sentencing the women, launched into an ignorant and ranting tirade against Soviet Rule in Russia.

"The Soviet Government," declared the Court, "presents a queer picture at Genoa, trying with one hand to get a loan from all the reg'lar governments an' on the other hand havin' its representatives all over the woild attemptin' to overt'row these governments. The Soviets want to overt'row the very governments from which they are tryin' to borrow money.

"If women like Mrs. Kalinin had their way," the Judge continued, turning toward her, "the American Government would be overt'rown in blood and ruins. It would not be an exaggeration to say that Mrs. Kalinin is one of the outposts of the Russian Soviet Government for the overt'row of reg'lar governments."

An effort will be made to appeal the cases of all three comrades. They are now being held at the Bronx County Jail.

In order that 1,000,000 persons may sign an appeal to President Harding urging the release of 113 remaining federal war-opinion prisoners, and that this appeal may be presented to the President before he leaves Washington for his summer vacation, May 20, has been set aside by the General Defense Committee of Chicago as National Amnesty Day.

Russia's Boys and Girls Send Thanks to America's Children

The following cable has just been received by the National Office of the Friends of Soviet Russia, demonstrating the appreciation of the children of Soviet Russia for the help that has been sent them by the Famine Scout Clubs of America.

Moscow, Soviet Russia,
May 7, 1922.

Friends of Soviet Russia,
210 West 13th Street,
New York City.

To the Children of America:

Dear Comrades: We send our love to you and our appreciation for what you have done for us who suffer here from hunger. Your help has taken us from the Famine District where we were cold and without food and placed us in the city where we now have comfortable homes, food and clean clothes and where we have teachers. You will never know how you have helped us and how we love you for it and we never forget that those in America understand our sorrows. Comrades, we are all the children of workers and peasants and we must all struggle on until all who are hungry and cold all over the world are fed and clothed. We wish you success for your efforts on Children's Week, for there are thousands who still suffer along the banks of the great Volga.

The Russian Children International Workers Relief Committee.

The Famine Scout Clubs of America are a branch of the Friends of Soviet Russia. Clubs have sprung up all over the country. May 15 to May 22 has been set aside as "Children's Week," to make a drive upon the children, to intensify their activities and promote organization.

The children scout in twos; the funds they collect go directly to Soviet Russia in the form of food—the gift of American to Russian children.

Second Anniversary in Sacco-Vanzetti Case

BOSTON, MASS., May 5.—Today is the second anniversary of the arrest of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, active in the labor movement of New England. They were taken off a street car in Brockton on the evening of May 5, 1920, but did not learn until several days later that a capital charge was being prepared against them.

A motion for a new trial has just been filed on the basis of two affidavits, one a confession of perjury by Louis Polser, "identification witness," the other new testimony by an eye witness of the crime who has just been located.

The defense has made it clear in its official statements that even more significant new evidence, bearing directly upon the question of who were the actual authors of the crimes, may be expected in the near future.

The greatest international protest since the Mooney case was created by the news of a death verdict against Sacco and Vanzetti. The testimony has been declared inadequate and the surrounding circumstances prejudicial by all impartial observers.

WAKE UP THIS GOVERNOR

SAN FRANCISCO. — Stating that the Governor of California has in the past refused to take action in the Mooney case on the ground that "labor is not interested," the Mooney defense committee urges the entire trade union movement to remove the Governor's last excuse by adopting strong resolutions, stating labor's position in regard to the California "frame-up" on two active members of the organized labor movement.

[illegible] Circle R[illegible]

When the yellow Socialist majority of the Workmen's Circle Convention at Toronto, Canada, rode roughshod over the organization's laws and traditions, it evidently did not bargain for the revolt that is already sweeping the 100,000 members of the organization from one end of the country to the other.

Protest meetings are being held in all cities where there are branches of the Workmen's Circle, and great enthusiasm is being developed for the national protest convention called for Sunday, June 4, to repudiate the reactionary and illegal actions of the Toronto "majority."

The attack on the Jewish Communist daily, the "Freiheit," and the war declared against the Workers Party, are samples of how the yellow "majority" swept aside all the precedents of the organization, which had always maintained a non-partisan position as between the various political tendencies of labor.

The Workmen's Circle membership is also aroused over the resolution demanding the release of the so-called "political prisoners," in Soviet Russia, including Menshevik counter-revolutionists who had joined it making war upon the Soviet Republic and the Socialists—Revolutionists who carried on a terrorist campaign against the Soviet officials, even attempting the assassination of Nikolai Lenin.

One of the first protest meetings was that held at Clinton Hall, New York City, at which resolutions were adopted as follows:

Adopt Resolution

"We, New York members of the Workmen's Circle, assembled May 8, Clinton Hall, to receive a report of the proceedings of the Toronto, Canada, Convention, declare as follows:

"We consider the behavior of the majority of the convention, particularly their resolutions about Soviet Russia, the Workers Party and its Jewish organ, the Freiheit, as a betrayal of the principles of the Workmen's Circle.

"We hold that the Workmen's Circle, as an organization, in which are found members of all political groupings in the labor movement, cannot officially become a part of a certain tendency in opposition to other tendencies in the general political labor movement.

"We hold that the majority of the convention, by deciding to demand that the Soviet government should free its enemies, which have fought with arms in their hands against the Workers' Republic, has taken a stand with the counter-revolutionary forces.

"We hold that the Workmen's Circle, as a labor organization, has no right to place itself in opposition to the revolutionary wing of the labor movement, the Workers Party, and certainly not against the vanguard of the world revolution—the Soviet Government of Russia.

Urge Protest Convention

"We, therefore, recommend that the committee that has called this mass meeting together, shall call a protest convention, at an early date, of branches of the Workmen's Circle which shall take the necessary steps to wipe out the shameful deeds with which the majority of the convention have besmirched the Workmen's Circle.

"The proceedings of the Protest Convention shall be conducted in such a manner as to maintain the integrity and unity of our organization, but which will clear it of the betrayal of our principles, that the majority of the delegates have permitted at Toronto.

"We express our fervent hope that all branches to whom the integrity and the purity of principle of the Workmen's Circle are dear, that these will aid in the success of the forthcoming protest convention."

Labor and the Church

By CALEB HARRISON

Conflict arose between thinkers ever since Sociology made its appearance as a new science, and challenged the old religious ideas regarding the forces that really cause social movements and shape institutions. One of the reasons for the existence of religious institutions is to put a screen around and lend the enchantment of "social service" to all the enterprizes promoted, and institutions erected by a ruling class for the purpose of acquiring and protecting some material advantage.

This the church could easily do as long as the belief was commonly held that social institutions were of divine origin. When the economic laws are studied that govern the movements of men it is discovered that the prime factor is naked economic self-interest. Of course if this truth becomes widely known it is then no longer possible to keep up the delusions about divine origin.

Nowadays the influence of the church is wavering, due to the growing understanding of the people that the institutions of modern society are class made, class maintained, and class controlled.

As the class society of capitalism grows older the antagonisms between the two main classes, capitalist and wage laborers, widens, deepens and becomes more intensified; class feelings develop on both sides to such a point that the minds of all men dwell constantly upon the questions that grow out of the class struggle. When such a condition exists, of course men are not interested in such matters as love, brotherhood, forgiveness of sin, and the kingdom of God—subjects that are prated by the clergy in their effort to draw the minds of men (working men particularly) from the realities of life.

Two new books have appeared written by clergymen in which again the effort is made to bring the workingmen back to the church. One is by Rev. John Haynes Holmes, entitled "New Churches for Old." (Dodd, Mead and Co.), in which the author seeks to get the workers and all liberal thinkers interested in the new church, the Community Church. The writer devotes 35 pages describing the collapse of the churches by pointing out how they fail to influence the minds of men to-day. He ascribes this failure of the churches to their becoming sectarian and orthodox, which is responsible for their failure to meet the spiritual needs of the people. The church is held from the people, according to the author, largely because it concerns itself with dogmas that were drawn out of issues of ancient or medieval times; questions that have no bearing upon the real life of to-day. The church is held from partaking in present-day life by the influence of wealth that controls the church. His conclusion is that the new church should be kept free from ancient dogmas and become an institute that concerns itself with the reality of modern life; and that the church should be entirely free from the influence of wealth. The inspiration of the church should be "Democracy," and the people will [illegible]

Winitsky Gives 2 Years Prison Pay for Relief

Harry M. Winitsky, just released from prison, has turned in his pay for two years' labor as a Communist prisoner, to the Friends of Soviet Russia to help boost the famine relief fund. The contribution was accompanied by a letter as follows:

"Attached hereto is a check for the sum of $8.48 which represents the compensation I received from the State of New York for the two years I spent in prison. I give this salary to the Friends of Soviet Russia toward the wonderful work that they are doing for our comrades in Russia who are valiantly struggling to maintain the Workers' Republic in the face of the united front of the capitalist class of the entire world. I appeal to all the men, women and children of the working class to give, and give liberally to the Friends of Soviet Russia, to contribute their all, for the splendid work that this organization is doing.

HARRY M. WINITSKY.

The other book, "The Labor Movement and the Church," (The Stratford Co.), by John M. C. Wilson, attacks the problem from a different angle. He wants to find a remedy by inducing the workingmen to come back to church and put the Christian spirit into the union movement. Upon the ideals of Christianity the workingman should labor side by side with his brothers (I presume the capitalists) to realize the kingdom of God. This impracticable dream is worthy of a little comment, the writer has no conception of the laws that govern social movements.

There was a time in the past when the church was becoming socialistic or that socialism was a realisation of real Christianity. These two books—one an appeal to make the church over to fit the needs of modern society, the other an appeal to the labor movement to make itself over to fit the needs of the church, are both glaring confessions that there is nothing in the church nor in Christianity that can contribute anything of worth to modern life. Such religions are dead. Let them rest.

[illegible] to Pacific Coast Soon

William Z. Foster is going to make an extended speaking trip to all the principal cities west of Chicago. This announcement was made by the Trade Union Educational League, of which Foster is Secretary-Treasurer.

His talks will be on "The Crisis in the American Labor Movement," and he will outline in full the program of the League, replying to the attacks made by Gompers.

In all of his forty years' record of opposition to everything progressive or radical, Mr. Gompers has never before displayed so much bitterness, or attacked so viciously, as he is now attacking the Trade Union Educational League and Foster.

Aided by Capitalist Press

The capitalist dailies of the entire country are being filled with his slanderous fulminations, and the union journals are lining up as strong auxiliaries in the same campaign.

Gompers himself, and a flock of his lieutenants, are going over the country holding special meetings to organize the resistance to the League and its program. Rarely is such a spectacle of panic and furious denunciation witnessed as that with which the standpatters are greeting the League and its program of trade union progress.

Foster's trip West will undoubtedly mark another step in the progress of this fight.

The wideawake rank and file are rallying to the Trade Union Educational League. Particularly in the railroad industry has the program of amalgamation of all railroad unions into one received a tremendous impetus.

In the West the unions are afire with the program, and demands have been pouring in for Foster to address meetings thruout the West.

League Gets Big Results

Just previous to the launching of the present campaign, Foster covered all the principal cities between Chicago and the Atlantic; the result of that trip was the present great campaign which has brought these attacks from Gompers.

The trip from Chicago to the Pacific Coast will, without doubt, become just as important as the previous trip did.

The villification and slander now poured upon the League and Foster arises from the fact that they are getting real results, something that radical efforts in the past have largely failed in doing. The League and its program have become living realities in the life of the trade unions.

The reactionary leaders, aware of the amount of unorganized rebellion against their traitorous leadership, are panic stricken; for the first time they face an effective challenge to their bankrupt leadership.

Help Boost Foster Meetings

Their furious denunciations of Foster and his program should be the final proof to the radicals of the entire trade union movement, that at last they have the opportunity to line up with something that is going to get results, a movement of the rank and file that will strike home.

It should be their cue to get busy in the League at once. For the present, the comrades West of Chicago should see that their cities arrange a meeting for Foster, if it has not already been done by the local League of their place.

Seek Russian Recognition at Dallas Convention

(By the Federated Press)

DALLAS, TEX.—American recognition of Russia and immediate opening of trade relations in order to give employment to American workers was demanded here by the convention of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees.

The convention took a second advanced position in American labor policy when it indorsed the amalgamation of craft unions into industrial unions, each to cover a single industry.

fore willing, as every faker is, to discover new virtues in ancient [illegible].

All the hullabaloo about the Communists in the union and the expulsion of a few "leftists" is merely the continuation of a yellow policy designed to placate the employers; to convince them that the Ladies' Garment Workers' organization is just as spineless and innocuous as other organizations subscribing to the Gompers' policy of a fair day's work for a fair day's pay.

It is on this basis that the Schlesinger forces want unity, and it is just here that the policy of the two factions divide sharply.

The "lefts" stand for a fighting union led by workers, not by lawyers. They want a union that is something more than a medium for transmitting tributes to the Schlesingers and Hillquits; they want a job organization and not a vote-gathering agency for yellow politicians.

The organization is facing a crisis; so is every other labor union in the United States; labor organizations are chronically facing crises by virtue of the fact that they are in opposition to the ruling class.

Officialdom constantly bases a hypocritical plea for unity on the statement that a crisis is imminent and that the anointed ones are needed as never before.

Occasionally, however, some official accomplishes organic unity with Mother Earth, but the labor movement goes on just the same, proving that the mold is not broken when a "labor leader" is made.

The striking similarity in the mental characteristics of Gomperses, Hillquits and Schlesingers needs further mention. They all want unions and they all want unity; they want these very desirable and necessary things, however, only on condition that they are the "right" kind of unions and the kind of unity that admits of no change in policy and tactics.

Much of the anti-administration sentiment in the Ladies' Garment Workers is the result of the use of the injunction by the union on the advice of Hillquit.

No single thing did more to destroy the morale of the union than this attempted use of the employers' weapon—fighting it has been about the only issue on which American labor has ever united.

The lawyer-led element of the Ladies' Garment Workers broke this unity and now attempts to foist the blame on the left elements—the group in the American labor movement that has been responsible for what little progress labor has made.

Gompers does not believe in independent political action on the part of the workers; the rest of this gang does, but this is a minor difference.

The great bond is a common hatred of the Third International and of revolutionary action by the workers that leaves no room for well-fed leaders who have divorced themselves from everything but the profits and the pleasures of the struggle.

The line-up at the convention of the Ladies' Garment Workers is the coming one in the American labor movement. It will be found that unity of the yellow Socialists and the ignorant and corrupt trade union officials will be easy of accomplishment.

That it has been so long in coming is due to the weakness of the revolutionary movement; its increasing strength and activity is rapidly clarifying issues hitherto obscured. This is the first necessary step.

Ironically enough, the reactionaries must, in spite of themselves, in this matter render invaluable aid as they did at Cleveland.

Amalgamated Meets New Problems on Its Early Battle Scenes

By CARROLL BINDER

(Staff Correspondent of The Worker and Federated Press)

CHICAGO.—Returning to the scene of the bitter struggles which gave birth to their union, delegates from all the clothing centers of the United States and Canada are here for the fifth biennial convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

Twelve years ago this city was a notorious sweatshop center and the plight of the clothing workers here was the concern of socially-minded people everywhere.

To-day the 375 delegates who represent 170,000 organized workers enjoying the 44-hour week, living wages and a measure of industrial self-government are taking up measures looking to a larger degree of shop control, creation of unemployment funds and the intellectual and industrial development of the union membership.

Two notable pieces of labor literature were made public on the opening day. One a handsomely bound history of the Chicago Clothing Workers prepared by Dr. Leo Wolman of the Amalgamated Research Department, the other a 350-page report of the general executive board to the convention.

The report tells the story of the union since the Boston convention two years ago with detailed history of the New York lockout, chapters on the struggles and triumphs in the various other clothing centers, the educational work of the union, its financial undertakings, including the bank to be opened in Chicago July 1, and the services of the Amalgamated to the workers of other crafts and other nations in time of strike and famine.

"We have today 148 local unions and 16 joint boards in 36 cities, 14 states, two provinces; $240,703.81 was contributed by the union to outside organizations. During the New York lockout $1,165,206 was expended for relief." These sentences, lifted from the report, give some idea of the work of the union.

"The starving multitudes of 1910, struggling with empty pockets and empty stomachs against industrial tyranny, have given place to a model and powerful organization of Chicago clothing workers," declares the report. "The change from 1910 to 1922 brought about by the solidarity of the workers is in itself an object lesson of the great possibilities of that conscious self-elevation that must inevitably lead to self-emancipation."

number of the shares. The consideration of this question by the convention will result in one of its most interesting discussions.

With this action the Amalgamated opens up new avenues along which the entire labor movement in this country should proceed.

The Amalgamated is serving as an example of the true spirit of international working-class solidarity. Its activities in support of the Soviet Republic will be an inspiration to the workers.

Minor Addresses Convention

Robert Minor, member of the central executive committee of the Workers Party, addressed the convention on Tuesday.

Minor reviewed the open shop movement in this country, urging the workers to fight it with all their power. He then referred to the Genoa Conference as a sign of capitalist deterioration, an effort on the part of capitalist nations to preserve the bankrupt Versailles Peace Treaty.

"At this conference," he said, "there is only one statesman who has evinced courage and displayed any outlook upon the future. This is the chairman of the Russian Soviet delegation, Tchitcherin."

When Tchitcherin's name was mentioned the whole convention rose to its feet and the big hall resounded with cheers.

"Only the workers can save the world from destruction," he said. "The workers must be taught that they can achieve everything thru a united struggle for it. We in America are only at the beginning of a real organized labor movement.

Minor depicted the spirit of the Russian workers who helped save Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings from the gallows and urged the delegates not to forget Sacco and Vanzetti who are in a similar plight in Massachusetts. He described a parade of the Red Army, which he said was the strongest in the world. He called on the workers to aid in the rebuilding of Soviet Russia. Minor's remarks were received with enthusiasm.

Ben Gitlow, just released from prison, who is a member of the Amalgamated, received a great ovation as he was presented to the convention for an address on behalf of the National Defense Committee. He appealed to the Amalgamated members to stand solid with those who are being persecuted by the ruling class in this country.

the Mexican Confederation of Labor, spoke to the convention at the special request of President James H. Maurer.

His talk struck a new note of internationalism. The delegates listened first with surprise and then with a new understanding of the status of labor in Mexico as Haberman told them that the things which seemed of so much importance to them—the eight-hour day, sick benefits, old-age insurance, etc.—were the unquestioned rights of the Mexican workers; that they had them all and were now "fightig for industrial democracy and the dictatorship of the workers."

Haberman expressed surprise at the presence of preachers on the labor platform and exhibited a copy of a Mexican church publication which openly stood for the open shop and the destruction of the Mexican Confederation of Labor.

He read a telegram from Felipe Carillo, president of Yucatan, telling him that 2,500 tons of wheat were ready for shipment to the victims of the Russian famine.

"Are you, who have so much more to give, doing as well?" Haberman asked the delegates.

James H. Maurer will be unopposed for the presidency this year, but Secretary Quinn has resigned because of failing eyesight and will be replaced by a younger man. Peggy Delbare, delegate from the coal miners of the Pittsburgh district, is being mentioned for the position.

For Independent Political Action.

The Labor Party of Pennsylvania held the first session of its convention in the evening following the adjournment of the federation. Fifty delegates were present, and after listening to a report from President Cutts of Altoona and Secretary Fuller of Pittsburgh, re-elected both these officers by acclamation.

Secretary Fuller reported that the interest taken in the plan for independent political action and the size of the crowds attending the meetings are without precedent in his experience. Eight new branches have been formed in the past few weeks, and he stated that only because of lack of sufficient funds the organization would show still greater strides.

The state federation is already on record for a labor party, and at this convention steps will be taken to rally the 750,000 workers of the state for an aggressive campaign.

Pittsburgh Waking Up

Pittsburgh, contrary to its general custom, appears to have sent several progressive delegates and a number of them were present as delegates to the labor party convention. It is this reactionary center, where the labor movement has been in the control of the employers' agents for years, that has always been the stumbling block in the way of independent political action on the part of the labor movement.

Reports made to the convention by miners' delegates from the coking coal region are a flat contradiction of the stories carried in the capitalist press to the effect that the miners in districts formerly non-union are going back to work. Peggy Deldare stated that the three big Leisenring mines of the Frick interests were down; this is a barometer of the former non-union fields; if the Frick group cannot keep their men working, no independent mines will produce an ounce of coal.

Depression Hits Convention

That the labor unions have suffered from the industrial depression is shown by the fact that this is the smallest convention of the State Federation for eight years, or since 1914.

The Central Labor Council of Scranton staged an entertainment for the delegates in the evening which was unique by reason of the fact that all entertainers had been developed from the ranks of the labor unions and were still members of organized labor.

Previous to the opening of the program, President Maurer was presented with a clock, the frame of which was carved from a single piece of anthracite coal and with a ring set with "sulphur-stone" found in the local mineral deposits. He responded with a short speech in which he briefly reviewed the history of Pennsylvania labor and paid a tribute to President Powderly of the old Knights of Labor, who taught him to read and write.

Right Terror Is Invoked at Cleveland, O.

(Special to THE WORKER.)

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—As an adjunct to the Gompers-Schlesinger-Socialist attack on the "lefts" before the convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union here, we now have the terroristic tactics invoked by the more belligerent right wingers.

The labor editor of The Freiheit Jewish daily organ of the Workers Party, was the first victim, the rights taking exception to some of the articles he had written.

He was rescued by a group of left delegates, but Delegate Silverman, one of those defending the Freiheit's editor, was later beaten up by the "right" gangsters.

The fight was carried to the floor of the convention, when the "rights" in power tried to deny admission to the Freiheit's representative. President Schlesinger thought this was going too far and ruled the motion out of order.

The Committees at Work.

Monday and Tuesday of this week were spent by the committees preparing their reports.

There are 300 resolutions affecting the clothing industry that are being considered by the convention.

The left elements brought in a series of resolutions aiming at strengthening the union and making it more democratic.

Urge Needle Trade Alliance.

On the question of the needle trades alliance the lefts demanded an amalgamation of all the needle crafts into one union. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Journeymen Tailors are for this plan.

The convention voted to revivify the alliance which was established a year ago but which never functioned. This move will probably again remain a dead letter.

The convention voted to establish week-work in the dress industry as in the cloak industry. Piece work is still prevalent in the former.

Voted for amnesty for political prisoners.

Endorsed a strike in the dress and waist industry in Philadelphia to win back conditions lost after the last strike.

Hit Civic Federation.

The left elements brought in resolutions instructing delegates at American Federation of Labor conventions to vote against candidates for office who are officers or members of the National Civic Federation.

The resolutions committee emasculated this resolution to instruct I. L. G. W. U. delegates merely to bring in resolutions at A. F. of L. conventions demanding that officers should sever connections with the Civic Federation.

Schlesinger defended the amended resolution which will give him permission to vote for the re-election of Samuel Gompers.

The coal miners' union long ago forced the late John Mitchell out of the Civic Federation.

Delegate Antonini, of the Italian waist makers, favored the original resolution. The amended resolution carried by vote of 133 to 22.

The resolutions providing for endorsement and financial support to Socialist Party and The Call were opposed by the left elements.

Delegate Julius Hochman, manager of the New York Dressmakers, altho a member of the Socialist Party and staunch defender of the administration, opposed the resolution brought in by administration delegates endorsing the Socialist Party, pointing out that other parties would have the same right to claim an endorsement.

The convention passed resolutions for [illegible] of Soviet Russia.

A resolution criticizing the editor of the official organ of the International, Justice, charging him with making the paper the organ merely of those in authority, was defeated. Vote 126 to 48.

Urge 40-Hour Week

Resolutions urging agitation for the 40-hour and 5-day week in the garment industry were passed.

The General Executive Board was instructed to study propositions for establishing co-operative banks.

The G. E. B. was instructed to start a fund for relief of the striking miners of West Virginia and their families.

Resolutions still pending, being urged by the "right" elements, give the G. E. B. power to take over and manage radical locals.

To demand the release of political prisoners in Soviet Russia. Similar resolution introduced at Workmen's Circle convention.

Resolutions still pending, being urged by "left" elements, provide for the election of general officers by referendum of members after nomination by conventions.

Recall of elected officials.

Referendum on convention decisions.

No more than one local of same trade in same city.

Abolition of overtime.

One joint board or local of International in New York City.

Proportional representation on Joint Board. Now small locals with a few hundred members, which are mostly supported by Joint Board, have as many votes as big locals like Locals Nos. 1 and 9, in New York City, with 11,000 and 7,000 members.

No member of G. E. B. shall serve as paid organizer of the union.

To urge the A. F. of L. to participate in the United Front Congress which the recent Berlin Conference of the Three Internationals will call.

That Harmony Bunk

The conservative "rights" have made a great deal of the so-called conference which was held between the representatives of both groups at the convention.

The Forward ascribed this conference to the speech of Abraham Cahan, who called upon the delegates to forget their differences and line up as one behind Schlesinger.

Much publicity was given to the supposed "truce," which was supposed to have been effected between both sides.

The left delegates felt forced to issue a statement dispelling these illusions.

This statement, which was signed among others by Delegates B. Shane and L. Hyman, managers of Local No. 1 and 9, New York City, the leading left locals in the International, repudiated the allegations that harmony has been effected. They declared that no harmony within the union is possible until certain fundamental changes are brought about for which the left elements stand.

They claim that the expulsions of delegates and the general behavior of the majority of the convention didn't show them to be ready for these changes.

There will, of course, be complete unity within the organization, when the union will be engaged in a struggle with the bosses, as was the case during the last general strike.

The "rights" don't want unity. They only want to talk about it in their efforts to show that the "lefts" are the disturbing element in the organization.

The "harmony bunk" was advanced for publicity purposes only. The Call correspondent at Cleveland wrote in the issue of May 10, as follows:

"The harmony committee did not meet, but the delegates seem to feel that the mere appointment of such a committee and the publicity it received was enough to accomplish the task for which it was called into being."

At press time Schlesinger was still insisting he would not be a candidate for re-election. The Call quotes Schlesinger in its issue of May 10, as follows:

"You may say that there is one thing that is sure and that is that I will not be [illegible]

"That is the capacity to retain eternal youth. An organization that begins to grow old is doomed to be useless, and the sooner it dies the better.

"We must see to it that our organization remains forever young, and that the spirit which animates the enlightened workers today does not die.

"We have, among others, made one great contribution, almost immediately after our lockout of a half a year, on which we spent over $2,000,000, and while many of our members were out of work.

"The spirit in which the contribution was made was not less important.

"The spirit and the message delivered by Brother Hillman to the Russian workers made every dollar that we sent them carry with it a message of love and true human affection.

"We have received greetings from those workers. Here is a message received by this convention from Russia. (Tremendous and prolonged applause.)

"This is the message from the Russian Red Cross, in charge of the relief for the famine sufferers in that country, signed by Soloviev, president of the Russian Red Cross:

"Russian Red Cross sends greetings to Amalgamated convention and in name of 36,000 famine sufferers whose lives Amalgamated has saved thanks devoted comrades in America who in time of their own trouble endured additional hardships that their brothers might live. Need is not over but battle against hunger yet won, but Russian comrades have taken needed courage from your splendid support.

'SOLOVIEV, President,

(The Amalgamated orchestra struck up Russian and Italian labor hymns amid loud and long applause.)

'We have saved 36,000 human lives by our help, which was made possible by our organized power. We can save more." (Applause.)

THE CASE OF HARRY COHEN

Harry Cohen, former manager of the Children's Clothing Workers' organization, a part of the "Amalgamated," was accused of some irregularities in accepting loans from employers.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Here is another installment of the decisions of the second conference of the Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International. The second installment appeared last week and reviewed the disunity efforts of the Amsterdam Trade Union International. This week we publish the resolution on the relations of the Red Trade Union International to the Revolutionary Syndicalists. It is as follows:

The Revolutionary Syndicalists and the Red Trade Union International

On the basis of the fact that all revolutionary trade-union forces have been combined in the Red Trade Union International under whose banner Syndicalist, Communist and non-partisan workers are united and, furthermore, that misunderstandings and even confusion have arisen in certain Syndicalist circles with regard to the resolution of the First Congress of the Red Trade Union International re the relationship to the Communist International, the Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International declares that the resolution in question means in no way the subordination of the trade-unions to the Communist parties, or of the Red Trade Union International to the Communist International, but the unity of all the organized forces of the working class for the purpose of overthrowing the capitalist regime.

As the German syndicalists have at their congress in Düsseldorf expressed their intention of founding a purely Syndicalist International, the Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International cannot but warn all revolutionary organizations against these attempts at splitting and must vehemently protest against this attack upon the unity of the proletariat. At the same time it declares that a sectarian international such as that is foredoomed to utter impotence.

Being convinced that it will prove possible to find a solid foundation for a bloc of all revolutionary forces of the world, the Executive Committee addresses the urgent appeal to all revolutionary trade-unions, including those which have pronounced against joining the Red Trade Union International, to participate in our Second Congress.

Bukharin Writes on New Economic Forms Developing in Russia

By NIKOLAI BUKHARIN.

The form of our economic life now coming into existence, is commonly designated by the term "State Capitalism."

Our economic conditions are, however, so complicated that they cannot possibly be covered by one single term.

Besides, the term "State capitalism" has not in the literature of political economy the signification which our Russian literature has lately assigned to it.

In the following essay I shall try to treat the problem of the different economic forms existing or developing in our country.

Enterprises of Proletarian State

These comprise the enterprises nationalized by the proletarian state.

They are state monopolies, but they are not state capitalist monopolies, since in the case of the state capitalist monopoly the bourgeoisie "that constitutes itself as the state power" (Marx) is the owner of the enterprises.

With us, however, the working-class is the owner of the nationalized enterprises.

The forms of production being characterized according to the forms of property, it is evident that enterprises owned by the Workers State must not be designated as state capitalistic.

[illegible]

The fact that the enterprise is being carried on capitalist principles (principle of private property, payment of wages, production of a considerable part of the products for the market) does not make the enterprise a capitalist one, as far as the conditions of property are concerned.

Enterprises of Mixed Character

These comprise those concerns in which the proletarian state and capitalist groups are partners.

In these so-called "mixed" enterprises part of the shares is owned by the proletarian state; the rest may be owned by Russian or foreign capitalists.

It is evident, that such "mixed" enterprises are neither state capitalistic ones nor purely capitalist enterprises.

The capitalists and the state are their owners at the same time. The workers' state will receive part of the surplus value produced in these enterprises; the rest goes to the capitalist "partner."

In the course of the general economic development an incessant contest for domination will be carried on in these concerns; with the increase of the economic power of the proletariat the participation of the capitalistic groups will become of less importance, provided we avoid making blunders; and the state will in a constantly growing degree determine and conduct the whole process of development of these enterprises, similar to that exercised by the great banking concerns and trusts in their control of numbers of joint stock companies in the capitalist state.

Concessions and Leased Enterprises

With regard to fundamental conditions of property in this group, the workers' State is the owner. Still not all the means of production in these enterprises are held by it as the concessionaires and lessees can increase the production apparatus by [illegible] the surplus value produced will be divided into two parts, and the class struggle will find expression in the changeable amount of these shares.

Private Capitalists' Enterprises Under Control of Proletarian State

These comprise the capitalist concerns in the true sense of the word, i. e., concerns exclusively owned by groups of capitalists or by a single capitalist.

The development of these concerns will be regulated more or less from without, i. e., thru the State Banks and the credit system, by way of the circulation of money.

Petty Bourgeois Units of Production and Their Consolidation

To this class belongs the productive units of the home producers, so-called "Kustarys", the artisans and peasants, which are the strongest foundation for the development of purely bourgeois-capitalist conditions.

To a great extent these productive units recruit themselves from the elements of pre-capitalist barter economy. These are particularly found in our eastern districts.

Of course, the freedom of production under the basic conditions of the existence of the innumerable petty-bourgeois productive units will inevitably bring about the enlargement of the sphere of capitalist conditions and the gradual strengthening of those important capitalist groups that are capable of competition with the enterprises of the purely governmental type and those of the mixed type.

These are the principal forms of production existing in our Soviet Republic.

It is necessary here to deal with another extremely important problem. Russian economy, considered as a whole, finds itself in the world market face to face with big capitalist systems. This gives rise to the following situation.

The conditions of the world market may cause a part of the surplus value produced by the Russian economic system—pure state enterprises included—to find its way in [illegible]

It may thus seem that even enterprises that are exclusively by the workers will produce the surplus value lost to the w class.

This circumstance which owing to the temporarily weak tion of Russia in world trade no means a proof of the character of our state industry.

This circumstance only serv show once more that the de ment of our economic system the same time a singular form o class struggle.

In Russia this struggle is goin in the form of a competition betw state and private enterprises; o contest for the best terms in tracts or concessions and leases, the size of shares in the products, power in the "mixed" enterprises, for the best position in the goo market and credit, etc.

In world industry this contest carried on as a struggle for the mo profitable contracts, duties, loan co ditions, special contracts, etc.

The part of the surplus value go to the proletarian state will inevitab grow in the course of our econo Ir the case of failure in the conte the claim of the internal and exte capitalist groups will reduce th claims of the workingclass to nil.

The West European literature o political economy understands b state capitalism the highest form o capitalism, the means of productio being held by the bourgeois state, th most perfect and most powerful o ganization of the capitalist class. I is unnecessary to say that our "Sta Capitalism" is altogether differe from the one characterized above.

Of course, our economic syste can be changed into the "true" sta capitalism, if the class-struggles i the sphere of direct processes of pr duction and in the political sphere re sult in the loss of power by the wor ing-class. This question will b solved by the result of the clas struggle, and we have sufficie reason to believe that in consequen of the crisis of capitalist world ec nomy it will not end in favor of th capitalist groups.

Gompers and Reformist Socialists May Read Radek's Speech With Great Profit to Themselves

we stood upon the position which it appears the Vienna International desires to leave.

We forego an accounting of the past, not because we want to remain silent upon what must be said but for the simple reason that we realize the need of the hour, the general situation of the world proletariat and say that it is senseless to begin at this moment with recriminations. It is now necessary to think of what we want to do.

Hits at Vandervelde

The representative of the Second International, Vandervelde, considered it necessary to draw up a balance.

He did it with the same voice, with the same gestures which we saw in Basle ("Quite right"—the Communist delegation) when he as leader of the International swore to lead us into the fight against war.

We were carried back by the pathos of Vandervelde's voice for a moment to the time when we believed in the warmth of his voice and we forgot for a moment that this voice was drowned by the roar of cannon.

If Vandervelde desires it, we will draw up an accounting of these last 8 years—an accounting which will perhaps break up this conference but will not sound very pleasant to this former royal minister of Belgium.

What Vandervelde Forgets

He has forgotten the sea of blood, he has forgotten the mountain of corpses, he has forgotten all the misery of the world. This accounting does not exist for him.

After this he comes to us and says, "A little faith, a minimum of faith, a grain of faith—and if you do not give me this confidence on credit, we have nothing to discuss in common."

And we tell Citizen Vandervelde face to face, Not a farthing's worth of faith! We have paid for this confidence by the fact that we today face each other as enemies and must seek the path to an understanding. And when you come to us with your sweet phrases of confidence, we answer you with a plump "No!"

Confidence for what? For the war? Confidence for what? For the Peace of Versailles which you as a Belgian minister signed? Confidence for what; for whom?

Shaw Silent on Murders

You speak in the name of an organization. This organization does not only consist of little Belgium. Confidence for the English occupation against which the Labor Party only fought in words?

Confidence for all your crimes against those crimes of which the representative of the 2nd International has not spoken here today?

The Social Revolutionary Tchaikin has published documents on the murder of 26 leaders of the Caucasian proletariat by the English political police. The names of the murderers have been published.

Has Citizen Tom Shaw asked in the English Parliament, "What of these murderers, of General Maleson, of General Thomson?"

And then you say, "Confidence?" The Second International asks that, among whose representatives here today there sit members of the German Social Democracy?

We ask, where is the court of all the three Internationals which sentenced the murderers of Rosa Luxemburg and the murderers of Karl Liebknecht? ("Quite right!"—the Communist delegation.)

Forced to Attend Conference

They were sentenced by the Extraordinary Court of the Guards Division in Berlin, and when you dare to speak of the Russian courts, we say to you, hands off before they are not washed of the blood of Rosa Luxemburg and Liebknecht (Stormy applause by the Communist delegation) and of the blood of Leviné, who was not murdered on the street by bandits, but sentenced to death by your courts (turning to the German Social Democrats) as you sat in the government relying on the confidence of the masses which you have abused.

But when you say, "If that is so, what do you want of this Conference; what purpose is there in making tactical manoeuvres?" And I will coolly and categorically tell you what we want.

You came to this conference because you were compelled to. You were the instrument of world reaction, and now if you want it or not, you must become the instrument of the struggles of the proletariat.

Feels Reactionists Will Fail

We sit down at the same table with you, we desire to fight alongside of you, and this fight will decide whether it is to be a manoeuvre, as you say, of the Communist International or will become a current which will unite the working class. Your action will decide what our action means.

If you fight shoulder to shoulder with us, with the proletariat of all countries,—fight not for the dictatorship of the proletariat; we do not believe you are capable of it—but for a bit of bread; fight against the further devastation of the world, then the proletariat will come close together in this struggle, and then we will judge you not for your dreadful past but on the basis of new facts.

As long as these are not at hand, we coolly enter into these negotiations and into mutual action with the profound distrust, with the conviction that you will fail us ten times in this struggle.

Meet Terrible Need of Hour

But we want to attempt to fight together not out of love for you but on account of the terrible need of the hour moving us and which compels you to negotiate here in this hall with the same Communists whom you have treated as criminals.

And now for the further conditions of Citizen Vandervelde. What you have attempted to do here was a sharp attack on the part of the Second International in an endeavor to frighten us and the Vienna International supported it willy-nilly and with a heavy heart. I speak of the conditions which the gentlemen of the Second International raised and I believe you will not give my answer all the publicity in the world.

Conditions! Citizen Vandervelde said, "You speak of the Treaty of Versailles." He said that he feared the discussions of this question might help Stinnes.

The German workers cannot buy a shirt and Citizen Vandervelde regards the fact that international capital will fatten itself on the misery of the German proletariat with a care-free heart. He fears that Stinnes will become richer.

As is well-known Stinnes is allied with Soviet Russia and perhaps will finance the Communist International. (Laughter on the part of the Communist delegation.)

M. Vandervelde did not clearly say whether he desires to speak about the reconstruction of the world like Poincare, without touching the Versailles Treaty, or if not, what is the meaning of his remark concerning Stinnes. I am not enough of a diplomat to understand that. (Laughter; "You have shown that!")

I have shown that, quite right. Then I ask, does the Second International want the question of the Treaty of Versailles put on the agenda of the Conference or not? It would be very interesting to see the German Social Democrary as a member of the Second International vote against the consideration of the Versailles Treaty by the International Conference; probably in the hope that Lloyd George will revise the Treaty of Versailles.

Exposes Vandervelde's Love

Now I come to the other conditions which were put to us. With the great love which Vandervelde always displays for the small and oppressed peoples, even when they live on the Congo, he asks us, "How can you appear at this Conference when the ghosts of murdered Georgia and the Ukraine appear and ask, "Cain, why hast thou murdered us?" I will clearly tell Citizen Vandervelde why we murdered this Banquo.

As for the Ukraine, it is not murdered, it lives, it is very strong, it fights alongside Soviet Russia and only the ghost of the Petlura government, which was kept alive by gold injections of the Polish general staff and now begs for life in Paris and of the Second International, disturbs the slumbers of Vandervelde.

He may calm himself. The Ukraine lives, it is healthy, altho it is hungry and it will fight together with us for the reconstruction of Russia and for the recuperation of the Russian and the Ukrainian peoples not as a border state but as part of the Soviet Federation.

As far as Georgia is concerned, I emphatically state to the English representatives of the Second International and above all to the English delegates—Hands off Georgia! You did not protest when the Georgian Government slaughtered the workers and peasants of Georgia under the protection of English guns! (Protests and interruptions.)

Our Tcheka agents are not talented writers. The Georgian Secret Service, however, was careless enough to leave behind a book written by M. Djugeli, commander of your National Guard, and in this book Georgian Democracy is so represented that we will submit this book to you at the next conference in order that you may learn how the Georgian state was built up with blood and iron.

Will Produce Documents

And when you ask why we—and now we say it openly—helped to overthrow the Georgian Government, we will answer you out of the documents which the Georgian Government was careless enough to print.

The information which Gegetchkori, Georgia's Foreign Minister, gave to Aleixeieff reads, "We have helped the Whites; we have not only suppressed the Bolsheviks at home but have fed your White officers and sent them to you."

If the Conference desires to appoint a small commission for the investigation of the authenticity of this document, we will gladly lay it before you.

He concluded with a most pathetic appeal: "How can you come without the Social Revolutionaries! How can you come without these good internationalists, who are affiliated with neither the Second [illegible] Vienna International [illegible] der the protectorate of the Second and ask for admittance into the Two-and-a-Half?"

We have the honor of having with us in this assembly the former president of the Russian Constituent Assembly, Tchernoff, as a journalist, and I believe that if you desire to discuss the Social Revolutionaries with us, there are enough of their representatives within reach.

It is not necessary that just those must appear at this Conference who attempt to murder the leaders of the Russian Revolution with a revolver in their hand.

Permit me to leave the field of polemics and put the question as it really is: We proposed a Conference in agreement with the Vienna International for the preparation for action.

Many Questions to be Answered

We said to ourselves that a debate over disputed questions, over methods, will certainly not assist the action. If the difference can in any way be ironed out, that can only be done in the common struggle which will build the bridge between the various sections of the proletariat.

If you desire to sabotage this Conference of action and have an international Conference of discussion we say to you, you give the proletariat stones instead of bread. But we are not accustomed to evade a discussion. Then we will clear the table at this conference.

We will then lay the history of the last eight years before you and demand your opinions thereon.

We will remind the German Social Democrats who cry "Hands off the Social Revolutionaries!", of the fact that the militants of the Soviet Republic have been suffering in the Bavarian prisons for three years, that workers are in German prisons for the March action. We will ask then, what of the assassins of Dato, whom the German Government, in which your representatives sit, delivered over to the Spanish hangmen for half a million pesetas to be distributed among the Berlin police at whose head there is a Social Democrat?

And we will see what your answer will be. (Wels—Germany: "Ask Eberlein!") Noske did not murder 15,000 workers; Eberlein did— the whole world knows that.

We will draw up an accounting for each country. For if we were sinners, you are the representatives of a dozen parties, worshipful gentlemen, whose sins exceed anything imaginable.

Proposes Conference of Action

We then say in conclusion, we propose a conference of action, a conference to decide ways and means. [illegible] not to reconstruct the world but to pillage the whole world so that the capitalists can again establish their rule?

What are we going to do against unemployment; what are we going to do against the lockout wave?

That is our programme. If you desire discussion, we are ready to discuss with you. However, in order to satisfy the refinement of Vandervelde, who keeps Flemish autonomists in jail and to calm the delicate Wels as to the fate of the accused Social Revolutionaries, we say, "Show that you are better than we. Propose to us the exchange of your holy Russian terrorists against the militants of the Bavarian Soviet Republic and the participants in the March action ("Bargaining!").

Whoever speaks of bargaining is a man without brain. I will so answer you that you will forget that word. (Uproar.)

We therefore say to you, if you want to break up the conference, you have the liberty to do so; you will bear the responsibility.

If you want a congress to consider action, we are ready for it. If you want a congress in which at the same time there should take place a discussion of the methods of proletarian struggle, we are also rea for that.

Concludes Amid Stormy Appla

We are ready for a conference any form. There is one thing, how ever, we will not permit—that peopl should put conditions to us; peopl to whom we put no conditions altho nine-tenths of the proletariat hav the greatest distrust to them.

I say, if you put conditions to us, conditions which must be fulfilled before we can attend this conference, we answer, we will reject these conditions.

When we approach nearer one another in the common struggle certain consequences will follow which need not be promised beforehand; for they will follow from the common struggle and therefore we advocate the common struggle.

I repeat: We have accepted the initiative of the International 2½ and we ask you, do you maint the proposal which was made t in the January appeal or do you re tract it and set up new conditio If you do so, we are confro with a new situation and we w consider this new situation. We c here on the basis of your app (Stormy applause by the Comm ist delegation.)

International Issued a Call for May Day

EDITOR'S NOTE:—The May Day Proclamation issued by the Executive Committee of the Third (Communist) International arrived too late for publication in our May Day issue. In fact it has just been received. However, we publish it at this time since it states views that should be of interest to all our readers. It is as follows:

FOR THE FIRST OF MAY!

Workers of the World:—

On May 1st, 1922, the wage-slaves of all countries will manifest their will to emancipation in a particularly intense phase of the class struggle.

Capital, which after the imperialist war satisfied some of the most urgent demands of the workers, is already attempting to wrest out of their hands the concessions it had made.

In every country where the fear of unrest had led the bourgeoisie momentarily to grant a few concessions to the proletariat, the latter now sees these insufficient gains menaced.

Plight Revealed at Genoa

The employers want to abolish the eight-hour day, whose realization they have always sabotaged. They want to lengthen the working-day at a time when unemployment has assumed enormous proportions in England and the United States and is daily spreading in France, Italy, and Switzerland.

At the same time they are everywhere reducing wages altho the rise in the cost of living and the increase of taxation are continuing without end.

Overwork, inadequate wages and the permanent threat of unemployment are the conditions in which the great mass of workers are now living. Violent repression is the only answer to those who demand the possibility of being able to exist.

However the offensive of capital against the working class cannot conceal the plight of the capitalist governments, met at Genoa to attempt to mend the irreparable consequences of the great massacre, and to seek a way out of the crisis which is paralyzing capitalist economy and is plunging larger and larger masses into misery—a misery which drives them to revolt.

Genoa Conference Will Fail

All workers understand that the only significance of the Genoa Conference is lent it by the presence of the delegates of Soviet Russia. For the first time, the bourgeois governments are compelled to deal with those whom they had sworn to wipe off the face of the earth.

Nevertheless, the proletariat cannot afford to deceive itself as to the results of the Conference. The Conference is bound to fail because the representatives of capitalism cannot admit the paramount condition for the economic construction of Europe—the abolition of the capitalist regime.

The enslavement of the vast majority of producers to an infinitesimal minority of exploiters, competition and the wars which are the latter's inevitable consequence do not allow of the reconstruction of the devastated world.

After the defeats which it had suffered since 1918, the proletariat manifests a certain lassitude in its struggle against the exploiters, but it has not ceased to defend its vital interests and to fight for the integrity of its rights.

Altho the bourgeoisie has taken the initiative in the offensive, believing it could be recompensed for its losses caused by the economic crisis by intensified exploitation of the proletariat, the latter cannot and will not let that take place.

Workers Show Resistance

Proletarian resistance was actively demonstrated in the more important countries by strikes of significant extent: in England, the unprecedented miner's strike; in France, the prolonged textile strike; in Italy, general strikes in various provinces; and in Germany, the recent railway strike.

These great mass-actions, betrayed by their reformist leaders, have everywhere failed to gain their immediate objectives.

But the revolutionary will of the proletariat has not been broken. The fighting spirit and activity of the exploited is everywhere being regenerated. The proletariat is defending its conquests and desires to fight to extend them still further.

Its tragic everyday experiences have convinced it of the necessity of forming a united front of Labor's forces against the implacable bourgeoisie. Under the pressure of the need for the struggle, the unity of the exploited class is being established, in spite of the political divisions engendered by the treason of its leaders.

The power of the bourgeoisie is inexorably on the wane. Whatever side one turns to, there is nothing to be seen but political crises, general instability of governments, strikes, lockouts and the revolts of colonial peoples.

British Empire Crumbling

The edifice of the British Empire is crumbling all over the world. After having yielded to insurgent Ireland, London is making concessions to unconquered Egypt, while the flames of insurrection are fighting up the Transvaal and a huge, black cloud is growing in India. The British Government and the Conservative-Liberal Coalition are racked by internal dissensions.

In France, while the economic crisis is killing traffic in its ports and causing the failure of great banks, governmental and parliamentary corruption is going on in broad daylight, scandals follow hard on one anothers heels and the policy of the Bloc National is bringing the state to the verge of bankruptcy.

Italy is in the throes of a quasi-permanent Cabinet crisis and is suffering under the bloody exploits of the Fascisti—prelude to the civil war for which the working class is now paying the price while waiting for the inevitable changing of the roles. Even Japan, the great war-profiteer, has not been spared by this crisis which is shaking two continents and her government is turning machine-guns upon the crowds modestly demanding universal suffrage.

Such is the spectacle presented by the victorious countries. As for the defeated nations, the sufferings of the working masses is in striking contrast with the opulence of the ruling oligarchy or financial and industrial potentates.

And Russia, practically isolated from the rest of the world for seven years, ruined by the imperialist and the civil wars, starved by an iron blockade and a natural catastrophe, is compelled to devote all its energies to the salvation of part of its millions of starving, to whom bourgeois civilization has refused aid—aid, which according to Doctor Nansen represents half the cost of a dreadnought.

Among all these ruins and misery, martyrized humanity has only one hope: the liberating force of the proletariat. The dictatorship of the proletariat is the only answer to the dictatorship of capital.

Workers of the World!

You will not remain passive while your masters lay new burdens upon your shoulders, demand new sacrifices and intensify your enslavement.

ON THE COMING FIRST OF MAY YOU WILL MANIFEST YOUR FIGHTING SPIRIT IN A POWERFUL DEMONSTRATION OF YOUR CLASS CONSCIOUSNESS.

Draw up an imperious program of your immediate demands, and commence the struggle to compel the granting of these demands. Unite, ESTABLISH THE FRONT OF THE EXPLOITED AGAINST THE UNITED FRONT OF THE EXPLOITERS! Whatever your political differences may be, you all have common interests, you compose a single class, and if you form a solid bloc, no force will be able to resist you.

Demonstrate on May 1st by a twenty-four hour General Strike all over the World.

For the eight-hour day.

For the [illegible] conditions of [illegible]

For the abolition of military expenditures and of taxes weighing upon the propertyless

For the cancellation of capitalist debts

For the emancipation of peoples oppressed by imperialism

For the establishment of real peace all over the world

For the recognition of Soviet Russia.

Follow the slogans of the Communist International!

Support the Communist Parties in their intrepid struggle—the parties which point out for you the path to emancipation and march before you, exposing themselves to the brutality and repressions of the bourgeoisie. Remember the example of sacrifice and devotion to the cause of the proletariat given by the Communists of Russia, Finland, the Ukraine, Siberia and the Caucasus; of Germany and Hungary, Poland and the Balkans, Italy and Spain, whose blood has been shed for your cause!

Proclaim these proud battlecries:

GENERAL STRIKE ON THE FIRST OF MAY!

PEACE AND LIBERTY FOR ALL PEOPLES!

ALL POWER TO THE PROLETARIAT!

LONG LIVE THE RUSSIAN SOVIET REPUBLIC!

LONG LIVE THE WORLD PROLETARIAN REVOLUTION!

Industrial Organizers Conference.

The first Conference of Branch Organizers was held last Saturday at the Local Office. It was decided that the Organizers make a census of the membership regarding union affiliation. A memorandum on the work of the Industrial Organizer was distributed. His task consists in enlisting the membership into activity in the trade unions and other working class organizations.

The next meeting of Industrial Organizers will be held on Saturday, May 20, at the local office building. All organizers are to bring the lists of the members with reports of their unions they belong to.

Monday, May 15.—Building Trades.

Friday, May 19.—Cloakmakers.

Saturday, May 20.—Branch Industrial Organizers.

Friday, May 25.—Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

May Issue of Labor Herald.

One thousand copies have been received of the May issue, "Miners Number." These are to be sold at the branch and union meetings. All Branch Industrial Organizers and other active union men should call at the Local office and get their bundles between 6 and 7.30 P. M. any evening.

Open Air Meetings.

The Workers Party will in the coming week begin its open air season. It is expected that all corners of the city will be covered by the Workers Party and the message of revolutionary socialism delivered to thousands. Speakers are needed for this work. All members who can serve as open air speakers are requested to communicate with the Local Office.

Section Organizers Meeting.

The first conference of Section Organizers and the Organization Committee was held last Thursday. The work of the section committees was discussed and plan submitted by the secretary was accepted. The Williamsburg section No. 6 was divided into two sections in order to better carry on the work—creating a new section, the Boro Park Section No. 9, consisting of the South Brooklyn German, Finnish Brooklyn, Boro Park English and Jewish and Coney Island Jewish.

It was also decided to hold open air meetings beginning May 15. Literature was discussed and the plan proposed for increasing the circulation of THE WORKER put into effect.

Lettish Picnic at Dickert's Park

The Lettish Branch will hold a picnic May 21, at Dickert's Park. All members are urged to purchase tickets and attend this affair.

Italian Organizer in Philadelphia.

Thadeo Cuomo, Secretary of the Italian Bureau of the Workers Party, spent several busy days in District No. 3. A new Italian branch was organized and plans were laid to hold a district convention of the Italian Branches of Camden, N. J., Philadelphia, Pa., Wilmington, Del., Baltimore, Md., about a month hence. Excellent prospects for the organization of new branches in North Philadelphia and other nearby points were also reported.

Ruthenberg Now Party Secretary

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party has elected C. E. Ruthenberg, former Secretary of the Socialist Party of Cleveland, Ohio, and first National Secretary of the Communist Party of America, as Executive Secretary of the Workers Party.

He is recognized as one of the ablest executives in the entire working class movement, and his release from prison came at a very opportune time to make his services available for the Workers Party.

Harrison National Organizer.

Caleb Harrison, former secretary, expressed his preference for field work on behalf of the party even prior to his selection in January, and he will be able to follow the line of work for which he feels himself best fitted in his new capacity of National Organizer.

His work in "District One" has materially improved the position of the party there.

Instead of being one of the weakest districts of the organization it is taking its place among the strongest.

He will next turn his attention to District Three, centering around Philadelphia, and similar good results are looked for.

This decision was made by the Administrative Council and unanimously approved by the mail vote of the out-of-town members of the committee. Among other decisions of the committee were the following:

Election of C. E. Ruthenberg and George Wishnak as party representatives to the International Ladies Garment Workers' Convention at Cleveland.

Election of Robert Minor, Benjamin Gitlow and Moissaye J. Olgin to represent the Party at the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Convention at Chicago.

Election of William F. Dunne to attend the 47th National Convention of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, at Detroit.

Election of Caleb Harrison to attend the convention of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor at Scranton, Pa., and the Greek Workers Party Federation at New York. Election of Henry Askeli and Jacob Turchin to attend the Esthonian National Conference at New York.

The services of the comrades recently released from prison (Ruthenberg, Gitlow, Winitsky and Ferguson) are to be offered to party locals for use at picnics on condition that the collection taken shall be divided between the National Defense Committee and the National Organization fund, with a minimum guarantee of $25 and railroad fare.

A committee consisting of Cannon, Harrison, Lore, Bittelman, Ruthenberg and Trachtenberg was elected to prepare a manifesto and thesis on the subject of the "United Front." A program of activity on the open shop and unemployment issue was also referred to this committee.

Literature Department Plans.

The publication of a standard-sized bound library, to be known as the "Workers Party Library," is to be inaugurated with the publication of Trotzky's "Democracy versus Dictatorship."

This is expected to be followed by a complete, unabridged edition of Lenin's "Imperialism" of which only snatches have been published in English thus far.

These books will be the beginning of a series which are expected to appear from 30 to 60 days apart. They will appear in both paper and cloth bound editions, the paper selling for either 25c. or 50c., and the cloth for 50c. or $1.00, depending on size.

The Trotzky book, with an introduction by Max Bedacht, will sell for $1.00 and advance orders are to finance the plan.

A series of pamphlets explaining various phases of the Workers Party program, as well as the organization as a whole, is also to be issued.

These will form part of the pamphlet library of five cent pamphlets, size 5 x 7½ inch., sixteen pages, of which three numbers are ready now.

These are sold in quantities of 100, whether of one kind or assorted, at the rate of 2½c. each.

The titles of the first three are: "Communism and the Family," by Alexandra Kollontai; "Should Communists participate in Reactionary Trade Unions?", Lenin; and "The Constitution of the Soviet Republic."

Organization Decisions.

A monograph on the holding of street meetings is to be sent out. All districts are instructed to prepare for active open air campaigning, notifying the national office of what material they have or need.

Districts 11, 14, and 15 have been dissolved because of lack of sufficient organization strength to maintain a paid district organizer, and all locals in that territory are attached direct to the national office.

Dues are paid direct to the national office and the usual refund, instead of being sent to districts, is retained by the office for special organization work in that territory.

Refund dues from foreign federations intended for City Central Committees is remitted thru the District Organizers. The English District [illegible]

Death Takes Mary Krimont

Mrs. Mary Krimont, called the mother of the Ferrer Colony at Stelton, N. J., died Tuesday night, May 2. The Ferrer colonists feel keenly the loss of an interested and active resident and an efficient and tireless worker for the welfare of the colony's school. Mrs. Krimont was a resident of the colony almost from its inception. Mary Hanser, has written the following "To Mary Krimont":

TO MARY KRIMONT

So one we've seen each day has passed,
And left a void that none can fill.
She's gone, and all the good she did,

Since one I knew for many, many

Will never cross the fields again—

Workers Party Opposes [illegible] Richmond, Va., Central Labor Council

The Central Committee of the Workers Party of Richmond, Va., is making every effort to [illegible] the [illegible] the Central Trades Organization of that city. A proclamation to organized labor in that city [illegible]. It is as follows:

Richmond, Va., May 4, 1922.

Brothers and Fellow Workers:

It has come to the attention of the City Central Committee, Local Richmond, Workers Party, that the dissolution of the CENTRAL TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL OF RICHMOND has been seriously considered. With the concerted action of the Capitalist Class to break up all Labor Organizations by "Open Shop" agitation, by lockouts and general unemployment, by the use of armed force to suppress protesting workers, it becomes an absolute necessity for all workers to maintain a UNITED FRONT. Any agitation that tends to disrupt the Labor Movement is a distinct advantage to the Capitalist Class, and must be resisted with all our united strength.

Some sincere, but misguided, Unionists advocate dissolution of the CENTRAL TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL on the grounds of inefficiency and corruption on the part of the Leadership. The Workers Party is well aware of conditions maintaining inside the Labor Unions its representatives have time after time pointed out the existence of these conditions, and will continue to do so until these Leaders are supplanted by efficient and honest representatives. But this struggle must be conducted INSIDE—NOT OUTSIDE—THE UNIONS, which must be kept intact at all costs if the workers are to survive in the CLASS STRUGGLE.

Not only must the Labor Organizations be kept intact, but the scope of their work must be widened. UNORGANIZED WORKERS MUST BE ORGANIZED! At the present time members of the Workers Party are engaged in forming two new [illegible]

Summing up, we would give our Slogan: FORWARD TO A WORKERS REPUBLIC, THRU A UNITED FRONT, WITH A MILITANT, HONEST LEADERSHIP!

HITS AT WASTE

EDITOR, THE WORKER:—I wish to give this message to my fellow workers in Cleveland. Friday evening, May 5th, at the Statler Hotel, a banquet was given for the delegates of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Convention. The expense of this banquet was paid for with the blood and brawn of the Cleveland workers, at a most inopportune time, when every single dollar was needed for the strike fund.

A strike has been dragging on in your city for many months, a strike that means the life or death of your organization, a strike that is doubtful of success because of the indifference of the membership.

And at such a time the leadership of your organization permits an expenditure of almost $3,000 to satisfy the appetites of a well-fed delegation.

At the time of the arrangements for the banquet, and the outing to take place the following day, a small group of the "leftists" of your own organization, these "terrible leftist monsters," fought most bitterly against this outrageous expenditure.

Of course they were overruled. That was only natural. They were only "lefts." And, I ask you, what chances can a handful of "lefts" have against a second vice-president of our international union, furthermore, from one who aspires to the presidency.

I ask you, workers of Cleveland, how long are you going to remain indifferent. Put your shoulder to the wheel, right alongside these same "lefts" and help pilot your own boat.—DELEGATE IDA WEISMAN.

We'll charge the impoverished Harding administration absolutely nothing for this tip.

The Famine Is Spreading

The overzealous efforts of proponents of intervention in Soviet Russia have been spreading the malicious statement that the famine situation in Soviet Russia is well in hand, particularly thru the activities of the American Relief Administration.

They have gone so far in their asseverations that they would have us believe that not even the whole fund voted by Congress will be required to save Soviet Russia from the famine that is overrunning the country.

The truth is: THE FAMINE IS SPREADING IN SOVIET RUSSIA!

The Ukraine, the vast granary of Russia, which has been comparatively free from suffering during the early period of the famine, has gradually succumbed to hunger, and now the southern part, in particular, must be counted among the famine districts. The stories of suffering coming from there are as heart-rending as those from the Volga.

The New York office of the Quakers recently received the following cablegram:

> "General conditions are getting steadily worse. Buruluk is better than Sorochinskaya, for they do manage to bury their dead here, tho in wholesale lots of 200 to a ditch. The dry, hard sand-grass which even horses and cows cannot eat is now being milled and sold as flour in the market for lack of other substitutes. THE DEATH RATE IS INCREASING AND UNLESS CONSIDERABLE AID FOR ADULTS COMES SOON, THERE WILL NOT BE ENOUGH STRENGTH TO DO THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE CHILDREN'S FOOD.

FIFTY MILLION PEOPLE ARE STARVING IN SOVIET RUSSIA! HOOVER NOTWITHSTANDING!

"The Call," Monday, May 8th, has an editorial on "Criticism and Slander," referring to discussions within the labor movement. The editorial writer of "The Call" is surely privileged to speak on this subject, he is such an expert at the latter form of attack.

The Old and the New

President Tighe, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, made a statement during the convention of that organization in Detroit, that clearly illustrates the wide chasm existing between the old and new thought in the American labor movement.

Speaking to a representative of The Worker he said that the strikes in which his organization was involved were the result of its taking in the unskilled in the steel industry; that the organization of the unskilled during the steel strike had been a severe handicap to his organization and that many of the members objected to continuing the fight because the steel companies were willing to treat with the skilled workers—alone.

Here we have a concrete example of the damning effect of the craft consciousness which is today the real obstacle in the way of efficient labor organization. With a few exceptions there are no officials in the American trade union movement who are intelligent enough and big enough to point out to the membership that on the organization of the unskilled depends the very existence of the labor unions of this nation.

Machine methods of production have reached a higher point of development in the United States than in any country in the world. The skill of the mechanic is being replaced by cunning machines and his special knowledge by purely mechanical processes, but officially the American labor movement takes no cognizance of this phenomenon.

The unskilled workers are to-day the most important factors in industry, and it is no wonder that the gigantic industrial concerns are willing to allow a few skilled workers to purchase temporary immunity at the price of the betrayal of the unskilled.

Because the mechanics are largely of American birth and the unskilled are mostly aliens, an additional weapon is at the disposal of the employers; nor do they hesitate to use it. To the eternal shame of labor officials it can be said that they, too, at times—during the steel strike for instance—mouth the patriotic platitudes of the employers' press.

Only in industrial unions can the workers of this nation be organized as a class; only when organized as a class will they be able to accomplish anything for their class, and it is on this point [illegible] of craft [illegible] power is due to two things [illegible] as against [illegible] influence of the employing class [illegible] the craft organization.

In the steel industry the Amalgamated has survived as an organization of skilled workers because until recently it admitted none of the unskilled. It has to fight to-day because it was forced during the steel strike to take in some of them.

Intelligent leadership [illegible] further [illegible] as to where the real power in industry lies. Instead of waiting it would be organizing.

This type of leadership is absent and it can be stated without much risk that no important amount of organization work will be done in the United States until the existing labor movement has had a thorough housecleaning and a real movement brought into existence.

The Prince and Lloyd George

The British Empire is being pretty well battered on all fronts, judging from reports that emanate from Ireland, Egypt, South Africa, India, and even Australia, in spite of the censorship.

But every effort is being made, even in our own capitalist press, to make gullible readers believe the Prince of Wales is having an excellent time visiting the Crown Prince of Japan.

And the deft work of Lloyd George, at Genoa, as juggler and acrobat, is hailed as astute diplomacy.

It is seldom that a frank statement of the real situation is made. Such a confession, however, comes from C. K. Chesterton, the British author, in his "New Witness." He charges that the British press is publishing much fictitious news of the receptions accorded the Prince of Wales on his world-wide barnstorming tour. Speaking of his recent visit to Glasgow, Scotland, this journal says:

> "There were marked expressions of hostility to his person from thousands of people. . . . Why did not the press put in bold headlines that the procession of unemployed was held back by the mounted police and soldiers with fixed bayonets, that the prince had to escape by a side entrance from St. Andrew's Hall in order to avoid the crowd, and that at least once a missile was publicly thrown at him in the streets."

The hostility shown "The Prince" is not the enmity that the many display toward an individual. It is but an expression of the pent up hatred of the masses against a system that oppresses and enslaves them.

It is but one form of the protest that is bursting all bounds and that even the wily Lloyd George, at Genoa, clever capitalist politician that he is, cannot control.

The prince and the premier are but instruments of the system that is passing. Soon they will be but memories of an epoch that has had its day, but is gone forever.

A Look at the Forward

Let us take a look at Abraham Cahan's Forward that has taken the Socialist Party under its wing and is seeking to dictate policy to some of the labor unions in the clothing industry.

On April 29th the Forward published an interview by Sholam Ash, the Jewish writer, with Maxim Gorki, who is now in Berlin.

Ash, who is an opponent of the Russian Soviet Government and an extreme nationalist, is a constant contributor to the Forward.

He knows what the Forward wants for its news, editorial and feature columns, especially about Soviet Russia, and he writes accordingly.

No doubt feeling that the lie would never be hunted down, Ash had Gorki complaining bitterly about the behaviour of the Jewish Communists in the Workers' Republic, charging they were responsible for the spread of anti-Semitism among the gentile populations.

Ash reported Gorki as accusing the Jewish Communists of offending the religious beliefs of the Russian masses.

The Freiheit, the Jewish daily organ of the Workers Party, cabled Gorki to learn whether the reported interview was correct. In reply Gorki cabled, under date of May 9, from Berlin, that:—

> "Freiheit, 47 Chrystie St., New York City, N. Y.
> "Ash has not fully reported my views. I am sending you an article on this subject. Please make this telegram public.
> —MAXIM GORKI."

This is only an example of the despicable means employed by Cahan and his Forward in the campaign of slander to discredit the Communist movement, not only in this country, but internationally.

Can yellow "Socialism" stoop any lower?

Repudiate the Debts

The New York Herald tells us that, "When a government is a de facto one, no matter how atrocious its crimes, the practice is to acknowledge its existence!

"But," it adds, "there is one limitation," in the case of Soviet Russia, and that is that the Workers' Republic began "by repudiating the debts of Russia."

And it advances the repudiation of debts as the basis for President Harding's rejection of the demand by the Women's Congress at Baltimore for the recognition of the Russian Soviet Republic.

In rejecting this demand thru his secretary of state, President Harding, like his predecessor, Woodrow Wilson, is the mouthpiece of the international bankers.

The Wall Street bandits are not interested in putting the 10,000,000 jobless in this country to work producing the things that Soviet Russia needs. They are only interested in collecting the debts owing to them, including the interest on these debts.

Repudiation of debts strikes at the very keystone of their power and the propaganda of the Soviet delegates at Genoa on this question is the biggest thing that worries them.

The bankers would be happy if Soviet Russia would turn the workers of the red republic into a nation of coolies to pay the czar's debts.

Labor in Germany is sweating and bleeding under the lash of the allies in an effort to meet the demands of the Versailles peace. If Germany can be made to pay France, then perhaps France may be able to pay interest and principal to the House of Morgan.

But while paying their debts the workers of Europe have nothing with which to buy the products of America's mills and factories, and so the unemployed army in the United States grows. Labor in this country is hungry and idle, while labor in Europe, just as hungry but slaving at top speed, works to meet the demands of the money lords.

Wars, debts, unemployment are evils of capitalism. The workers must end war. The Russians pointed the way at Genoa thru universal disarmament.

The workers must repudiate all debts contracted under capitalism. The Russians pointed the way immediately their revolution was accomplished. They point the way again at Genoa, a call to the workers of the world.

Only with peace established everywhere, only with the repudiation of debts everywhere, crushing obligations of nations to nations, will it be possible for labor to return to the peaceful pursuits necessary to the building of a real civilization.

But this will never be accomplished while capitalism rules in Europe. The Russo-German Treaty should be the forerunner of a Soviet Germany, the herald of a Soviet United States of Europe.

When that hour strikes let the workers of America understand that repudiation of all debts by a Soviet Europe is only the loss of Wall Street's international highwaymen, it is the gain of America's workers.

It will make it possible for the workers of Europe to purchase the products of American labor instead of paying interest on and installments of debts to the big bankers.

Let the slogan be, "Repudiate the Debts"! Let the workers of the United States make their demand the loudest, since it is they who are most cursed by the hoards of gold now stored in the treasure chests of the international money lenders on this side of the Atlantic.

Sam's Latest Discovery

Samuel Gompers, when not occupied in attending sessions of the Civic Federation or in saying a few kind words for troglodyte supporters when the hated reds get on their trail, finds time to issue characteristic statements denouncing those children of the devil—the Bolsheviki. To these utterances the capitalist press never fails to give adequate space.

His latest pronunciamento will increase his popularity with all patriots and add lustre to his name in those circles where the myth that America is still the protector of the oppressed and the champion of the right still prevails despite abundant evidence to the contrary.

Sam says that America is not at Genoa because it could not participate in a conference where are the representatives of the Soviet government who accepted the aid of foreign capitalists to gain control of the oil resources of the Georgian republic.

This is indeed interesting news and something that all the spies and newspaper correspondents of the imperialists have been unable to uncover, but we have Sam's word for it. There will probably be carping critics who will make mention of the tone and general comment of the capitalist press at the time the Georgian soviet republic was being established and who will point to the millions spent in the attempt to overthrow the Soviet government of Russia as a refutation of Sam's accusation. Our advice to them is to save their breath.

The labor leader who could watch the atrocities of the American forces in Haiti and Santo Domingo without uttering a word of protest and then assign as the reason for the absence of America at Genoa the horror engendered by the use of force on the part of Russia in protecting herself from invasion, is either too ignorant or too hypocritical to be affected by any criticism except that of the agencies of the bloody imperialism he serves so faithfully.

This last statement of Sam's, however, is so far-fetched and such an obvious fabrication that we doubt its originating with him. It smacks much of the publicity matter emanating from the Bakhmeteff quarters. For this reason we are anxious for that rigid investigation of this ambassador without a country for which some of the more decent official elements are clamoring.

Could this be had we would not be surprised to find a well-worn trail from the A. F. of L. headquarters in Washington to the luxurious home of Bakhmeteff and other renegades.

Prohibition is unknown there, and when Sam has a few drinks he is apt to say most anything.

Fraternal Greetings:

Two years ago to-night we wer put in jail.

As we sit in our cells, awaiting with such calmness as we can command for the final decision, ou hearts are cheered by every demonstration of the growing class-consciousness of labor, and particularly are we inspired by the steadfastne of the Amalgamated membership its struggle against the forces tha for more than two years, last pas have sought to suppress every demonstration of solidarity upon the pa of American labor. If you issue from your Convention more mighty than you entered, your solidarity unimpaired, by the petty ambitions or th limited viewpoint of any group o groups, then the whole movement o American labor will be given a new inspiration.

With the clearness of vision th imprisonment alone can give, we to you from the shadow of th death house that there can be b one hope for the emancipation the workers, nemely: Education a Solidarity.

At times we have doubted our righ to allow the workers to deprive themselves of the necessities of life in order that we might be provided with a defense. We know the cost that yo and your wives and children pay. would seem that this were a gross waste and morally wrong unless the very effort made on our behalf ca lift us from the obscurity that w were in, as members merely of th rank and file of the world's producers, to an eminence where, if w die, our death becomes a challenge t the whole social order.

If we die, we do not want to di uselessly. If we die, we demand th the cloak with which the master cla would seek to hide the real reason fo our death shall be torn aside, an that not merely the "frame-up" itse shall be revealed in all of its hideousness, but that the reasons whic prompt our masters to demand ou death shall be revealed.

Thus only can our death be ma worth while. We would walk to th death house with a smile on our li even tho we have that love of li that all healthy men have, and ev tho we leave behind us those we lo with every fibre of our being, if w knew that we were leaving behind a record of judicial miscarri chicanery, and fraud made mani to the world so that the merest ch could understand the cowardi viciousness and crookedness, the i tellectual and moral bankruptcy the day.

Ruthenberg's Complete Speech at International Ladies' Garment Workers' Convention

The address delivered by C. E. Ruthenberg at the convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, Cleveland, Ohio, Wednesday, May 3rd, 1922, covered in part in last week's issue of THE WORWER, was in full as follows:

The President of the Union, Mr. Benjamin Schlesinger, introduced Ruthenberg as follows:

"Now I introduce to you one whom I expected to see looking different than he does. I expected to see a skeleton, but he looks very well indeed: Comrade Ruthenberg."

Comrades: I am glad to be able to add to what your president has said in regard to my outside appearance, that the inside is as good as the outside; that the spirit with which I fight in the working class movement has not been affected by the experiences I have been thru even as the outside has not been affected.

In opening this address I [illegible] help but add [illegible] Lowe has said in her appeal for political prisoners. While the man in prison may not be broken physically, while they may keep up their spirit and not be broken so far as the workers' struggle is concerned, they are suffering for the cause of the whole working class and the entire working class should unite in a class demand for their release.

Within the last two years in the United States, we have gone thru a period of crisis in the workers' struggle as great as any that the working class has faced in this country.

During the war period when the capitalists needed the labor of the workers to fight their war, some concessions were made to the workers. There was some gain in wages, some gains for the unions in building up their organizations, but these concessions which the capitalists were obliged to make during the war period were made with gnashing of teeth and with the determination [illegible] sented itself the gains would be taken from the workers.

This opportunity came with the close of the period of prosperity about a year and a half after the signing of the Armistice, when industry in this country slowed down in response to the break-down of the financial structure of the capitalist system in Europe and the closing of the European market.

When millions of unemployed were thrown upon the streets, the capitalists found their opportunity to begin a drive against organized labor.

You know that wages have been slashed everywhere, that hours of work have been increased, that there has been an organized drive to destroy the unions, the fighting organizations of the workers.

You know, too, that this drive against the working class, this capitalist offensive, has been in part successful. Wages have been reduced, hours of labor have been increased, and the unions have been [illegible]

The success which the capitalists have gained in their offensive to make worse the working conditions of the workers has been due to the fact that the workers have gone into the struggle disunited.

Each section of the working class which has been attacked has fought alone and been beaten in this struggle because fighting alone.

In place of the whole organization of workers in the United States fighting together, supporting each other at every point and winning their struggle, each union has met the brunt of the attack separately and has been weakened and lost ground as a consequence.

What are we going to do to stop this capitalist offensive? Are we going to continue to fight separately, disunited, weak—because of our failure to show solidarity in this struggle, or are we going to [illegible]

I wish to say to you here that I speak to you as a Communist, as one who follows the leadership of the Communist International.

There has been a great deal said in this convention in regard to the left element, they have been called disruptionists—wreckers of the unions, and all the attacks upon them have been such as to give the impression that they were working to destroy rather than to strengthen and build up your organization.

The left element in this convention so far as it is guided by the program of the Workers Party and of the Communist International has an entirely different purpose.

This left element does not come to you with fraternal greetings (the executive secretary of the Socialist Party has just expressed greetings to the convention). The left element of the Workers Party [illegible]

They are to be at the place of greatest danger to assume the greatest burdens, out in the forefront of every fight that your organization enters and to fight for those things which your organization decides to fight for the immediate benefit of the workers.

They have a program—but it is not a program of disruption. Their purpose is to build a stronger organization of the workers in your industry. To strengthen your present organization, to make it part of the greater organization of the industrial unions of the Needle Trades, which will embrace all the workers of the industry.

A union which will fit itself for the time when the workers will take over and administer industry. Their purpose is to make this [illegible] this country part of the great national organization of the wor which will fight together on the ternational field.

The men and women of the lef this convention are those who most earnest and most ready make sacrifices for your cause. program is constructive, not structive. They come to you the program of the United Fro your industry. The United F on the National Field and a U Front on the International.

With that program your orga tion will go forward, the wo class can win their struggles, nationally and internationally.

FIGHT THE BOSSES!

United Front to Battle Exploiters Urged by Workers Party

The aim of the Workers Party is to win the leadership of the mass struggles of the workers by participating in the everyday fights of the working class and giving these greater meaning and direction thru its programs of action.

With the adoption of a powerful appeal to the workers of the United States to create a United Front in the fight against the open shop and unemployment the Central Executive Committee of the party has laid the foundation for a campaign to win this leadership of the masses.

The program adopted offers a definite method of uniting the organized and unorganized, employed and unemployed for mass resistance to the attack of the capitalists which has already resulted in weakening the unions and reducing wages. It proposes definite means for relief of the unemployed.

The party will throw its full strength into the struggle to win the support of the workers for this program. The whole party organization will be mobilized to give the widest publicity to the manifesto and to have the program of action proposed in the manifesto carried out.

The immediate activities proposed in support of the United Front proposals are:

To print several million copies of the manifesto and distribute them to the workers and workers' organizations of this country.

To arrange a series of mass meetings in the larger industrial centers of the country and to route speakers to address these.

To mail a copy of the manifesto together with a letter urging support to every local union in the United States.

To have every local of the party send its local speakers to the unions to address them on the program of the United Front.

To issue special leaflets on the various proposals of the program and distribute them in large quantities.

To establish a press service thru which the labor papers of the country will be kept in contact with the developments of the United Front campaign.

These definite proposals are but the beginning of a campaign which will grow in intensity as it gets under way. As greater support is secured thru the work of organization and propaganda outlined in the program new strength will be developed and the campaign will be extended.

Party Fight for Leadership

The issuance of this manifesto and the campaign to be carried on in connection with it marks the beginning of the struggle of the party to win the leadership of the workers of this country.

The Workers Party program declares it to be a party of action. It can only become that by throwing itself into the immediate struggles of the workers basing its fight for a program of a wider meaning upon its part in the workers' struggles of the present.

The aim of the campaign to establish the United Front against the open shop and unemployment is to achieve that end. Its purpose is to make the party a factor in a struggle that is touching the life of every worker of this country.

While the workers have been suffering from the open shop campaign and unemployment for more than a year now, no organization has come into the struggle seeking to unite the workers and their organizations against the capitalists and offering a program based upon the needs of the hour.

THE WORKERS PARTY IS NOW OFFERING THAT PROGRAM AND WILL FIGHT FOR ITS ADOPTION.

Members Must Support Program.

There probably never has been as great an opportunity for a working-class party to win support and the confidence of the workers than that presented in the crisis which exists in this country at the present time.

The Central Executive Committee of the party proposes to take advantage of this situation not only to build a strong party organization but

Shoot to Kill! Order in War for Open Shop

CZARIST RUSSIA, FREE AMERICA

"Shoot to kill! Don't spare bullets!"—Governor Trepov, governor of Petrograd before October Revolution, 1905.

"Shoot to kill! Bring them in, dead or alive."—Chief of Police Fitzmorris of Chicago, in "open shop" war against building trades.

(SPECIAL TO THE WORKER)

CHICAGO.—The labor crushing employers on the Citizens' Committee to enforce the Landis award in the building trades succeeded in mobilizing the entire police force in back of their imported strikebreakers.

The police, regular and special, have now the power of life and death. Chief Fitzmorris has ordered them to "Shoot to kill!" at any person they may deem a suspicious character.

Every idle gunman in the Chicago underworld has been recruited by the Citizens' Committee, and scabs are working under armed guards.

The $3,000,000 slush fund raised by the building contractors and their backers is being spent like water to break the morale of the building trades workers while the hysteria lasts.

Bring in "Foreign Element"

The much sought "foreign element," without which no frame-up on labor is complete these days, has been brought into the case by the arrest in Wilkesbarre, Pa., of an unnamed Chicago delegate to the convention of the Ukrainian Workingmen's Association.

He is charged with complicity in the bomb plot.

The situation in Chicago, in view of the murderous attitude of the police department, resembles Petrograd before the revolution of 1905.

Governor Trepov of that city, when the workers showed signs of discontent, told his subordinates:

"Shoot to kill! Don't spare bullets!"

CHICAGO.—The united front of capital against labor has been further solidified in the present war to exterminate the organization of workers in Chicago.

The yellow press, the employers and the corporate interests have jointly accepted the leadership of the self-styled Citizens' Committee.

The murder of two policemen in connection with the bombing of a plant, operating under the terms of the Landis' "award" by gunmen as yet unidentified, is being seized upon in a hope to marshall the combined forces in a final onslaught against the workers, while the tragedy itself is veiled in the greatest mystery.

Minor Writes About "Amalgamated"

By ROBERT MINOR

Maybe it's because they have fought so desperately hard to win their way out of the worst abyss of constant starvation of body and soul, that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers love to make their convention into a dreamland of music and flowers.

Anyway, the Fifth Biennial Convention of the Amalgamated, just closed in Chicago, was, to the eye, a pageant of beauty. To the ear, it was a symphony of remarkable music made by plain clothing workers organized into an orchestra of high quality. To the intellect the convention must appeal as one of the great historical events of the American Labor Movement.

At the first moment of taking the gavel, President Sidney Hillman began an aggressive laying down of policy that lasted thru the fast pace of the entire convention.

The administration made plain at the beginning that it was on the "left" side of the American labor struggle. And the administration held the convention in the hollow of its hand. The brilliant "surprise" quality of the administration's proposals, and the skill and rapidity with which they were presented, left the opposition fumbling, always two laps

"Worker" Sends Dunne to Scene of Miners' Battle Field to Report Evidence Against Bloody Coal Barons.

William F. Dunne, Labor Editor of The Worker, is on his way to the scene of the West Virginia coal miners' battle with the West Virginia Coal Kings.

He will hear the evidence the miners will submit, in the "Treason Trial" at Charles Town, against the most ruthless conspiracy ever instituted against union labor.

Seven hundred coal diggers, the most militant type of union labor in the United States are on trial for their lives and liberties in the Bosses' controlled courts of West Virginia.

Not their lives only hang in the balance in the results of the trial at Charles Town; but more even than the lives of them are at stake. Unionism is at stake. Its fate, whether coal diggers in West Virginia will have the

MANIFESTO OF THE WORKERS PARTY OF AMERICA

Shall the workers of the United States be compelled to accept a lower standard of living? Shall their unions, which in the past have stood between them and the attempt of the employers to force down wages, lengthen hours of labor and make worse their position in industry generally, be destroyed?

These are not questions dealing with theoretical possibilities. They are questions which apply to a great struggle which is now going on in the United States between the workers and the capitalists. They apply to a struggle in which thus far the divided groups of workers have been badly beaten by a closely united group of employers.

The working people of this country are face to face with a determined effort on the part of the capitalist owners of industry to place upon their backs the burden of paying for the destruction and waste and the break-down of the capitalist machinery of production caused by the war. THE WORKERS ARE TO PAY IN LOWER WAGES, LONGER HOURS AND IN WORSE WORKING CONDITIONS. THE WORKERS ARE TO PAY IN A LOWER STANDARD OF LIVING, POORER FOOD, POORER HOMES, LESS OPPORTUNITY FOR EDUCATION AND RECREATION FOR THE MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN OF THE WORKING CLASS.

THE WAR PERIOD

The war created a great demand for goods. After the first few months of the war, orders began to reach the industries of the United States in so great a volume that it required the full productive capacity of the country to turn out the goods. There rights of workers in every civilized part of the world to organize, to present a united front against their exploiters—this is at stake in the West Virginia struggle.

The Coal Kings are prosecuting the miners on charges of "treason" in the hope that they will be able to send to the penitentiary hundreds of the militant miners of the southern coal regions. They hope to rid themselves of the highest type of union men, the fighters who have led the coal diggers up from the darkness of non-union slavery into the sunlight of militant, class-conscious unionism.

With these militants out of the way, safely behind the bars of the state prison, the Coal Barons and labor exploiters hope to forever still the voice of labor revolt in West Virginia and to maintain their undisputed rule in the richest coal producing region of this country. This is their goal. This is the explanation of the West Virginia class-war.

Comrade Dunne will go to Charles Town to personally see and hear the evidence of the miners against their bosses. Reports current among groups of workers having knowledge of the situation promise surprises for the prosecution. Reports of cannon set and trained to sweep the miners' tent colonies; hundreds of affidavits of workers who have been driven from the coal fields under threats of death; of intimidations, thuggery, armed attacks and murder, these indicate the line of evidence the miners will disclose against the rulers of West Virginia.

Dunne's reports of this great labor struggle will begin in next week's issue. Every worker must be made acquainted with Dunne's stories. Thousands more readers must know what has happened in West Virginia. Thousands more readers must be put on THE WORKER mailing list. Every reader must get more subscribers.

At the A. F. of L. Convention

What promises to be the most momentous annual convention of the American Federation of Labor begins at Cincinnati the middle of June. Labor Editor Dunne will be at this convention. His reports to THE WORKER will tell as will not be told elsewhere, what happens there.

New problems arising out of developments in the American and the international labor movements will come to the convention floor for solution. Trade with Soviet Russia. A government loan to Russia. International affiliations, the matter of affiliation with the Red Labor Union International; the rising strength of the Left Wing in the A. F. of L.—these are problems which will, by the logic of world events, be thrust before the convention of American organized labor for solution.

These are a few of the problems that will come before the representatives of the five million workers in the convention. You will want to know the facts of the titanic struggles between the conservatives and the progressives in this convention. You will want to assist in getting the truth to as many workers as possible. You will want the facts of the convention to reach as many union men as you can.

That being so—

And you are alive to Possibilities—This is your Job!

Minor Writes About "Amalgamated"

[illegible] The administration did not lose a single point thru the whole convention.

The "Right" had [illegible] up to date. For some weeks before the convention a caucus of New York leaders of the Socialist Party inside and outside of the Union had laid plans for a partial capture of the Union. This highly organized caucus, backed by both the New York and the Chicago editions of the reactionary "Jewish Daily Forward," landed in Chicago with plans to buck the administration's pro-Soviet Russia policy and various other progressive policies, as we shall see later.

"Right" Faces Hopeless Fight.

Soon the convention developed into a duel between the "Right" and the "Left." The "Right" tried to thwart every important step in advance, and was believed to have planned to elect one of its favorites to one of the highest offices in the Union. But it was a hopeless fight.

The reactionary caucus fondly hoped to mesmerize or stampede the convention with the use of Abraham Cahan, veteran editor of the "Forward," for many years an idol of the Jewish workers of New York, but who has in recent times turned into a vindictive enemy of progress in the labor movement. Cahan is regarded as the "Kautsky" of New York, the star "anti-Bolshevik," the leader who employs his prestige of the past to hold the workers away from modern doctrines and tendencies.

The first heavy blow fell upon the reactionary clique when Cahan's effort at fiery, emotional appeal to past personal loyalties fell flat. It was painfully evident the applause at the end of Cahan's talk was machine-made by the New York caucus. From that time on, the reactionists began to trim sail.

After four days the opposition was too dead even to raise a voice against the "Left" program. On the next to the last day, A. I. Shiplacoff delivered the surrender of the "Right" faction in a speech accepting the accomplishments of the convention.

Five Big Steps Ahead.

The five great acts of the convention consisted in taking a stand for the following:

1—Amalgamation of all of the Needle Trades Unions into a single great industrial union.

2—Establishment of the Shop Delegate system.

3—Independent working class political action.

4—A great project for the industrial reconstruction of Russia by a corporation to be founded principally with funds of Organized Labor.

5—Co-operation with the plan advanced by the Red International of Labor Unions for a united front of all Labor Unions of the World.

Revise Estimates of Hillman.

Sidney Hillman, President of the Union, was revealed as one of the most powerful figures ever known to the American labor movement.

The convention took his program from beginning to end. His skill in parliamentary manoeuver and in debate paralyzed all attempts at opposition. The sheer audacity of his proposals and the clear reasoning of his defense of them, made his opponents of the "Right" appear as bewildered children.

Hillman had always been classed as of the "executive type," as a man of cold, calculating judgment and command of organizational detail that seldom go with oratory. But when he made his speech on Russia, the former estimate had to be enlarged.

Hillman spoke without notes for about an hour and a half. He told the story of Russia as an artist would tell it, and keenly analyzed the factors that make for the capitalistic hatred and scorn of the Workers' Republic. He boldly declared his own firm conviction that the leaders of the Russian Revolution are able, honest, responsible men, capable as no others in the world of performing the unequalled task they have assumed. He said his opinion was strengthened by several long conferences with Lenin, as well as discussions with Trotsky and others.

The convention was spell-bound. It was the spell of oratory, too. Oratory balanced with cool judgment, but oratory that reached every corner of sentiment in the rich hearts of his working-class hearers. When, at the conclusion of his speech, Hillman proposed a plan of startling magnitude for reconstruction of Russia with subscriptions of Organized Labor, pandemonium broke loose. Delegates with tears streaming from their eyes, jumped on chairs and tables and shouted until physically exhausted. An Italian delegate with long hair and flapping, black necktie jumped onto the platform and kissed Hillman. Business was suspended while the uproar lasted more than a half-hour.

Begin With One Million Dollars.

General Secretary Schlossberg then took the floor, saying in part:

"Brother Hilman has made an appeal to you for a $1,000,000 subscription for this enterprise on a perfectly safe, sound and practical basis for the help of our fellow-workers in Russia, so that they may, with our help, be able to solve their own problems. In 1921 $[illegible] called for by the Amalgamated meant $2,000,000. In 1922 it will probably mean a great deal more."

The resolution was read as follows:

Economic Assistance to Russia.

"Whereas, Russia has suffered severely in the war and from a very extensive and prolonged drought, bringing famine and starvation in its wake with the accompanying disease and pestilence; and

"Whereas, the World, and particularly the United States, has been moved to contribute generously for the relief of the milions of starving Russians, a response which is deserving of high commendation and appreciation; and

"Whereas, The war and the famine have prevented for the time the economic reconstruction of Russia; and

"Whereas, The present problems of Russia cannot be solved solely with the aid of philanthropy or gratuitous gifts, but by economic co-operation with Russia and the Soviet government of Russia to the end that her enormous resources may once more be able to provide for her requirements; and

"Whereas, We are informed that the Soviet government is willing and desirous of entering into industrial arrangements for the manufacture of clothing and for the carrying on of other industrial enterprises in Russia;

"Now, therefore, be it hereby declared our purpose so to join in co-operation with the Soviet government of Russia, and we authorize the officials of this organization, at their discretion and upon their judgment, to enter into arrangements with the Soviet government of Russia for the manufacture of clothing and for carrying on such other industrial enterprises as to them shall seem best; that in carrying on such work they may use such methods and devices as may seem best, either by the forming of a corporation, or of several of them, either for the owning of stock in Russian companies entirely or in connection with the Soviet government, or for the purpose of directly carrying on industry in conjunction with or without co-partnership with the Soviet government; and for that purpose we hereby set aside the sum of $50,000, to be the investment of this organization therein, and also set aside the further sum of $10,000 for the purpose of carrying on and defraying expenses that may be incurred in connection therewith."

It is seen that this resolution does not finance the entire plan, but gives it official sanction and appropriates the initial funds to cover early expenses and to start the raising of the first million dollars.

Yellows Try to Delay Actions.

The "Right" opposition could not hope to do more than partially obstruct the plan. Delegate Herschkowitz of the "Right" Socialist Forward faction was on his feet instantly with a motion to postpone consideration until the afternoon. He was voted down on a call for the previous question, and the measure was unanimously carried. Ten minutes more of riotous cheering.

The one thing that the "radicals" and "progressives" were determined to get thru this convention was a straight out demand for consolidation of all Needle Unions.

The "Right" opposition tried to defeat the plan for consolidation of all Needle Trades Unions into one Industrial Union. Their method was to try to turn it into another abortive "alliance" or "federation" such as proved such a farce when recently attempted.

Hillman accepted the challenge. He said:

"The general officers and the General Executive Board of the organization maintain the position expressed in the resolution (in favor of consolidation).

"The needle trades are co-operating today more than some of the federated alliances of the American Federation of Labor. Right in this city you have a federation of the building trades, with half of them working and half of them striking, and it would be much better for the building trades not to fool themselves with the federation, because in an actual struggle it did not operate.

"I am against an alliance because I believe an alliance will only bring an illusion of power and when you come to fight you will find you have no power. It is well for each organization not to overestimate its power. That is why we were against a mere Needle Trades Alliance. But we tried it, and any statement that the organization did not try it in good faith is not in accord with the facts. The Alliance was formed when the lockout in New York City took place. Now that struggle is over. We came out successful, but if we had relied on the Alliance for the kind of help that one is justified in expecting from an alliance, there might have been a disastrous ending in New York City.

"I am sure that every officer in every other organization was and is honest in trying to make the Alliance work, but an alliance is so loose it cannot work. If an alliance cannot work when there is a lockout involv[illegible] ance. Even the Triple Alliance in Great Britain broke down when a real test came, and the workers in Great Britain have paid a terrible penalty for playing with the word "alliance." If the miners had known that they could not rely on the railroad workers and the transport workers they would not have assumed the task that they did assume, and they would have brought about a settlement according to their own power and not according to illusory power. When you lean upon illusory power from outside, you destroy your own power.

"Why must we make a wrong step because there is no opportunity to make a right step? It is one thing to be cautious, and another to do nothing. I hope the convention will not instruct the officers to play with something which has no basis in reality, simply to please our own notions that we have done something.

"For these reasons the General Executive Board recommends the adoption of this resolution." (Applause.)

The resolution for consolidation was overwhelmingly adopted.

The following telegram was sent to the convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, in session at Locomotive Engineers' Building, Cleveland, Ohio:

"The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, assembled at the Fifth Biennial Convention and joyfully reviewing the work of the past two years, sends greetings to you, fellow workers. Our interests as workers and yours are identical and call for working class solidarity. That is true of the entire working class. But in the case of the needle trades there are special conditions dictating the formation of a close union of all the workers. Such a union will constitute a power which will insure to all workers concerned protection against any attack by the enemy. It is our sincere hope that that great and all-inclusive unity will ultimately be realized."

For Workers' Political Action

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers' convention has blazed a new path by declaring for working-class political action. In taking this momentous step, the delegates showed that they knew its significance—knew that it means a new page in American history when the example is followed by the main body of organized labor.

Surprising as it may seem to those who are not familiar with recent developments, the only opposition to this measure for political action was voiced by leaders of the Socialist Party, tho it is probable that the anarchists as well voted against it.

Delegate Beckerman, the New York Socialist Party leader, was the spokesman in opposition. The resolution reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the General Executive Board shall stand instructed to make a careful investigation of the question of political action, and after due deliberation make recommendations for political action that will [illegible]

The resolution is as follows:

"Whereas, The whole tendency of modern times is toward the international co-ordination of all movements and enterprises, whether they be of labor or capital; and

"Whereas, These are times of monster combinations of capital, over-reaching all national boundaries, engaged in sinister attempts to defeat and crush the labor movement both within each nation and on an international scale; and

"Whereas, A well-defined movement to defend the sacred cause of labor by co-ordinating our industrial organizations on an equally broad international scale is shown in the communications to the Amsterdam Trade Union International from the Moscow International of Labor Unions, inviting the former to participate in the formation of a United Front of all the labor unions of the world; therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, in its Fifth Biennial Convention asembled, express its approval of the efforts for a United Front of all the labor organizations of the world, and give its heartiest co-operation in the fight against organized capital."

Having agreed to support this resolution in place of all others, the entire "left" caucus voted down all resolutions on the same subject, among which were several for affiliation. This gave the excuse for the Chicago edition of the "Jewish Daily Forward" to publish a scare headline to the effect that the Red International of Labor Unions was turned down by the convention.

This merely accentuates the supreme contempt that this newspaper earned for itself since the glorious days when it tried to aid in the destruction of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers by supporting the Harry Cohen gang.

Of revolutionary significance is the fact that the convention committed itself to the Shop Delegate system, by passing a constitutional amendment making possible the great change.

There was some dissatisfaction expressed among "Left" delegates over the failure to get rid of the so-called "impartial chairman" and standards of production. But one thing is certain: the convention was an overwhelming victory for the "Left."

And in the end, it had to be realized that, with all its epoch-making departure from the dead, hopeless path of "a fair day's work for a fair day's pay"—there has never been more UNITY found in an American labor convention.

32 Prisoners in San Quentin Penitentiary Contribute to the Russian Famine Relief

The appeal from the famine area has penetrated the walls of the prisons of this country.

San Quentin penitentiary, home of scores of fighting workers of this country, who have been incarcerated for their activities in behalf of the working class, has heard the appeal and has answered.

The Friends of Soviet Russia has received contributions from thirty-two men at San Quentin valiant fighters all of them—men whom the working class struggling outside needs badly in the daily battle. Sixty-five dollars from the fighters inside the prison walls to the fighters outside hemmed in by the walls of hunger!

Dave Caplan sent in the money—Dave Caplan who went to prison for fighting for the workers. The thirty-one others are Tom Mooney, J. B. McNamara, R. Burns, Walter Wismer, Harry Williams, R. Bendig, M. Tom Mooney Has Not Forgotten

Tom Mooney, against whose conviction the workers of Petrograd demonstrated, has sent a splendid letter to his wife in behalf of the Russian workers and peasants.

"My Darling Wife:—I just received a blank page from the Friends of Soviet Russia out of their 'Roll Call Book' for the relief of the famine stricken, together with other literature detailing the horror that is impossible of word description.

"Every time I see the word Russia or think of it I feel ashamed that in spite of my present predicament I have not contributed in some small measure to aid the famine-stricken in Soviet Russia.

"Before me is a picture of father, mother and child lying in an open field beside the road in their last long sleep—Death, the grim reaper, has claimed them. They are almost nude, their emaciated bodies tell the tale of the Russian famine. Another picture—a great pile of bodies of little babes, naked and tangled, near a railway station in Russia, ready to be taken to a trench and buried en masse. They are half covered with snow. True, there is suffering in this and other countries, but nothing that can even begin to compare with the suffering in Russia.

"I don't want to hear about our depleted finances or anything else—I want to help—I want all my relatives and friends and every worker to help in a way that counts. Better that we die helping these, than live in their suffering and death. Our life and happiness comes out of their lives—in their death we are miserable and too will perish for our callous indifference to them. Was it not the Russian workers—in our darkest hour—that rendered the greatest assistance to our cause? Their protest rang round the world—was the subject of much diplomatic correspondence in the heat of the world's most destructive war.

"Again I say—with them we live—their fight is ours. I want to send ten dollars from our funds in my own name, the same for Warren, and I hope that yourself, John, mother, and all of your friends relatives and every one connected with our defense will place his or her name to this page from the 'Roll Call Book' AT ONCE. Forward same without delay. This must be done regardless of what happens to our defense.

"Lovingly, Tom."

"We Take Our Stand in the Ranks of the Workers Party"

Statement of Communists Released from New York State Prisons

To the Members and Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party of America.

Comrades: The cause for which we went to prison was th Communist movement which sprang into life with the coming the Russian Revolution and the founding of the Communist In ternational. It was because as members of the Left Wing of t Socialist Party and of the Communist Party which succeeded t Left Wing, we devoted our energies to the upbuilding of a rev lutionary movement in the United States that we felt the we of the iron fist of capitalism.

The attack upon this movement, which resulted in the depo tation and imprisonment of thousands of our comrades, for period halted its growth and development. But all the forces th the capitalist class can muster cannot permanently halt a move ment springing out of the oppression and exploitation of the cap talist system and based upon the needs of the workers in th struggle against the capitalists. The outward form of the move ment may change, its principles may be expressed in differen words, but its inspiration and purpose remains the same.

The information in regard to the formation of the Worker Party which trickled thru to our prison cells brought us new hop and courage. In the birth of the Workers Party we saw comin to life for the open struggle against capitalism that movement t which we had given our services in the past and which we hope to serve in the future.

The capitalist class is engaged in a great offensive against th workers of this country to reduce their wages, increase hours labor and destroy their unions. We are in a period when the nee of the hour is an organization with the program and initiative t unite the workers in a common struggle against the ruling clas

The Workers Party offers that program; in its ranks are me and women who have the vision and courage to create a unite front of the workers against the capitalist offensive and to tur the struggle into a workers' offensive against capitalism.

The opening of the prison doors has made it possible for u to take our places again in the revolutionary movement. We ar proud to take our stand in the ranks of the Workers Party o America.

Fraternally yours,
Signed:—

Many Friends Arrange a Surprise Party for Gitlow and Winitsky

About sixty friends of Harry Winitsky and Ben Gitlow arranged a surprise party in their honor.

They were brought into the darkened banquet hall at 10 o'clock and given an enthusiastic reception.

Mrs. Katerin Gitlow, introduced as the Mother of "The Red Ruby," was toast-mistress and many of those present responded with remarks of welcome to the two men who have proven their devotion to their class by giving up more than two years of their liberty in the class struggle.

Ben Gitlow gave a vivid description of prison life. He told of his incarceration in February, 1920, of his removal to Dannemora and of his transfer to Auburn.

"Prison cannot break the spirit of the revolutionist," he said. "Those on the inside do not want sickening sentimentality.

"What they have a right to expect of their comrades on the outside is unceasing effort to wipe out the system under which the masses live in squalid poverty. They may send me back, but while I am out I shall do my duty by my class."

Harry Winitsky, looking happy and feeling as he looked, reviewed the struggle of the Left Wing, and told how the Communist Party came into being.

He recalled many incidents, some humorous, others serious, and all of them intensely interesting. He, too, announced that he was taking up the struggle where he had been compelled by the capitalist class to relinquish it.

"I am glad to be with you again," he said. "I cannot tell how long my partial freedom is to be allowed me. But while I am out, I propose to give a good account of myself. The horrors of prison life are made more horrible to the revolutionist because he is taken out of the active struggle.

"But the knowledge that the movement is alive, and active, and on the way to achievement means more to a class war prisoner than anything else.

"Our message to you, if we must go back, is to labor unceasingly for the overthrow of capitalism and the inauguration of the Workers Republic."

Some of the political puppets under the ivory dome of the national capitol at Washington are barking at the merging of steel companies. They want to maintain "competition." But capitalist evolution will proceed in spite of them. And the trustification of industry will make it easier to sweep on to Communism when the workers get ready to establish soviet rule.

A class war culminating in the establishment of a Workers' State is inevitable.

Irish "Strike" Against Militarism.

DUBLIN (By mail), April 27.—The strike called by the Irish Labo Party against militarism was a grea success judging from the fact tha not a wheel turned for 15 hour thruout the South of Ireland.

It is not surprising that it was success, for, indeed, it had the wholehearted support of all the Irish capitalists and the Southern Tories who have as much use for a workingman as an Irish devil is supposed to have for holy water.

As a matter of fact it was a strike against the Irish Republican movement and for the Free State. The Labor Party officials who never demonstrated for Jim Larkin's release from an American prison had no hesitation in giving a day to a futile demonstration against militarism, altho the platforms from which they spoke were lined with soldiers with fixed bayonets to protect the labor leaders from the wrath of the workers whom they were selling out in the interest of the Free State politicians.

In order to make the parade a success Guinness's Brewery gave its employees a day off with full pay, on condition that they join the labor demonstration against militarism. The Guinness management is absolutely opposed to unions and runs an open shop. This speaks volumes for the character of the so-called strike.

The labor speakers never mentioned Jim Larkin's name—Jim is a Republican, a Workers' Republican—from any of their platforms, but the radicals held a Larkin demonstration in the vicinity of the labor officials' meeting, and the following resolution was unanimously passed by the workers there assembled:

"Be it resolved that this mass meeting of Irish workers, citizens of the Irish Republic, condemn the action of the Irish Labor Party in forcing this lockout in support of the Free State, and that we further demand the release and return of Jim Larkin to his former position as leader of the Irish labor movement.'

The great strike against militarism was in reality a great "lockout" in the interests of the British-created Irish Free State and against the interests of the Irish workers.

In Next Week's Issue! Dunne's Special Report of the West Virginia Miners' Trial

Harrison and Dunne Speak to Pa. Labor

The Pennsylvania Labor Party, organized two years ago, held its second convention in Scranton coincident with the convention of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor.

Chairman Kutz, a member of the Machinists Union of Altoona, presided over the first session. He delivered a brief report concerning the work of himself and Secretary Fuller and described the campaign of last year when the labor party captured the city administration in Altoona following the bitterly fought strike of the railway shopmen there.

Sponsored by State Federation

Altho sponsored by the State Federation of labor, Chairman Kutz stated that the labor party was expected to stand on its own feet and by its own activity show that it filled a need. To make the labor party a real force in the organized labor movement of the state much organization work would be necessary; the workers must be convinced of the important part that independent political action played in building up the labor movement.

Secretary Fuller told briefly of the work that was being done and of the financial handicap under which the party was laboring. He stated that he had been receiving invitations from many labor unions recently to appear at meetings and explain the program of the party and that great interest was being displayed by the large crowds of workers attending these meetings. He urged that the party immediately launch a state-wide organization campaign and prepare to contest the coming elections.

Lack Political Consciousness.

The chairman and secretary were re-elected by acclamation at the close of the first session.

It was at the second session, with Kutz and Fuller absent thru pressure of other business, that the lack of political consciousness among the members of the organized labor movement became apparent. There was no one present who cared to take the initiative seemingly and the delegates worked at cross purposes for more than an hour.

The fact that a constitution for the organization had been adopted and that the work already done had been under its provisions was unknown to the majority of those present and much time was wasted discussing rules and regulations already in existence.

Explain Workers Party Stand

The program and principles of the Workers Party of America were outlined to the delegates by William F. Dunne, who stated that the Workers Party was prepared to co-operate as a left wing group with a bona-fide proletarian parliamentary movement, but that it could not agree to sink its identity in such movements as were now in existence.

Caleb Harrison, national organizer of the Workers Party, explained to the delegates the complexion of the various groups which gathered at the recent Chicago conference and dealt with the proposals of that conference as they affected the political situation now facing the workers of this country.

Workers in Confusion.

The confused state of mind characteristic of even the more intelligent American workers when attempting to deal with political questions was the most noticeable feature of this second session.

American labor has become so accustomed to one way of thinking on the job and another when governmental policies are under discussion, it has become so accustomed to having its choice of municipal, state and federal officials determined by their attitude on more or less minor questions, that it finds it hard to acquire the broader outlook necessary for the formation of organizations for the political struggle based on the theory that government is the instrument of the employers—a theory, by the way, that organized labor in this country, as a body, does not yet accept.

Organized labor in the United States has no confidence in itself as a political unit. The "hat in hand" policy of the American Federation of Labor, the habit of wheedling, cajoling and occasionally of making threats that could not be carried out, has had a demoralizing effect on the personnel of organized labor; it has made it possible for officials to serve the employers politically and still pose as good union men; it has made it very hard to build a political organization which can control its members altho they have no objection to discipline in the unions to which they belong.

In spite of these obstacles the labor party will probably be a strong factor in Pennsylvania this year. The desire for something that will clarify the issue on the political field is expressing itself in increased attendance at labor party meetings and a general feeling of disgust with the minor role now played by labor.

The immediate demands of the labor party in Pennsylvania differ but little from those of similar movements.

They have the same vagueness that characterizes reform enterprises except for one thing. This is the demand for the abolition of the state constabulary and it is around this demand that the struggle will rage as the party grows in strength.

Cossacks Class Issue.

This is a class issue because the constabulary is used only against the workers and organized labor of the state has always been a unit in opposition to these mercenaries of the steel trust.

To what extent the Workers Party can function in co-operation with the labor party in Pennsylvania is problematical until the movement is more developed. But there is no doubt that the chances for sound educational work will be greatly increased in districts where only under the guise of electioneering can propaganda work be done.

The Chicago Case

The collection of a $1,000,000 slush fund by the Citizens' Committee of Chicago—on which are represented all the great labor-hating corporations of the Middle West—has brought quick results.

The headquarters of the Building Trades Council has been raided, following the bombing of a building and the shooting of two policemen, and more than two hundred officers and members of Labor Unions have been arrested.

A judge, evidently desiring to share the limelight with that eminent baseballist, Judge Landis, whose award has been the cause of all the trouble, promptly declares that the arrested men are guilty of treason and suspends all the usual methods of legal procedure.

The moving picture actor who happens to be chief of police in Chicago, due to a spin of the political machine, gets his picture taken and announces that the labor unions are to be cleaned out or up or words to that effect.

A reward of $100,000 is offered for the slayers of the police officers and it seems to be taken for granted by the capitalist press that there is direct connection between the bombers and organized labor.

The press clamors for the death penalty for the arrested men in advance of any trial and already the liberal and yellow socialist press is taking its cue from the employers' journals.

The stage is all set for another drive against labor in Chicago—the stronghold of organized labor in the United States. It has long been a thorn in the side of the organized employers of this nation.

All this brings to mind the Mooney case. It, too, was preceded by a well-planned attack on the wages, hours and working conditions of the unions. A million dollar slush fund was raised by the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco. The public mind was staggered by a barrage of publicity designed to prove that the radical elements in the labor unions were children of the devil. Then came the blow-off.

Something of the sort is evidently under way in Chicago. The bombing of buildings and the shooting of policemen and henchmen of the opposition has become an industry in the political life of Chicago and with this pleasant occupation the authorities have never interfered. The newly aroused pious horror at the latest outrage is quite easily seen to be the stage-play accompanying the attempt to fasten the blame on organized labor for something that has been a daily event in the under-world of Chicago politics for as far back as the memory of man goes.

The attack on labor unions in Chicago is designed to capture the sympathy of the public with the premise that the employers of that city are a godly band who are rescuing the consumers from the grip of an unholy combination of murderers and the Haymarket affair has been resurrected and is doing yeoman service in the employers cause.

If labor has learned anything in the last few years it will fight this battle out on the straight issue of the class struggle and ignore all the red herrings that the employers' press will try to drag across the trail that leads straight to the highest offices in the nation.

As far as this paper is concerned our position was stated in our first issue:

IN A STRUGGLE WITH THE EMPLOYERS AND THEIR AGENTS LABOR IS ALWAYS RIGHT.

"THEY"

BY SIEGFRIED SASSOON

The Bishop tells us: "When the boys come back
They will not be the same; for they'll have fought
In a just cause: they lead the last attack
On Anti-Christ; their comrades' blood has bought
New right to breed an honorable race.
They have challenged Death and dared him face to face."

"We're none of us the same!" the boys reply.
"For George lost both his legs; and Bill's stone blind;
Poor Jim's shot thru the lungs and like to die;
And Bert's gone syphilitic; you'll not find
A chap who's served that hasn't found SOME change."
And the Bishop said: "The ways of God are strange!"

Forty workers were arrested in Tokio, Japan, for carrying red flags on May Day.

The Coal Man

By MILES DUNNE

You've read about the toilers
In all kinds of climes
Who work the hardest
For the longest times;
The Coolie Man
In Hindustan
And the native carrier in Indialand.
But there's one whose troubles
I'd like to tell;
He carries loads in a coal dust hell.

Half a block long,
All up grade;
Sun boiling down, ain't no shade,
Makes a man hustle, mighty stiff climb,
Basket gets heavier all the time.

He was born real white,
But he's since turned black
And he's all stooped over
From the load he packs.
Thirty Ton;
His day is done.
It might look easy but it ain't no fun.
His wages ain't so very high,
He's about as well off as that Chinese guy.

Ten steps up, turn to the right
Across the lawn and out of sight;
Dumps the basket, never a slip
Hurries back for another trip.

His work's not pretty
And he don't look neat,
But it's all he knows
And he's got to eat.
When he dies
And his black soul flies
In the opposite direction from the skies;
There's only one work he knows real well:
He'll be carrying red hot coals in hell.

But in a crowd of men I'll bet on him
For his work don't leave much time for sin;
And Satan will give him an easy berth,
'Cause he got his hell right here on earth.

Communist, and Proud of It

LONDON.—Three Communists were arrested in London on May Day for selling pamphlets and other literature in Hyde Park during the May Day Demonstration there. They were brought before a police magistrate.

Janet Irvine, 35, described as a gardener, of Beadon-road, Hammersmith, was fined 10s. ($2.50) for selling "The Workers' Dreadnought."

Bert Higgs 17, french polisher, sold "The Young Communist" and was arrested.

The Magistrate: I suppose you are paid to sell this?

Higgs: No I am not. I was doing it because I love my class.

Magistrate: You are a Communist?

Higgs: Yes, and proud of it.

He was fined 10s. ($2.50).

A fine of 15s. ($3.75) was inflicted in the case of Frederick Sudborough, 53, Hallcroft-road, E., who sold a pamphlet—"No More War."

[illegible] War on [illegible]

Benjamin Schlesinger, after all his stage-play to the contrary, accepted nomination and was re-elected president of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union at the convention just adjourned at Cleveland, Ohio.

In accepting re-election Schlesinger stated the policy of his administration to be:

"We workers in this country must fight not only the greed and selfishness of American capitalists but the Red Menace of Russia."

Schlesinger Backs Up Gompers

Schlesinger thus endorses and adopts as his own the anti-Soviet policy of Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor.

Perhaps now Gompers will take Schlesinger unto his bosom, at the Cincinnati Convention of the A. F. of L. next month, and make him a vice-president of that organization.

It will be remembered that Schlesinger defeated the resolution in the Cleveland Convention preventing delegates of the "International" from voting for Civic Federation members and officials as officers of the A. F. of L. Schlesinger can now vote for Gompers for re-election.

Convention's Last Days.

The last days of the I. L. G. W. U. convention proved as reactionary as its opening, when several left delegates were expelled by the Schlesinger controlled majority, and those whom the members had repudiated at the elections were seated.

The administration's anti-soviet resolution, brought in by several vice-presidents, demanding that the Soviet government restore freedom of speech, press and assemblage, and release political prisoners, was carried by a vote of 129 to 45.

Some of the anarchist delegates, who called themselves "lefts," spoke and voted with the administration forces for the resolutions which places the "International" among the enemies of Soviet Russia.

The proposal of the left elements allowing unions to institute the shop delegate system, which was considered as an opportunity for drawing in large numbers of workers into the activities of the union, was defeated by 141 to 49.

Resolutions favoring proportional representation, recall of elected officials and the referendum were also defeated.

The convention officially condemned the left elements in the union, branding them as outsiders and destroyers of the organization. The left delegates maintained that their opposition to the policies of the administration was born out of the needs of the organization and not because of influence from the outside.

"Lusk Bills" Withdrawn.

At the eleventh hour the disciplinary measures introduced by Delegate Ninfo, who was the administration choice for first vice-president, which would make the general executive board the sole arbiter of locals and members who dare to criticize the officials, were withdrawn.

The administration realized it was going a bit too far. These measures were known among the delegates as the "Lusk Bills."

Schlesinger Is Re-elected.

President Schlesinger, who assured the world but the day before, that he would not run for re-election, finally allowed his consent to be made public and was re-elected by a vote of 198 to 14. It was at first proposed that the election be made by acclamation, but five delegates announced they wish to be recorded as voting against Schlesinger. On a standing vote there were 14 delegates against Schlesinger, while many lefts refused to vote at all.

The 15 vice-presidential candidates on the administration slate were elected. The lefts had three candidates, Shane, Wechsler and Berlin. Shane received 100 votes but failed by 22 votes of election. Wechsler got 89 and Berlin 83 votes.

Antonini, of the Italian Waist Makers, New York City, who voted against Gompers at Denver last year, received the highest vote for delegate to the American Federation of Labor convention next month at Cincinnati. This in spite of the fact that he was reprimanded by the "International's" general executive board.

SACRAMENTO, Cal.—Governor Stephens has received a petition from the Los Angeles county branch of the Rank and File Federation of Workers, pleading for a pardon for Mooney and Billings.

There are 200,000 unemployed in Canada; including dependents, 1,000,000 men, women and children, who have nowhere to look for bread for the morrow.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

[illegible]

[illegible] It will come as a shock, therefore, to a rather large number of well-[illegible] to discover that this same Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union—[illegible] the lowest level possible for a labor official to reach, that he has become a tool of the employing interests of California and the United States and has volunteered his services in enforcing the most subversive and dastardly piece of legislation that disgraces the statute books of any nation—the Criminal Syndicalism law under which hundreds of workers have been jailed for the mere crime of opinion. In no state in the union has this law been enforced with the viciousness it has in California, and it is in this state that Andrew Furuseth placed himself and the remnants of his organization at the service of the authorities and the employers for the expressed purpose of jailing workers with whom he disagreed.

It needs to be said that at no time has Andrew Furuseth been the sainted leader to the men whom he ruled with an iron hand that he was to those who see every critic of the Gompers machine thru rosy spectacles. Twenty-two years spent in Washington, D. C., the most poisonous atmosphere in America, is not conducive to radicalism or liberalism. Furuseth was an autocrat and his single-track mind saw the Seamen's Law as the end and not the means to an end for his organization.

Trained, as an organization, to rely almost solely on legislative action, the International Seamen's Union, when forced to strike in 1921, collapsed like the hollow shell it was. To-day it is but the shadow of an organization, and at the recent convention the constitution was so amended that it became nothing more or less than the personal property of Furuseth.

The Industrial Workers of the World have always been active among the seamen, and the seamen themselves have always been very sympathetic toward the idea of industrial unionism. It would hardly be correct to say that the militant section of the International Seamen's Union was affiliated with the I. W. W., they supported it not as an organization, but simply as an expression of their desire for industrial organization.

It was this group that supported the Seamen's Journal—one of the best labor publications in the United States while edited by John Vance Thompson, whom Furuseth had expelled after a long campaign of slander and trickery and who were largely responsible for the progressive attitude adopted by the union from time to time.

With the failure of the strike in 1921 the sentiment for industrial organization gained headway and Furuseth immediately took the stand that shipowners were refusing to deal with the union because of the radicals in its ranks. With a few of his henchmen he entered upon a policy of absolute servility to the will of the bosses that has no parallel in all the black history of treachery to the working class in the United States.

He became the open upholder of the criminal syndicalism law; he justified its passage; he urged his members to obey it in word and deed and he used its provisions to terrify the alien members of the Seamen's Union.

These charges are not the wild vaporings of Furuseth's enemies; even his opponents in the union have been astounded at the depths to which this idol of the liberals has sunk because they have usually conceded his honesty of purpose; in a pamphlet issued by Furuseth entitled "A Sound Warning and the Shipowners' Queer Policies," widely distributed in California by such friends of the workers as the Better American Federation and the Chambers of Commerce, he convicts himself in the eyes of any honest worker no matter where his sympathies may lie.

In the first part of this pamphlet Furuseth gives the law in full and then urges all members to obey its provisions; to the alien seaman he says:

"America has given you freedom to quit your vessels in American ports. The United States struck the shackles from your limbs. It raised all the seamen from serfdom to the freedom granted to all other workers within its borders. You have a right to think highly of such a country; but you must realize that with freedom comes responsibility. To listen to proposals that are contrary to law you cannot at all times help. Your shipmate brings it up in the forecastle, but there is no good reason why you should encourage it or really tolerate it. If you are a real man you must be able to see and understand that when you do you are returning evil for good."

There is much more along the same line, but the above extract is enough if the reader will keep in mind that Furuseth is talking about and urging obedience to the most vicious anti-labor measure ever framed. In addition to this he is taking advantage of the fears of the foreign-born who, in the light of recent events, has less rights in this land of the free than the rats who are his shipmates.

The second part of the pamphlet contains an open letter to the Shipowners' Association of the Pacific Coast; it contains a detailed account of how Furuseth and his henchmen, in response to the requests of the shipowners, expelled Vance Thompson, editor of the Seamen's Journal, and a number of other active members to whom the shipowners objected. This objection to them on the part of the employers is plainly stated in the letter as the reason for their expulsion.

In the letter from which we quote, Furuseth asks why the shipowners have not lived up to their part of the agreement. He says that the union "has cleaned house" but that the bosses have failed to live up to their part of the agreement with him.

What did Furuseth expect? Did he think that after he had destroyed his own organization at the behest of the bosses by expelling its fighting membership that the bosses would continue to recognize the union? Never has there been a more pitiable exhibition of incompetency and slavish servility than this letter gives.

Could there be anything more despicable than the following passage in which this hoary hypocrite is referring to men objected to by the bosses?

"They are expelled and their names are published in our official minutes, yet they keep sailing. Why? They are arrested and are out on bail; their trials are delayed. Why? WE OFFER TO POINT THEM OUT, but this offer is not accepted. WHY ARE THEY NOT IN THE PEN?" (Emphasis ours.)

The men who Furuseth offers to point out had been arrested and indicted under the Criminal Syndicalism law of California. Further comment on this phase of this arch-stoolpigeon's activities would seem to be unnecessary.

Now as to what Furuseth thinks of the function of a seamen's union; let us see whether he was the Messiah of the oppressed seamen as workers or whether he had other ambitions.

In the letter referred to occurs the following sentence:

The law would be used anyway, and the Union, such as we have struggled to make it—AN ORGANIZATION TO HELP BUILDING A REAL PERSONNEL FOR A REAL AMERICAN SEA POWER—would temporarily pass away. (Emphasis ours.)

It appears from the above that Furuseth is not and has never been a representative of the workers, that he was and is merely the cheap patriotic type to whom an American merchant marine is more important than the interests of the mariners. As if to leave no doubt of where his sympathies really lie he concludes this shameless document with the following:

"With great respect and in the interest of a real and lasting American Merchant Marine, I beg to remain on behalf of real seamen,

"Andrew Furuseth, Secretary,
"Sailors' Union of the Pacific.
"December 5, 1921."

I have saved the worst Furusethian crime for the last. It has to do with the reward he demanded in return for the expulsion of the militant members of his union.

This was nothing more or less then the issuance of passes to men certified by himself and the shipowners. Without these passes no man could gain entrance to the docks. It is the most efficient espionage and blacklist system ever devised, yet here we find it proposed by one who has been idealised as the type of militant leadership in the American Labor Movement.

What has been the result of this crawling policy?

Just what could be expected. Having emasculated the union the shipowners no longer pay any attention to it. For all practical purposes it has disappeared except for Furuseth and a few other officers who drag in enough per capita to maintain themselves.

On the other hand the Marine Transport Workers have organized some twenty-five or thirty thousand former members. The organization is yet in the formative stage. It has as yet no fixed policy. It has not found itself but already it appears to realize that a transport workers union must be industrial in form and international in scope; that it must, because of the conditions of the industry, be not only international in name but in action.

What its future will be depends largely upon the manner in which it [illegible] the problems of organization and international affiliation during the next few months. One thing is already accomplished. It is to put fear in the minds of those who go down to the sea in ships. On the [illegible] it is putting up a [illegible] fight against the bosses—and organizing.

Furuseth has passed.

Shoot to Kill Order in War for Open Shop

pers declares that the murders were perpetrated by "convict-led labor leaders who have been fighting the Landis award," and states that now is the time for all good citizens to stand firmly and squarely against this graft-infested murderous band of so-called labor leaders.

The papers carry frenzied editorials about the "rotten corrupt labor unions" and huge sums have been offered for the apprehension of the perpetrators of the crime. Public opinion is being manufactured on a grand scale.

Murder conspiracy indictments have been voted against labor men, including the so-called big three, Tim Murphy, president of the gas workers' union; "Con" Shea, from the teamsters, and Fred Mader, president building trades council.

And it is claimed by the police that there is sufficient evidence on hand to establish violation of the anarchy act and bring about a conviction of the big three as the instigators of the crime.

This is the same act under which the Haymarket victims were sentenced to death, charged with conspiracy leading to riot and murder.

Whether the bombings and the consequent killing of the two policemen were committed by persons connected with a labor union or by stool-pigeons of the "Citizens' Committee" has not at this time been established, but it is significant the manner in which all such incidents are being exploited to discredit the labor movement.

Several bombings have occurred in Chicago lately, both of union and of non-union buildings, and each time a strenuous effort has been made to link it up with some labor union.

Now the crime wave is spreading terror thruout the city and naturally tempting the enemies of labor to use blackmail tactics to make every union headquarters a crime center.

The struggle of the Chicago building trades unions against the heinous encroachments of the "Citizens' Committee" has been carried on with ever greater effect and brought ever greater unification within the ranks of the workers.

Since the 12 "outlaw" trades organized their joint publicity committee and aroused the masses from their lethargy to a monster demonstration on April 29, the "Citizens' Committee" received proof of the solidarity of these workers and of their readiness to meet them face to face and use the weapons of united action.

The howling capitalist mob lost the first round and retreated speedily to cook up some new cowardly device, that might not necessitate their coming out in the open.

Several union headquarters were raided after the murder of the two policemen and yet the workers refuse to become excited, but carry on the struggle against the scab shop undisturbed, to them these two things have no connection. "Big Tim" Murphy, altho he manages to keep himself in office in the gas workers union, is notoriously known by every workingman as a political gangster and a parasite upon the movement.

He is a powerful force in City Hall politics and a characteristic product of the corrupt capitalist political system. Shea's record is similar to that of most reactionary union officials, and the building trades council, of which Mader is president, has been so utterly discredited that the "outlawed" trades, which means 80 per cent of the affiliated unions look upon it as a joke.

In the past few months it has repeatedly reversed its own decisions, some of the affiliated unions have gone on strike while others have scabbed upon them, the former have gone back to work while the others went on strike, and the council urged general acceptance of the Landis' award.

Recently the building trades council endorsed a resolution calling for a strike on all jobs where scabs are employed. This move, however, is not taken seriously by the rank and file workers, because the council calls for strikes on all scab jobs while it endorsed the Landis' award with its scab clauses, forbidding strikes, abolishing all restrictions on all manufactured material, except prison made, and granted the bosses the right to employ non-union men with union men. It smacks very much of a move to get the so-called outlaw or insurgent unions back to the folds of the building trades council in order to make the whole industry safe for the damnable Landis' award.

The present shake up of "labor crooks" tends to lead in the same direction. The "Citizens' Committee" is calculating upon the destruction of the unions and is quite unscrupulous as to how it is brought about. [illegible] courts and the police have been at their disposal and [illegible] little if the lives of some of the [illegible] criminal members of the police [illegible] sacrificed.

Thousands at "Coming Out" Celebration

Thousands of working men and women, jammed into the spacious auditorium of the Central Opera House, applauded, sang and cheered themselves hoarse at the tremendous "Coming Out Mass Meeting" called to celebrate the release on bail of C. E. Ruthenberg, I. E. Ferguson, Ben Gitlow, Harry Winitsky and James Larkin.

Three of the released Communists, Ruthenberg, Gitlow and Winitsky were present and the great gathering broke into the singing of the International as each was about to begin speaking after being presented by the chairman, Edgar Owens.

Join the Workers Party

Each had his separate task. Winitsky spoke for the collection that brought in $618 in cash and $165.00 more in pledges to carry on the amnesty fight. Ruthenberg made a talk for the pamphlet "A Communist Trial," hundreds of which were sold, and also a plea for members for the Workers Party, application cards being distributed among all those present.

Gitlow told about the convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers at Chicago, where he was in attendance for several days.

In addition to cheers for the released comrades, for the Workers Party and for "THE WORKER," there were also cheers for the Communist International, for Soviet Russia, for Communism and the Revolution.

Other speakers were Ludwig Lore, of the Volkszeitung; A. Bittleman, of the Freiheit, and J. Louis Engdahl, of THE WORKER.

Resolutions on state amnesty were adopted as follows:

Denounce Police Frame-Up.

"WHEREAS, the recent conviction of three women, Minnie Kalnin, Tina Jurson, and Anna Leisman, under the Criminal Anarchy Act of the State of New York, is conclusive evidence that the organized forces of reaction intend to use this law to crush any semblance of working class activity.

"AND WHEREAS, five men indicted and sentenced under this law are now out on bail pending further legal action, while four others are serving sentences for alleged violation of this law,

"AND WHEREAS, every person convicted under this law was convicted in order to punish spokesmen for the working class by dragging out a law passed twenty years ago and bending its intent and meaning in order to accomplish the purposes of reaction,

"THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that we, 4000 workers in mass meeting assembled, pledge our unceasing efforts on their behalf and call upon all workers to carry on a continued agitation until these men and women secure their freedom,

"AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that we reaffirm our solidarity with these men and women. We protest to the Governor of the state of New York against the continued incarceration of those men whose cases have been settled in the courts and demand that he extend executive pardon to them.

"BE IT RESOLVED that copies of this resolution be sent to the working class press of New York City and State and to the Governor of the State of New York.

Urge Federal Amnesty.

Resolutions on Federal Amnesty adopted unanimously were as follows:

"Whereas, there are still in the prisons of America over one hundred men who were convicted of political offenses during the war,

"And whereas, whatever war time reason may have existed for their imprisonment has long since ceased to exist,

"Therefore, be it Resolved, that we, 4000 workers of New York City in Mass Meeting assembled hereby call on the President of the United States to release all political prisoners by declaring a general amnesty.

"And be it further Resolved that copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States and to the Attorney General."

Cheer Work of "Amalgamated."

A telegram sent to the Fifth Biennial Convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers convention at Chicago was as follows:

"Mass meeting of Workers Party of America held in Central Opera House, New York City, Friday, May 12th, celebrating release on bail of Gitlow, Winitsky, Ferguson and Ruthenberg, four thousand attendance, unanimously and with great enthusiasm congratulates Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America for their heroic stand on behalf of their fellow workers of Soviet Russia.

"Your stand has been an inspiration to all here assembled and they wish the outcome of the plan all possible success and pledge themselves to give it their full-hearted support."

Owing to his absence from the city in Chicago, Ferguson sent greetings to the mass meeting reading as follows:

"I wish you would say for me to the New York Comrades that I have at all times been profoundly grateful for their loyalty. I cannot be in New York until early June, that is why I cannot take part in the meeting. Besides this expression of thanks for myself, I urge upon you unceasing effort on behalf of those still imprisoned because of their part in the working class struggle for a better social system. I am myself ready and anxious to do everything I can toward the release of these prisoners."

No report of the meeting was published in the New York Call.

"A Capitalist Conspiracy"

The London Daily Herald, labor organ, has placed the label of "A capitalist conspiracy against Soviet Russia" on the continuation of the Genoa parley planned for the Hague, June 15th.

It might have said that the Hague gathering is planned as just another chapter in the capitalist conspiracy that was inaugurated against the Soviet Republic the day it came into being [illegible] and one-half years ago.

And the Hague Conference will be wrecked just as the Genoa Conference was wrecked, in the words of Rakovsky, "thru opposing the Russians to the rest of Europe," in other words, thru worrying more about the preservation of capitalism than the reconstruction of a bankrupt civilization.

Nevertheless, the delegates of Soviet Russia have agreed to the "Hague Plan," because "we never refuse opportunities to discuss."

In the meantime, however, Soviet Russia will continue with her plans for the conclusion of trade agreements with Italy, Sweden, Japan, Czecho-Slovakia and other nations, that will not be affected by the "Hague Plan."

At the same time in the current issue of SOVIET RUSSIA, A. A. Heller has an article in which he shows that the United States exports to Soviet Russia now equal the exports to Czarist Russia before the war. Here are the figures: In 1914 American exports to European Russia, including Poland, amounted to $22,260,062. According to a report made public by the Department of Commerce, American goods to the value of $12,114,062 were sold to European Russia, exclusive of Poland, during the first six months of 1921.

It is under these circumstances that President Harding confabs with Secretary of State Hughes and rejects the invitation to participate in the Hague Conference next month. And Secretary of Commerce Hoover takes the platform and defends this position before the International Chamber of Commerce meeting in Washington.

And now we have Senator Borah introducing a resolution in the United States Senate, "That the Senate of the United States favors recognition of the present Soviet Government of Russia."

At the Genoa Conference it was Soviet Russia against the rest of Europe. And Soviet Russia had the rest of Europe staggering to its knees when Lloyd George called out "Enough" and planned an adjournment for a month until the next clash at The Hague.

The same line of demarcation must be drawn here in the United States. It must be the aroused working class against the international bankers in Wall Street and their political "Punch and Judy" show in Washington.

The American workers are not interested in the payment of 11 billions of debts to Wall Street bankers thru Europe's continued agony.

They are interested in starting the wheels of industry going and putting the ten millions of unemployed in this country to work.

Spread the demand for the recognition of Soviet Russia. If Harding, Hughes and Hoover will not carry out the mandate, they must be swept aside and those put in power in Washington who will.

Genoa has reiterated the issue, "COMMUNISM AGAINST CAPITALISM." The Hague will reiterate it again. Harding, Hughes, Hoover and Wall Street endorse it. We accept it. And the workers of this country in ever increasing numbers will also accept it. And it will not be settled until the inevitable decision is rendered, UNTIL LABOR WINS.

Convict Blankstein in Trial at Pittsburgh, Pa.

Israel Blankstein was found guilty, May 11, of violation of the Pennsylvania Anti-Sedition Act, at Pittsburgh.

Blankstein was arrested as a result of a police raid upon his apartment January 25th. His place was entered without warrant, and his effects seized. His attorney sued out a writ of habeas corpus a few days after his arrest, but the writ was dismissed by the Court on the peculiar grounds that the grand jury would pass upon the evidence submitted by the district attorney and if there was insufficient evidence he would not be indicted.

This is the kind of a reception a writ of habeas corpus received in Pittsburgh.

Numerous postponements were granted the district attorney over the strenuous objection of the defense, to allow sufficient time to work up a case against Blankstein. He was brought to trial Tuesday, April 10. The state managed to introduce a lot of extraneous material and got it admitted as evidence. This in spite of the fact that his place was entered and his effects seized in disregard of his constitutional rights. Had he been a boot-legger, material seized in a like manner would have been ruled out. But debauching a people with illicit booze is fairly respectable. It is only when one gives of his time and energy in behalf of the working class that his legal rights are unceremoniously swept aside.

One H. J. Lenon, department of Justice agent, was the star witness for the prosecution. He undertook to show that the Workers Party, to which Blankstein belonged, was merely the "surface" organization of the Communist Party. Lenon gave much damaging testimony which was admitted contrary to all the rules of evidence. But Pittsburgh being—Pittsburgh, anything against the defendant was admitted.

The defense put up no defense, realizing that they were in a court in which the stage was set for conviction.

A motion for a new trial and for setting aside the verdict on the grounds of error and that the evidence did not substantiate a verdict of guilty has been taken under advisement by the court. Sentence has not yet been pronounced.

UP TO THE GOVERNOR

SAN FRANCISCO.—Removing Governor Stephens' last excuse for delaying action on the request of District Attorney Matthew Brady, of San Francisco, that he pardon Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings on the grounds of proven perjury and fraud in their trials, Tom Mooney has dismissed his appeal from the order of the Superior Court denying him a writ of audita querela.

[illegible] National Convention of Young Workers League

The first national convention of the Young Workers League of America was held at [illegible] Workers' Hall, Brooklyn, N. Y. Thirty-one organizations, located in 14 states, were represented by 46 delegates. Four fraternal delegates were also seated.

The organizations present were by no means all branches of the Young Workers' League, nor was there any unanimity of viewpoint on every question that came before the convention.

The pledge of unity at all costs was given by every faction, and despite sharp clashes between the various groups an excellent spirit prevailed.

Besides the Y. W. L., of which there were 20 circles represented, there were a large number of branches of the Independent Young People's Socialist League, and one organization each of the Young People's International League, Marxian Educational Society, Labor Educational Society, and the Workers' Self-Educational Center, the last-named with fraternal representation.

Message from Moscow Cheered

Various messages of greeting were read from all parts of the country, both from adult and juvenile organizations, but the entire convention arose as one when a message from the Young Communist International, signed by Otto Unger, at Moscow, was presented by the National Organization Committee. The message was as follows:

Moscow, March 22, 1922.

To the Central Committee of the Young Workers' League of America:

We have received the material regarding your league and have studied it with closest attention. We understand from this powerful development in the movement of the young workers in the United States, and the great activities carried on by the young socialist revolutionists who are guiding this movement.

We shall gladly comply with your wishes to institute a regular correspondence thru which we shall be mutually informed, and shall in the future give you the desired information regarding various questions.

In the name of the revolutionary young workers' movement of Europe, and of other parts of the world, who have banded together in the ranks of our organization, the Executive Committee of the Young Communist International enthusiastically greets the first convention of the socialist youth of America which is laying the foundations of a new epoch in the history of the working youth.

We assure you of the heartiest active interest and greatest attention of all your young comrades in other countries who are with great intenseness watching the struggle of their brothers in the citadel of capitalism.

We hope to hear more from you soon and especially to receive the reports of your national convention and shall furnish you the desired material in the near future.

With international youth greetings,

E. C. of the Y. C. I.,
by Otto Unger.

Fraternal Delegates Clash

Immediately after the adoption of temporary rules and order of business, the fraternal delegates were called upon for their greetings to the convention.

The first two, representing young workers' organizations, responded in perfect fitness to the occasion, but the next, B. J. Lifshitz, representing an adult group, "The United Toilers," immediately launched into an attack upon the Y. W. L. leadership, and especially upon the Workers Party, which helped materially to make possible this convention.

His appeal for Y. W. L. "independence" was so obviously biased by partisan interest that it fell on deaf ears, even among the delegates who favored this stand.

He was followed by C. E. Ruthenberg, representing the Workers Party. Ruthenberg received a tremendous ovation when he took the platform, and after his speech even this demonstration was eclipsed by the accord which his remarks found among the delegates.

He discussed the role of the young movement in the greater cause, of their functions both before and after the conquest of power by the workers.

He stressed the fact that especially in the face of the united offensive against labor on the part of the master class the only possible appeal that any class-conscious worker loyal to the interests of his class was for unity.

The amalgamation of all young militants in the Y. W. L. was the first step in this direction, and their close contact with the Workers Party, a kindred organization on the adult political field, was but the logical conclusion of the same policy.

At several points in his address he was interrupted by the applause and cheering of the delegates, and there could be no doubt of their stand on the question that has assumed the paramount importance in this gathering.

Many Delegates Contested

The uncontested delegates constituted themselves the convention and proceeded to act upon the fifteen contested seats.

Of these seven were on technical grounds, such as lack of membership in the delegating body, double representation, and proxy status, but in the case of the eight New York delegates there was a clash between full rival delegations each claiming regular election.

The committee found in favor of one group but recommended that in the interests of harmony two of the opposition replace two of those elected. This was done.

Committees Get to Work.

The contests took up the better part of two sessions and were marked with many oratorical pyrotechnics. After they were settled four committees were elected, on Program, on Constitution, on Organization Promotion, and on Resolutions. A strong minority was elected on each of these, in one case of four out of nine.

After the elections only the report of the National Organization Committee was presented. Aside from giving the financial and technical status of the organization work it was reported that the organizations represented had 1732 members while those affiliated, but not represented by delegates, had an additional membership of 483, making a total of over two thousand, spread thru fifty-one cities. The report was well received and the convention adjourned early to give committees a chance to get to work.

The committees were greatly aided by the tentative drafts prepared in advance of the convention by the National Organization Committee. Every report showed the effects of committee discussion, however, and a great many changes were instituted, particularly in the constitution, and to a lesser degree in the Manifesto.

Fight on Program.

The report of the first committee, that on Manifesto and Program, was marked by a stiff fight over a minority report sponsored by four members of the committee and presented by a delegate from the Labor Educational League of Newark, N. J. It had originally been intended by the minority to bring in a complete program of its own, in the form of a short declaration of principles culled largely from the Rochester program of the I. Y. P. S. L., and supplemented by theses on tactics to be applied to specific current problems. This was abandoned however and instead three amendments were proposed, two on "The State and Youth" and one on "The Dictatorship of the Proletariat"; these were largely on conflict of phraseology, but the third, covering the question of accepting the political guidance of the Workers Party, brought out a clear division in the ranks of the delegates.

The minoritaires, in making their report, insisted that the question of "independence" was not to be defended as a matter of principle, but solely on grounds of expediency.

William F. Kruse, the first speaker on behalf of the majority, analyzed this attitude and showed that this "expediency" was not on behalf of the young organization, but on behalf of petty enemies of the Workers Party and its program. He cited the experience of the Y. P. S. L. after separating from the S. P. in 1919, and piled one example upon another showing that despite nominal "independence" the young movement was always the reflex, in political principle, of the elder movement in its locality. "Independence" would mean separation from all the vitalizing and unifying currents of communist activity now expressed in the Workers Party, and would transform what should be a fighting young organ of the class struggle into a puerile sect of tactical disputants. He defended the Workers Party program from the attacks made upon it by the U. T. and P. P. groups and expressed the hope that the Y. W. L. would be as great a unifying force upon the field of revolutionary young workers organizations as the W. P. was on the field of the old.

Several speakers then alternated for and against the majority proposal, to which was added a resolution instructing the incoming N. E. C. to make arrangements for the mutual exchange of committee representatives with the W. P. Freiman of New Jersey and Dadick of New York argued for "independence" while Edwards of Chicago supported the majority. A roll call vote showed 27 for Workers Party relationship and 9 against, one of whom voted under instructions but against her own judgment.

Constitution Much Changed.

The report of the constitution committee took up a great deal of time in detail changes, but it outlined thruout a centralized compact form of organization somewhat similar to that of the W. P. A number of changes requested by the minority were incorporated after lengthy debate.

The report on organization promotion provided various means of raising funds for the league, for increasing the circulation of "The Young Worker," and for strengthening the organization.

Many Resolutions Adopted.

A large number of resolutions adopted showed that the young fighters are as prolific masters of English as their elders, and give no promise of shorter conventions when, some years hence, they are at the helm of the elder movement. Some of those adopted were: Thanking the Finnish Workers Party Branch for the use of the hall; for the World War Veterans and against the American Legion; supporting the "Young Worker," "The Worker," "The Freiheit" and other language papers, the textile strikers, Soviet Russia, the miners denied citizenship and otherwise made to feel the blessings of "democracy"; the Friends of Soviet Russia; the question of unemployment; greetings to the organizations of revolutionary young workers of the world thru the Young Communist International, and finally calling upon all adult political organizations recognizing the III. International to present a united front thru the Workers Party.

Elect National Executive Committee

The National Executive Committee elected consists of Carlson, Schulenberg, Gannes, Marks, Zam, Jacobs and Abern, including six states among the seven members. Five alternates were also elected, including Edwards, Zannan, Oswald, Theinert and Kaminsky.

The convention adjourned as it had begun, by the singing of "The International" by all the delegates and visitors, and by general visiting around by many who had met here for the first time but who expected in the course of the struggle to be thrown together in the ranks many times.

In every city where the World War Veterans have a post in the Rocky Mountain States, that organization will put volunteers on the streets on National Amnesty Day, Saturday, May 20, to solicit signatures to a petition urging President Harding to free the 114 remaining war-opinion prisoners in federal penitentiaries.

"Why Russia Says "No!"

[illegible] LABOR MEMBER, BRITISH PARLIAMENT

[illegible]

IT MAKES A STRONG POINT THAT ONE OF THE CONDITIONS MEANT THE ECONOMIC ENSLAVEMENT OF THE RUSSIAN WORKERS TO CAPITALISM.

The taking of the oath by troops was an act of solemnity and impressiveness, unequalled in modern times.

The troops represented every branch of the service—well clad, soldierly.

It was clear to the most prejudiced that counter-revolutions, or any attack by outside Powers, cannot prevail against an army so trained and disciplined.

After the troops came the procession of workers, marching 40 abreast. Five hundred thousand demonstrating passed the central point by half-past one, where Kameneff, Trotzky, and members of the Central Committee of the Trade Union Federation were standing, and the march continued until six o'clock.

I have seen nothing like it in London, on the Continent, or in America.

I am requested to transmit to the workers of Great Britain the cordial fraternal May Day greetings of their Russian confreres, rejoicing in the fact that capitalistic absolutism is weakening to a final world crash.

The Police on Parade in New York

By ISRAEL AMTER

If the workers of this country still labor under the illusion that the purpose of the police force in every city is simply to run down thieves, murderers, gamblers and bootleggers, they might have had a splendid object lesson in the policemen's parade held in New York.

Marching down the streets in magnificent array, led by "Red Mike" Hylan, the buffoon mayor of New York—the man who raised his own salary from $10,000 to $25,000, because he is so valuable and can earn so much more working for a private concern—the police showed quite clearly what they are for.

Police Armed with Rifles

There were the contingents of the plain police, stalwart men, in their well-kept uniforms, with the brass buttons shining for the occasion. There were the motor cycle squads and the runabouts for chasing bandits.

And there were the police armed with rifles, to take care of striking workers. There were the reserve cops ready to serve at any time.

And there were the motor trucks, belonging to the department stores, big milk concerns, etc. These trucks are for special emergency use. They are intended to transport the police whenever large numbers are wanted. When do such occasions arise? Why do the big concerns lend their cars and trucks to the police department?

Big business is working hand in hand with the police department of every city. It was not so very long ago that there were scions of wealthy families occupying honorary positions in the police department of New York. The trucks of the big concerns are at the disposal of the police.

Rifles, machine guns, rapid fire guns, motor trucks, poison gas! This is what they regard as proper police department equipment nowadays.

Object Lesson to Workers

Such "peaceful" demonstrations of force on the part of the police of New York should be an object lesson to the workers. This is what we workers are up against. This is the court of last resort for the bosses. This is what we face every time we show discontent with the conditions that the bosses impose on us. Are you ready to fight against the campaign of the bosses to destroy the unions, increase hours and reduce wages? Or are you ready to let them crush us still more—to use the army of the unemployed against us?

The packers said fight! The coal miners said fight! The textile workers said fight! The garment workers said fight! Workers all over the world are fighting! They meet the same force—the same "peaceful" demonstration on the part of the bosses, which finally leads to an open demonstration and utilization of force against the workers.

The bosses and their government against the workers! They are prepared. Fellow Workers! Learn the lesson of the Police Parade.

JOBLESS TURN ACTORS

LONDON.—It was left principally to labor to celebrate the Shakespeare anniversary dramatically in London. On the site of the Old Globe theater and Old George Inn, both in Southwark, a company of strolling players, consisting of unemployed workers, acted scenes from Twelfth Night on a lorry, in costume, but without scenery.

APPLAUDING ITS MASTER

LAWRENCE, Mass.—After criticizing Ben Legere, One Big Union organizer here, for stirring up the workers in the American Woolen Co. mills to demand a wage increase, the city council tendered a vote of thanks to the company for its "humanitarian" work in Lawrence.

Workers of America! Unite for the Struggle Against the Bosses! Read this Program!

was never such an opportunity for the capitalist owners of industry "to make hay while sun shines." Profits reached figures which even the capitalists had never dared dream could be true. To take advantage of this opportunity the capitalists sought to increase production to the highest point. The more goods they produced the greater their profits.

These conditions were favorable to the improvement of the wages and working conditions of the workers employed in industry. The capitalists had to have labor in order to take advantage of the great opportunity for profits. They had to have labor immediately or the opportunity might pass. The government, driven by its own needs after this country entered the war, also stepped in to prevent the stoppage of work. In time of need of the capitalists and their government, the workers were told that they must "work or fight." Work was even made compulsory by law in some places.

It is doubtful whether even with so great a demand for their labor, the working people of this country made any real gains. It is quite certain that the capitalist owners of industry profited from the war to a greater extend than any group of exploiters has ever profitted before in the history of the world. The crop of millionaires increased by leaps and bounds. The profits of the great corporations jumped five, ten and twenty-fold. In contrast the figures covering the increase in wages and the increase in the cost of living show that the working class made no real gains. FOR THE MASSES OF WORKERS GENERALLY, WHAT THEY RECEIVED IN HIGHER WAGES WAS TAKEN AWAY BY HIGHER PRICES OF THE THINGS THEY NEEDED IN ORDER TO LIVE.

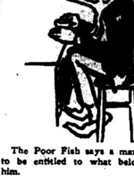
There was more regular work. Certain groups of workers even made some real gains, keeping the increase in their wages ahead of the increase in the cost of living. The unions made some gains. On the whole, however, while the capitalists profited immensely thru the war, the workers who made many real sacrifices were left economically in about the same position.

After the War

Prosperity continued for the capitalists for a period of about a year and a half after the war. Then the forces which the war had set in motion began to show their effects. Four years of destruction of wealth upon the battlefields, which was largely paid for by keeping the governmental printing presses going to produce money and bonds, undermined the whole capitalist financial system. Every European country has created a great mountain of debt and in addition has increased its paper money circulation by huge amounts. Europe still needs all the goods which American industry can produce. The destruction wrought by the war has not been made good. But Europe cannot buy these goods. The depreciated value of European currency when exchanged into American dollars makes it unprofitable for Europe to buy our goods. The buying power of European money is greater at home than when exchanged into dollars and used to buy American goods. Consequently the prices of American goods are mountain high and Europe does not buy. Europe, too, is still in the throes of the unrest and distress brought by the war, and is therefore a poor credit risk for the capitalists of the United States.

Wisdom of the Poor Fish

By ART YOUNG



The Poor Fish says a man ought to be entitled to what belongs to him.

As a consequence of these conditions exports from the United States to Europe dropped from $8,228,000,000 in 1920 to $4,485,000,000 in 1921 and the 1922 figures thus far show still greater decreases.

The loss of the European market has resulted in the collapse of the industries of the United States. Not only because there is no market for the goods previously sold in Europe but because the effect of the loss of this market operated to slow down all production. The vicious capitalist system which precipitated the world war and brought the collapse of production and hunger upon almost all Europe has now reached out to include the workers of the United States among those to whom it has brought suffering, misery and starvation.

The United States in 1922

Let the workingmen and women of the United States consider for a moment the situation in this country in 1922 and they will gain a clearer understanding of what the capitalist system means.

There are in the United States all the raw materials needed to carry on production. There is no shortage of any kind of raw products required in industry. There is in existence in the United States today a great, organized industrial machine. This industrial organization can take the raw materials at hand and in the earth and turn them into finished products which would give better food, better clothing, better homes, more education and recreation to every man, woman and child in the United States.

WHY ARE WE NOT PRODUCING THESE GOODS? WHY DOESN'T THE MACHINERY OF PRODUCTION RUN? WHY IS INDUSTRY WORKING ONLY AT THREE-FOURTHS OR TWO-THIRDS OF ITS CAPACITY! WHY ARE FIVE MILLION WORKERS WALKING THE STREETS AS UNEMPLOYED WHEN WE HAVE RAW MATERIALS, MACHINERY AND LABOR READY TO PRODUCE AND MILLIONS WHO NEED THE PRODUCTS?

The capitalist say there is no market for the goods which would be produced—Europe cannot buy. But can't the workers of the United States use the goods that could be produced? Have we too much good food, too much good clothing, too many good houses? Why shouldn't we improve the standard of living of the people of this country by giving them better homes, better food, better clothing, more education and recreation? We have the raw material, the machinery of production and the workers ready to work.

The answer of the capitalists is that the workers cannot buy the goods. It is true that they cannot buy the goods which they produce in industry under the vicious capitalist system of exploitation with big profits going to the capitalists on all goods produced. It is true that they can buy still less goods every time the capitalists reduce wages in order to insure profits for themselves.

[illegible] Why shouldn't the workers' wages be increased at the expense of the capitalists profits? Why not cut the profits and pay these profits to the workers in increased wages?

That would create a market for more goods. That would start the machinery of industry running again. That would give the millions who are suffering in the ranks of the unemployed a chance to work and earn the necessities of life for themselves and their families.

If it was a good rule to make the workers "Work or Fight" during the capitalists time of need why shouldn't the workers say to the capitalists now "More wages and less profits?"

The Capitalist Way

That is not the capitalist way of doing business. Under the capitalist system industry is run primarily for profits which capitalists can get out of production, not for the purpose of producing goods to serve the needs of the people. No profits, no production is the motto of the capitalists. No production means no work and millions who are unable to gain a living, who suffer hunger and live in poverty and misery.

The capitalists way out of the dilemma was to shift the burden of readjustment coming with the end of the war to the backs of the workers. They closed down hundreds of industries and cut down production and working forces everywhere. WHAT DOES IT MATTER TO THEM WHETHER MILLIONS OF FAMILIES SUFFER BECAUSE OF THE EVILS GENERATED BY THE SYSTEM WHICH GIVES THEM GREAT WEALTH?

Driving millions of workers into the ranks of the unemployed is not enough for the capitalists. During the war period these capitalists ground their teeth in rage each time they had to make a concession to the workers in the shape of increased wages, better working conditions or the right to organize. WITH MILLIONS OF WORKERS UNEMPLOYED CAME THEIR OPPORTUNITY TO TAKE FROM THE WORKERS WHATEVER THEY HAD GAINED DURING THE WAR AND DRIVE DOWN THEIR STANDARD OF LIVING EVEN LOWER THAN BEFORE THE WAR.

Does any workingman or woman need to be told that there had been a united drive against the workers since the end of the capitalist wartime prosperity? Wages have been slashed everywhere; but the cost of living has not come down in proportion. Hours of labor have been increased in many industries. The capitalists are riding roughshod over every hard-won right of the workers.

The Attack on the Unions

While organized and unorganized workers alike are being attacked the hardest drive of the capitalists is against the unions. They realize that the unions are the backbone of resistance to ruthless exploitation and oppression of the workers and they are determined to destroy them or make them harmless. In the struggle to establish the open shop—the scab shop—they are making the fight to break the power of organized labor.

The Steel Trust, in the 1919 Steel Strike, led the way in the fight for the Gary plan and against the workers' organizations. By the most brutal measures it smashed the strike of its workers and has since striven to root out every vestige of organization in the steel industry.

Since then there has been innumerable union-smashing campaigns. The railroad companies, the stockyard companies, the garment factory owners have unitedly attacked the unions in these industries. All over the country in large and small industries, the fight to drive out the unions is going on. The refusal of the mine owners to meet the representatives of the miners union in acordance with their contract is but another example of the campaign to destroy the unions. The mine owners believe the time is ripe to drive unionism out of the mining industry and they propose to do it.

THE HISTORY OF THE LAST TWO YEARS IS THE HISTORY OF THE MOST MERCILESS ATTACK UPON THE WORKERS, ORGANIZED AND UNORGANIZED, WHICH HAS TAKEN PLACE IN THIS COUNTRY. This attack is still under way and almost daily new groups of workers feel the weight of the onslaught of the capitalists. In Rhode Island, the mill workers are fighting against a twenty per cent reduction in wages and starvation. The New York garment workers are preparing to meet a new attack of their employers, the hard and soft coal miners have their backs against the wall for a life and death struggle.

In these struggles the workers find themselves face to face not only with the capitalist owners of industry but everywhere the powerful arm of the government reaches out to aid the employers. More vicious injunctions have been issued during the past two years than in any similar period. State and Federal soldiers are quickly sent to the defense of the capitalists and shoot down workers, as in West Virginia, in Newport, Ky., and in Rhode Island. Federal Judge Anderson of Indianapolis strives to destroy the whole organization of the miners by one sweeping injunction. The enemy of the workers is not only the capitalist employers but the Government controlled by the employers.

Division and Destruction

HOW HAVE THE WORKERS MET THIS ATTACK? HAVE THEY MADE A UNITED STAND? HAVE THEY COMBINED THEIR RESOURCES AND FIGHTING STRENGTH TO MEET THE CAPITALIST ONSLAUGHT? HAVE THEY MADE A FIRM STAND TO SAVE THEIR UNIONS, TO MAINTAIN THEIR STANDARD OF LIVING, TO PREVENT WAGE REDUCTIONS AND INCREASES IN THEIR HOURS OF LABOR?

The story of the struggle thus far shows no such defense. Each section of the workers has gone into the struggle alone and has been defeated by the united and more powerful capitalists. Thus far the victory has been with the capitalist class, united in policy and purpose, and the working class, divided and unorganized has almost without exception been doomed to defeat.

NO UNIFYING ORGANIZATION FOR LEADERSHIP HAS APPEARED ON THE SIDE OF THE WORKERS. Even the unions of the American Federation of Labor, comprising five million organized workers, have not shown a united front to the capitalists. It has left each union to fight alone and to go down to defeat in the struggle in place of throwing the whole power of the organized workers into every struggle and thus assuring the defeat of the capitalists.

The half million miners who are now facing a life and death struggle, in a situation carefully prepared to insure their defeat, will fight alone (lukewarm words mean nothing) under the policy heretofore pursued by the leadership of the A. F. of L. and the defeat and even destruction of this splendid working-class organization is a possible outcome of this struggle, if the workers organized and unorganized do not rally to their support.

In place of every railroad man refusing to handle non-union coal, every fireman refusing to shovel it, every engineer refusing to run an engine deriving power from it, a big section of the organized workers will become the agents of the capitalists in the fight against the miners by using coal produced by scab workers. It is thru thus dividing the workers and making them fight against other workers that the capitalists beat them.

Shall this policy continue? Shall each section of the working class of this country fight alone and meet defeat? Shall the unions be destroyed or so weakened that they will be unable to protect the workers? Shall wages and the standard of living be forced lower and lower? Shall hours of labor be increased?

UNLESS THE WORKERS OF THIS COUNTRY ADOPT A PROGRAM OF UNITED RESISTANCE AGAINST THE ATTEMPT OF THE CAPITALISTS TO FASTEN A BITTERER INDUSTRIAL SLAVERY UPON THEM THESE THINGS WILL BE THE RESULT OF THE PRESENT CAMPAIGN AGAINST THEM.

The Workers Party of America is convinced that the present struggle calls for united action by the workers of this country. It is convinced that the unemployed, the organized and unorganized workers must unite in a common struggle against the capitalists in order to defeat them and secure work for the unemployed, decent wages and working conditions and the right to organize for their own protection for all the workers.

Work for the unemployed means weakening the position of the capitalists, for it robs them of the reserve army of starving workers from which to draw strike-breakers. Common action by organized and unorganized workers is necessary to win the battle against wage reductions and increases in the hours of work.

The United Front

To achieve the unity of the workers in the fight against the capitalists, the Workers Party of America initiates and submits for endorsement of the workers everywhere the following program:

1. That a UNITED FRONT of the workers shall be created to meet the capitalist offensive.

2. That the central labor body of each city shall be used as the central organization to fight for this program.

3. That for the purpose of this struggle such central labor body shall invite groups of unemployed workers in unorganized factories and all labor organizations engaged in the struggle against the capitalists to send delegates to its meetings.

The first step to create this UNITED FRONT is for those unions supporting this manifesto and program to endorse the same and instruct their delegates to the central bodies to fight for endorsement and active work in harmony with the program.

Program for the United Struggle

The Central Labor body of each city should:

1. Conduct agitation to arouse the workers of their community to an understanding of the nature of the attack which the capitalists are making against the workers.

2. Support every strike of the workers with publicity and funds. Consider the question of a sympathetic strike and agitate to secure support for locked-out and striking workers thru such a sympathetic strike, or even a general strike. Local unions should bring pressure to bear upon their international unions toward the same end.

3. Carry on a wide-spread agitation for relief of the unemployed thru holding mass meetings and mass demonstrations in support of the proposal for relief of unemployment in this manifesto.

4. Seek to add to the strength of the existing unions by unifying them in industrial unions and by inducing non-union workers to join them and by carrying on organizing work in those industries in which no unions exist.

5. Carry on a determined struggle against the infringement on the rights of the workers thru injunctions, industrial courts, deprivation of the right of free assemblage and all other efforts of the capitalists to limit the activities of the workers in the struggle against the capitalists thru use of the legal machinery of the government.

Unemployed Program

1. Reduction of hours of labor in industry without any reduction in pay to give work to the unemployed. The six hour day and no reduction in pay should be the slogan.

2. Appropriations by municipal, state and federal governments for an unemployed relief and from which wages can be paid to the unemployed. Administration of this relief fund to be thru the central labor bodies.

3. The United States Government loaned ten billion dollars to European governments for destruction in war. Soviet Russia needs tools and machinery to develop its resources which the industries of the United States can supply. We propose that the United States government loan Soviet Russia a half billion dollars, to be expended in the purchase of tools and machinery in the United States. A half billion dollars worth of orders will open the factories which have been closed down and increase the working forces generally, thus giving work to the unemployed. Loan Soviet Russia a half billion and give work to the unemployed.

WHAT SHALL THE FUTURE OF THE WORKERS OF THE UNITED STATES BE? BRUTAL WAGE-SLAVERY, MERCILESS EXPLOITATION, LOW WAGES, LONG HOURS, AND ALL THAT THIS MEANS IN A LOWER STANDARD OF LIVING? OR WILL THEY UNITE UPON A PROGRAM OF DEFENSE AGAINST THE PROFIT-GREEDY OWNERS OF INDUSTRY?

The Workers Party of America calls upon the Workers to unite in their own defense.

Let us stand together and yield not an inch to capitalism, let us go forward to better things. We have the power if we unite. Unite and use that power.

THE WORKERS PARTY OF AMERICA. to make that organization a big factor in the struggles of the workers of this country.

The results which will be attained thru this campaign depend upon the support which is given the program of action by the members of the party.

While the Workers Party is still a comparatively new and untried organization it is made up of units with long experience in the work of agitation and organization. All of this experience must be brought to the support of the program.

With 25,000 members in its ranks the party can reach the masses in every section of the country if these members respond loyally and wholeheartedly to the appeal for action.

The first essential of a successful campaign is a united front within the party. That means that every member must rally to the support of the campaign undertaken by the organization. It means work in the distribution of literature, in agitation in the unions, thru furnishing funds for the United Front Campaign Fund.

Militant Struggle Must Come

The workers of the United States are far behind the workers elsewhere in the militant struggle against the capitalists who oppress and exploit them.

The facts of the class struggle in this country are, however, preparing the workers to join their comrades of other countries in an uncompromising struggle against their exploiters.

The brutal oppression which has followed the war period has been particularly fruitful in arousing the workers to a more militant attitude toward capitalism and all it means.

The Workers Party proposes to take advantage of the situations which capitalism has created by its brutal effort to destroy the unions and in throwing millions of workers into the ranks of the unemployed to build a militant mass movement in this country.

That is the great task that has been undertaken in the campaign against the open shop and unemployment.

It marks the application of the tactics of Communism to the class struggle in the United States.

It is the beginning of an organized struggle which will not end until the workers are mobilized to establish the Workers' Republic in the United States.

Law Works Overtime to Break Comrade's Spirit

Mrs. Tina Jurson, convicted April 24th, for violation of the Criminal Anarchy Act of New York, was given another week, on Monday, May 15, in which to make up her mind that she "was sorry" and ask for forgiveness of Judge Gibbs.

She was convicted as a result of a despicable police frame-up for the distribution of announcements of a mass meeting arranged by the National Defense Committee, May 1st, 1921.

The police inserted in the bundle of leaflets Mrs. Jurson had, some copies of another leaflet issued by the Communist Party.

She denies having distributed this latter leaflet and the state could produce no witness other than the policeman who made the arrest that she had done so.

She was arrested with Mrs. Minnie Kalnin, sentenced to two years and three months to seven years, May 8th, and with Anna Leisman, the third woman in the police frame-up, now in Auburn prison.

At home Mrs. Jurson has a little four-year-old boy and the thoughts of being separated from the little fellow does not tend towards her peace of mind. Taking advantage of this situation Judge Gibbs and the District Attorney are doing all in their power to break her spirit and get some sort of a confession from her.

NEWARK, N. J., reports that the local consists of ten branches, and an active C. C. C. is functioning. Recent activity includes a meeting at which Robert Minor spoke and $35.42 was collected for "THE WORKER."

A united front May Day celebration at which Rose Pastor Stokes and Steven Bircher were the speakers, and at which the German and Hungarian singing societies furnished a musical program drew the largest crowd seen at a meeting in Newark for several years.

A membership meeting will be held May 29th, 8 P. M., at Polish Hall, 47 Monroe St., at which the following three points are the order of business 1. The United Front. 2. Increasing the membership. 3. Boosting "The Worker."

CHICAGO, Ill., is so insistent upon the training more speakers and trained workers that each branch has been instructed to select two capable delegates for compulsory attendance at a Sunday morning speakers and workers' class, these members to be relieved of all other duties except union activity.

Greek Federation Convention.

The second annual convention of the Greek Federation of the Workers Party was held May 7 and 8. Started in 1917 as a "Greek Socialist Study Club," their activities were extended to various other cities under the name of the "Greek Socialist Union."

This organization was involved in the split in the Socialist Party and formed one of the constituent parts of the Workers Party when it was organized last December.

Their paper, "The Voice of the Worker" was started as a monthly, is now a weekly, and plans are being prepared to put it upon a daily basis as soon as conditions permit.

The convention was a success in every way, and their present nine branches are expected to more than double their number within a few months.

"Treason" is becoming as trite a saying in the mouths of judges as "thirty days."

"Let not Your Left Hand, etc."

Many if not most of the directors of the work of the American Relief Commission in Russia (the Hoover Organization) are ex-army officers. Just why men who have been trained in the work of destruction are assumed to be more competent than others for the work of relief is not quite clear.

There are other things in connection with the American Relief Commission that arouse our curiosity. For instance, in organizing the forces of native workers for relief a questionaire is issued that must be filled in by all applicants. Among the questions asked are the following:

> Question 12: Is any member of your family a member of the Communist Party.
> Question 13: Has any member of your family ever served in the armies of Denikin, Kolchak, Yudenitch, etc.

What connection this kind of information has with the matter of relief of the starving millions of famine victims has never been the subject of an official statement.

The Worker offers a picture of Herbert Hoover disguised as an oil-well expert for the best solution to this problem.

Amidst all the prevailing excitement let us not forget that Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings are still in jail altho proven innocent.

The German Ambassador Arrives

We now have with us Otto L. Wiedfeldt, ambassador from Germany to these United States of America. He was met by movie photographers, a brass band and committees of dignitaries and citizens of New York. His coming was proclaimed with great enthusiasm by the kept press.

The German ambassador's coming reminds us of the deportation of Ludwig Martens, representative of Soviet Russia to this country, and of the persistent refusal of both the Wilson and Harding administrations to open trade-relations or recognize the Russian Soviet Republic.

Wiedfeldt is welcomed because he comes here to speak for a capitalist Germany in a capitalist United States. He is a mouthpiece of the Stinnes interests in the German republic, which typifies the power of Morgan, Rockefeller and a Schwab or a Gary combined. His record has always been one of service in the interests of the German profiteers, whether in reorganizing the industries of East Asia, China or Japan, or as a director of the Krupp war plant at Essen, in Germany itself.

That is the best that the German government in the hands of Ebert social-democrats can send here. It proves how far the German social-democratic government is removed from the workers, shows that it has no message for the exploited of this country.

Capitalism does not fear the reform Socialism that parades as the German social-democracy. It only fears the labor rule that finds its strength in the Communist program of Soviet Russia, the labor rule that calls for the sweeping away of the last vestige of capitalist exploitation.

Wiedfeldt is received. Martens was deported. Let the workers of America ponder those two facts and choose between the path of reformism and that of revolution, between slavery and emancipation.

The New York police force paraded the other day armed to the teeth with all the modern death-dealing devices. The persistence of the crime wave would indicate that its full resources are never mobilized except against the workers.

Another Conference

The rulers seem determined that the newspaper correspondents shall not suffer from the prevailing unemployment. The epidemic of conferences apparently is arranged for no other purpose than to give the journalists an opportunity to make a few honest dollars.

Cannes, Washington, Genoa and now The Hague. All of them so far held have been barren of results so far as accomplishing their purpose—the stabilization of capitalism— is concerned.

The currency systems of the European nations are still doing the dance of the dervishes and the economic breakdown becomes more and more acute. The treaty of trade and peace between Germany and Russia has complicated the situation for the Allies and serves as a warning that they cannot continue on the offensive much longer while their various interests become more and more divergent without more substantial backing than they get from their own peoples.

Long ago we remarked that there were two courses open to the Allies. They could either conquer Russia or recognize her government and trade with her. The policy of conquest was followed for a time and brought disaster; not only because of the unlooked for resistance of the Russian people but because of the division among the allied nations. Nevertheless the policy of conquest still holds the favored position with France its strongest supporter.

Strenuous efforts are being made to get the United States government to participate in The Hague conference and without wishing to pose as an expert in these matters we believe that the bald proposal will be made that the United States support another offensive against Russia with money, men and munitions.

European capitalism feels itself too weak for such a venture but with America committed to such a policy and actively supporting it the European rulers would probably be willing to risk all on another war.

There is just one obstacle in the way of this delightful scheme and that is the growing enmity between France and England, and England and the United States, having as its basis the little matter of the control of the world's oil supply.

It is this rivalry that is Russia's greatest protection today. Meanwhile the newspaper correspondents are sure of another meal-ticket while half of the world starves.

The "Simple" Chinese

The "heathen Chinese," long the butt of [illegible] "civilized" workers, has shown the wage-workers of all lands the greatest example of working-class solidarity [illegible] outside of Russia.

The Chinese seamen struck in Hongkong, a port under the benevolent protection of the British Empire. Starting over the kicking of a Chinese steward by an English officer, it soon developed into a struggle for higher wages.

Every port was tied up and when the British government of Hongkong declared the seamen's union an illegal organization the shore workers went out in sympathy with the seamen. In Hongkong there was a mass strike that left the white residents helpless—Chinese electricians, molders, patternmakers, boilermakers, streetcar men, harbor and shipyard workers by simply ceasing work brought the government to its knees.

The demands of the seamen—30 per cent. increase for workers getting over $30.00 per month and 40 per cent. for those receiving less—were conceded; and now, you free-born American wage-earners, whose right to strike is taken away by injunctions, listen to this:

> The Chinese seamen demanded and received half-pay for the time they lost during the strike before they would return to work.

The simple-minded Chinese workers blamed the bosses for all the trouble and concluded that they should pay. They made them pay.

Civilization has its disadvantages.

Greetings to Revolutionary Youth

The National Convention of the Young Workers' League just concluded marks an epoch in the organization development of the revolutionary youth of this country.

It is the third national gathering of its kind. The first, in Chicago, 1919, came at a time when the Socialist Party was divorcing itself from its more militant, class conscious elements, and while its decisions did not possess the revolutionary clarity that characterized later gatherings the convention did awaken the young workers to a realization of the character, function and aim of their movement.

As a result of the party split the Y. P. S. L. found itself an independent organization, and the Rochester convention formulated the principle and policy made necessary by these developments.

The Independent Young People's Socialist League was born, and like the elder movement it found itself torn by internal division and oppressed by the power of the enemy class.

At the third, New York, convention, the Young Workers' League responds to the need for a new communist unity in the field of the young organization, even as the Workers Party was called into being by the same pressing necessity in the old.

The time for division has passed. The decision by an overwhelming vote to accept the political guidance of the Workers Party, while maintaining organizational co-operative autonomy, shows that the young comrades clearly recognize this, that they have well learned the lessons taught by the experience of the past few years, and formulated in the theses of the Communist International.

The "Independent" Y. P. S. L. is born again in a new and stronger form, the Y. W. L.

This is no time for the "independence" that means independence of the class struggle, isolation from the living currents of the revolutionary movement.

This is the time for unity upon the basis of clear principle and resolute activity.

The Workers Party welcomes this addition of two thousand brave young fighters to the revolutionary cause and pledges every possible aid to them in the realization of their motto "Clarity and Action."

Treason Trials as a Weapon

The coal strike is proving that where the workers have disciplined industrial organization the employers are forced to abrogate all the laws and customs of capitalist democracy and operate their properties by a resort to the use of force under various guises.

It is only in West Virginia where whole sections of that state are ruled by the private armies of the coal barons that any great amount of coal is being produced. It is from West Virginia that is coming the coal which replenishes the bunkers of the industrial concerns and helps to postpone the inevitable shortage.

The connection between this fact and the trial of several hundred West Virginia coal miners for treason is too obvious to be overlooked.

The trial of the men who resisted the most damnable conspiracy against the hard-won rights of organization and assemblage we have yet heard of, has been timed by the employers and their tools to have the most damaging effect upon the strike. Dozens of union men, whose services are sorely needed by the United Mine Workers of America, are held in the meshes of boss-made law, while the Billy Sundays and a host of other crawling things pour their lies into the ears of the working miners already terrorized by the gunmen and sluggers of the operators.

From time to time we hear sentimental persons complain that in spite of the influences brought to bear by publicity and more forceful means workers should revolt.

To take this attitude is to disregard realities and to assume that protest against tyranny followed by revolt springs from some heaven-sent revelation.

The employers do not depend upon such casual methods to retain their control. In West Virginia we do not wonder that some mines are working. The remarkable thing is that all of them are not producing to capacity in a district where all arms of the government as well as extra legal methods have been mobilized by the coal owners of that state backed by the power of the steel trust and its subsidiary corporations.

Almost without exception every member of the union with any influence has had to answer to the charge of treason. West of War Eagle an organizer of the union venturing into that territory goes to certain death. In the last year more than 300 persons from all walks of life have been clubbed and beaten and deported by the mercenaries of the coal operators because they had no permits to travel the high roads of that district in the sovereign state of West Virginia!

It is under such conditions that the work of organization has been carried on, and be it known that while many well-meaning people now raise their hands in holy horror at the admitted atrocities of the coal operators and their henchmen, it was the United Mine Workers who challenged and fought this gang of industrial pirates.

In Pennsylvania the non-union properties have been organized since the strike. West Virginia is now the storm center and the stronghold of the coal trust.

It is an object lesson of the power of industrial organization for even in their fortress the operators have had to resort to measures convincing even the most unobservant of the blood relationship between capitalist industry and the capitalist state.

This is the one fact that the capitalist class of the United States is most desirous of concealing.

OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS AT THE GATES OF THE WORKERS' WORLD

DEBS APPEALS TO THE WORKERS OF AMERICA

Opportunity knocks at the gates of the workers' world to lay the fate of humanity's future in the hands of international labor. The moral and material support rendered to the Russian Republic by the toilers of all lands will decide the issue.

Sublime in ideals, magnificent in strength, Soviet Russia has at last fought her way victoriously thru the long ordeal of invasion, civil war and blockade. The red banner floats securely over one-sixth of the habitable earth, and the hammer and sickle form the emblem of one-tenth of humanity. What a mighty foundation for the establishment of the workers' peace, the workers' prosperity and the workers' justice over the whole wide world!

Comrades, there is a world to gain! Do your part NOW. Besides mere bread to conquer the famine, contribute tools and machinery to build up the center of the international labor commonwealth. What is your response to the following appeal by Eugene V. Debs?—

"This is the one issue upon which we can all unite; the one crying demand to which we can all respond; the one supreme duty we are all bound to perform. It matters not how we may be at variance upon other matters, we recognize a common obligation to our starving Russian comrades and their families.

"The Russian revolutionists risked and sacrificed everything in the struggle for human emancipation; tormented by hunger pangs, they fought in rags the combined autocracy of the world; they stood their ground and shed their brave blood not only in their own defense, but to give liberty to the workers of every land on earth; and now they are face to face with grim and relentless starvation the workers of this and every other country on the globe are charged with the solemn responsibility for their relief and rescue.

"A splendid beginning has been made here in America and all credit is due to the workers, without regard to their affiliation, who have united with loyal hearts and willing hands in this great humanitarian work. But this beginning must be followed up, enlarged, and persisted in to the utmost to meet the magnitude of the demand.

"It is not food alone that is now needed for our starving fellow-beings in Russia. Farming machinery must be supplied and for this ample funds must be collected without delay. We are advised that unless everything possible is done to combat the calamity, a repetition of the famine is possible next year. The necessary seed did not arrive in time to supply the full demand for the spring sowing. Machinery has been painfully lacking, while horses and cattle had to a large extent been devoured by the famishing natives.

"To supply the necessary machinery to the Russian people in this desperate crisis is peculiarly the duty of the workers of the world. They have it in their power to provide the means with which this machinery, so vitally essential at this supreme juncture, may be supplied to the Russian people.

"With the machinery to cultivate the soil agriculture can be at once revived and the suffering people made secure against future famine. Let us at once get into action in every village, town, and city thruout the country in responding to this final appeal of our famine-scourged, desperately struggling Russian comrades and fellow-workers, and by rescuing them and their loved ones from their impending fate in the spirit of our common kinship, prove ourselves worthy to share in the emancipation of the future for which they have made the supreme sacrifice."

Nearly two billion acres of land have been expropriated in Mexico. Watch out for new propaganda calling for intervention by the United States, where only expropriation of the fruits of labor by the capitalists is permitted.

For the Prisoners, if—

The New York Call has been very much perturbed over the fate of counter-revolutionists that have been brought to the bar of Bolshevik justice under Soviet rule in working-class Russia.

It classes these as "political prisoners" and weeps lest they suffer the penalty of treason to the working class they have betrayed.

The same yellow reformists who dictate the policies of The Call also ruled as the majority in the recent conventions of the Workmen's Circle and the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. The result was that these yellow majorities put thru resolutions demanding the release of these counter-revolutionists, enemies of Soviet rule in Russia.

But recently five Communists, Ruthenberg, Ferguson, Gitlow, Winitsky and Larkin, were released from the prisons of New York State. They had already served long terms. They had been given their freedom under bail.

The campaign to "keep them out" and to get others out was launched at a celebration held last Friday night, at the Central Opera House, attended by thousands of working men and women.

But The Call professing to be a daily newspaper of the working class, contained not a single word reporting this meeting. Tersely stated its policy evidently is, "For the political prisoners if they are not Communists."

We do not complain. We merely point out that The Call is more interested in the defense of Russian counter-revolutionaries than it is in demanding the release of American Communists. It is the voice of the Cahans and the Schlesingers, that is continually raised against pressing the class war to victory.

It is the champion of yellow reformism. This championship dictates its every action. Let the workers understand this thoroly and they will rally in ever larger numbers in support of a press that really fights its battles, that really points the road to working-class emancipation.

Miners' Treason Trial Shows Women Urged Men to Fight on in West Va.

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE, Labor Editor of "The Worker"

COURT HOUSE, CHARLES TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA.—There may be more cool and self-possessed young gentlemen in the labor movement than William Blizzard, president of sub-district Number Two of District Number 17, United Mine Workers of America, the 28-year-old defendant in the treason trial in progress here, but if such there are the sooner the labor movement begins to use them the better. After the hour of direct examination by Harold W. Houston, attorney for the defendants, the best legal talent the coal operators of this state could mobilize took young Mr. Blizzard in hand for cross examination. That is what they thought they were doing. If a vote of the spectators could have been taken it would have been unanimously decided that the youthful defendant, who looks like a college athlete in the pink of condition, and who has a smile that brightens the dingy courtroom like a beam of sunlight, cross-examined the prosecuter and shot the states case, or the coal operators—they appear to be one and the same—so full of holes that the jury will have to be bought, bound and delivered to return a verdict of guilty against this young miner the coal operators' association has picked out to test their case with.

It should be understood that the coal operators have taken over the legal machinery of this county for the sole purpose of piling huge legal expenses upon the United Mine Workers while a strike is in progress that is draining their treasury of its last cent, to hamper as much as possible the feeding of the families who are on strike in this state and to divert the activities of the organizers, officers and active members from the organization and relief work so vital at this time.

It is doubtful if the operators expect to get convictions. If they do so much the better for them but the main purpose of the prosecutions is to hinder and obstruct the work of organization.

County Attorney Porterfield of this county refused pointblank to prosecute these cases. This work is being done by the legal talent of the coal operators' association, and the association stands all the expenses in connection with this "patriotic duty" as it is called by the capitalist press of the state.

International Vice-President Philip Murray of the United Mine Workers was on the stand for four hours, preceding Blizzard. He, too, gave A. M. Belcher, the gray-haired coal operator prosecutor, a hard time of it.

Report Tells of Horrors

The prosecution made a bad blunder by quoting extracts from Murray's annual report in which he criticised Governor Morgan.

The defense succeeded in getting a ruling from the court that the entire report was relevant and read it to the jury. It contained evidence in the form of affidavits of members of the United Mine Workers relating such horrible atrocities by prohibition enforcement officers, state police and deputy sheriffs, that the prosecution's case would have ended then and there if justice and not law was the issue.

Many women in the audience—more than half the audience is composed of women—were crying as the report related details so horrible as to be almost incredible.

Not only is the interest the women of Charles Town are taking in the case one of its most striking features but also what the testimony of witnesses shows to be an actual fact: that it was the women who protested most bitterly against the miners abandoning the offensive before the federal troops arrived.

Women Protest Surrender

Dave Fowler, organizer of the United Mine Workers, swore that he called a meeting at Jeffery and advised the men to go home and that the women said:

"My God, Mr. Fowler, this is not the union's affair now. We were promised protection once before and we didn't get it. It's a

The Southern Gentlemen's Sport Season

Mine Owners' Press Agents Smoked Out

Lawrence Dwyer, international executive board member of the United Mine Workers for West Virginia, announces that the publicity forces of the coal barons have been smoked out of the Astor Hotel, where they had installed themselves, and that they have departed for regions unknown.

The propaganda bureau was directed by Tom L. Lewis, secretary, and other representatives of the New River, West Va., Coal Operators' Association.

Call to the Kept Press

Immediately upon their arrival in this city they sent word to newspapers that they were ready to receive reporters to issue daily bulletins.

The purpose of their campaign was to discredit the relief efforts here of Lawrence Dwyer, of the miners' union; Miss Elizabeth Gilmore, treasurer of the Miners' Relief Committee, and Dr. Mercer G. Johnston, who have recently arrived here from Baltimore to develop the local campaign for relief for the West Virginia miners.

The hirelings of the mine owners, thru their propaganda, sought to offset the charges of Dwyer regarding wages, working and living conditions of the coal miners thruout the New River and Winding Gulf Coal Fields.

One of the first statements issued was by George Wolfe, secretary of the Winding Gulf, West Va., Coal Operators' Association. It was quickly seized upon and given wide publicity by the kept press.

Promoted After Murder

Dwyer opened up his return fire in an address before the Central Trades and Labor Council of Newark, N. J., in which he exposed the record of George Wolfe, showing that he had murdered a coal miner in Fayette County, West Va., during the coal miners' strike in 1901-2. Later he was promoted to the position of General Manager of the Collins-Winding Gulf Mining Co.

"Wolfe, as general manager, entered into a contract to furnish coal daily for the United States navy. Then the war broke out. The demand for fuel caused the price of coal to go sky-high, and in order that his company might receive the higher prices, Wolfe sold the products of his mine to other buyers, and then wrote to Washington telling the government there the reason he couldn't furnish coal, as per contract to the U. S. navy, was because the United Mine Workers had a strike on and his mine was stopped.

"The government at Washington sent a representative to make an investigation. This representative, Mr. James Purcell, telegraphed Washington that Mr. Wolfe had falsified the situation, that never, at any time, had there been a stoppage of work at his mine.

"Purcell further stated that never,

Coal Barons' Tools Fail in Treason Trial Attack on Workers

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., May 25.—Three prosecution witnesses this morning failed to prove the contention of the State that Andy Porter, organizer for the United Mine Workers at a meeting at Sharples, urged the men to continue their march.

It is upon proof of this that the coal operators intended to base a million dollar suit against the union.

The three witnesses were: M. M. Lillie, superintendent, Boone County Coal Co.; C. C. Guy, general superintendent; and E. H. Lauck, cashier.

Prosecution had asked witnesses if Porter had not used words: "dastardly assassination" and all had replied that he had and that words had inflamed men. Attorney Townsend finally asked one witness what Porter had said. Witness replied that he said, "desperately assassination" while a gale of laughter swept over court room. Prosecution also tried to show that Porter instead of urging men to stop march had actually incited them to further outbreaks and that he had told them that if anything happened that night that they were to get him a gun and he would go with them.

M. M. Lillie could only say that Porter had said if they were disturbed that night he would go with them. This upholds contention defense that miners feared raids from mine guards.

State has two more witnesses to call and will then rest case. Defense attorneys state they are willing to let Jury take case without argument if coal operators will do same. Prosecution has made no statement as to what their intention is.

Gitlow Views Amalgamated Convention

EDITOR'S NOTE:—We feel that the convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America recently adjourned at Chicago was of such importance that we supplement the articles of Robert Minor, with the accompanying article by Ben Gitlow, recently released from Sing Sing prison. Gitlow attended the convention and addressed it on behalf of the National Defense Committee of the Workers Party. Gitlow is a member of the "Amalgamated," thus giving added emphasis to what he has to say. He writes as follows:

By BEN GITLOW.

If you ask the average worker you meet on the street about the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' convention, he will shrug his shoulders with surprise and will wonder why you questioned him about a convention he knows nothing of and concerning which the papers he read reported nothing.

The standing of the base ball teams in the National League, the European trip of champion Jack Dempsey or Stillman's divorce case are all subjects upon which he is well informed.

He knows nothing of what transpired in Chicago at the convention

Thousands of New Readers to "The Worker" Are Awaiting Dunne's Reports of Convention

On June 12th, at Cincinnati, Ohio, the American Federation of Labor will open its annual convention. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of workers will await news of the actions of this convention of organized labor.

The capitalist press will give daily its perverted and misleading accounts of the actions of the true representatives of labor in the convention, the "left wing," the Trade Union Educational League.

Thousands of workers will wish to have the truth but will be unable to get it because only THE WORKER and a few other workers' papers will publish it, and their circulation even among the radical elements of workers is limited.

William F. Dunne, labor editor of THE WORKER, will witness every session of this convention. He will report to THE WORKER readers the facts as they occur at the convention; and he will give the facts with the understanding of a class-conscious worker who knows the class struggle and the American labor movement as do few either in or out of the A. F. of L.

Read The Worker's Reports

In line with THE WORKER'S policy of giving the facts of every labor struggle to as wide a circle of workers as possible, we have made a special reduced subscription price to new subscribers.

We want every worker to read these convention reports and have therefore reduced the subscription price to 50 cents for 20 weeks.

More than one-half the regular subscription price knocked off. This is a reduction which means an actual weekly cash loss, but in the interest of workers' education we believe we are justified in making it.

Get New Subscribers

In order to make up this deficit every reader must get more subscribers. They must tackle every worker susceptible of being awake to his class interests and interest him in THE WORKER and get his 20 week subscription.

If our readers, not just a few of them, but all of them, will do this, if they will do their part in increasing the circulation of this paper among the workers, then the object of THE WORKER will be accomplished.

Thousands of new subscribers can be secured at once if our readers will step lively and just pick them up.

At the rate of 20 weeks for 50 cents thousands of new readers can be placed permanently upon our mailing lists.

THE WORKER expects that every reader, every Workers' Party, Local and Branch will do their utmost to secure new subscriptions at this rate. Roll in the subs, they're waiting for you to gather them in. Don't wait for others, do your part now.

Chicago Open Shoppers Now Pass the Hat

CHICAGO.—With an inflammatory appeal to the "patriotic citizens of Chicago," the socalled Citizens' Committee to Enforce the Landis Award in the building trades has begun to pass the hat to carry on its antiunion campaign.

The committee goes on a public begging basis in a 14-inch three column advertisement in the metropolitan press stating:

"The practical way the patriotic citizen of Chicago can help in this crisis is by lending his financial support. Some day you will be asked, 'What did you do in the war for Chicago?' Be prepared to answer that you saw your duty and did it."

The patriotic offerings of the citizens are to be spent, according to the committee, to hire guards for Landis award jobs and to import nonunion mechanics to take the place of the Chicago unionists who refused to accept the Landis award which destroyed many union safeguards and reduced wages drastically.

"Money is the ammunition which is needed to win this war," the committee frankly states.

The murderers of the two policemen who were slain recently are still being sought by the police.

Thousands Ready to Give Lives to Save Miners' Union in Hills of West Virginia

Lawrence Dwyer, international board member of the United Mine Workers, for West Virginia, says:

"The only way we can lose is by being starved out. If the operators win this fight it will be by starvation. They cannot defeat us in any other way.

"There are thousands of us who will give up our lives rather than go into those mines and scab."

Jobless Send Open Letter to Hylan

The Unemployment Council of New York, Israel Amter, Secretary, has addressed a letter to Mayor Hylan, pointing out the necessity of taking immediate action on the unemployment situation.

The letter emphasizes that the demands of the Unemployment Council and its charges are backed up by the Central Trades and Labor Council, which adopted a resolution embodying the same points.

The letter follows:

New York, May 25, 1922.

Mr. John H. Hylan,
City Hall,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—On March 27, delegates of the Unemployment Council had a conference with Acting Mayor Hulbert, in regard to work for the 332,000 unemployed in the city of New York. Mr. Hulbert ridiculed the statement that there was that number of jobless in the city at the time, and assured the delegates that the projects then being planned by the Board of Estimate would absorb the greater part of the unemployed.

Number of Unemployed Increase

On April 5, the Central Trades and Labor Council, of which Mr. John Sullivan, director of the Municipal Aid Bureau, is president, passed a resolution on Unemployment.

This resolution was the result of a conference of Mr. Darwin Meserole of Brooklyn with the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce. In the resolution of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, which was basic to the resolution of the Central Trades and Labor Council, there was emphasized the fact that the number of unemployed in New York City had increased from the end of December to March, and that the situation was "menacing."

It was specifically pointed out that despite whatever was being done by the city, state and nation, there was a tremendous number of unemployed for whom amelioration would have to be provided.

Hylan Goes to Washington

Mr. Kehoe, secretary of the Central Trades and Labor Council, stated that he had called upon you with several other members of the Central Trades and Labor Council, and you had agreed to go to Washington and present the situation of the New York workers to the government, and seek aid.

Mr. Mayor! The situation as pictured in the resolution is exactly as has been repeatedly stated in the propaganda of the Unemployment Council.

In the month of December, the Unemployment Council addressed you, asking you to take specific steps to relieve the unemployed, particularly in view of the fact that winter was at hand.

You handed the letter to Mr. Coler, your Commissioner on Unemployment, who replied that the City had already initiated the steps suggested by the Unemployment Council. Four months later the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce and the Central Trades and Labor Council repeat the requests of the Unemployment Council.

Work Must Be Provided

The demand of the Unemployed for WORK is backed up by 750,000 organized workers in the city of New York.

The unemployed call upon the city to undertake without delay the construction of more houses for the 80,000 families who are obliged to live in filthy, crowded tenements, for want of other homes to move into.

The Unemployed ask you to extend the subway lines which are badly needed in the greater city.

The port of New York should be enlarged in order to meet the requirements of a harbor as important as New York, with its increasing traffic.

Schools are needed: the fire inspection of last autumn revealed that if the schools were properly inspected, more than two-thirds would have to be closed. City streets are in very bad repair.

Government Admits Responsibility

We realize that the present order of society does not furnish all men with work. Or, as President Harding stated at the beginning of the Unemployment Conference, there are more than 1,500,000 unemployed in the United States even in normal times.

The work thus undertaken, however, would relieve the situation most effectively.

Furthermore, unemployment being a social disease, it can be approached only by bodies capable of treating it as a mass manifestation.

President Harding in calling the Unemployment Conference and the Conference in referring the matter to the State and Municipal authorities recognized that the Government, Federal, State and Municipal, have their obligations toward the matter of Unemployment.

Workers Denied Right to Work

The Unemployed are without work thru no fault of their own. True, some of them are unfit for work, because of disease or congenital disposition.

The remainder, representing the majority, are denied the right to work, because of wasteful methods, seasonal occupations, etc.; because of the closing down of factories by the owners, deliberately at times, in that they can obtain no profit from the work of their workers, maliciously at other times, in that they have malevolent designs against the workers and their organizations; and because of the mal-adjustment of industry, which requires the workers to produce without any regard to market or consumption, and then discharges them as a consequence of overproduction.

Disease Is Portion of the Poor

It is a fact that the employers maintain an army of unemployed in order to hold the workers in check thru the menace of the loss of their jobs by the competition of others willing to work under inferior conditions.

It is a fact that the present system CANNOT AND DOES NOT PROVIDE WORK FOR ALL. As a consequence, we have the direful manifestation of disease (tuberculosis, the disease of the poor, anaemia, primarily the disease of the poor, etc.), child labor (owing to parents not being able to maintain the home by their own labor), and mother at work (owing to the father not being able to keep the family).

Driven to Murder and Suicide

At present, we have the even more dreadful fact of a crime wave commnittant with the vast unemployment obtaining in the country.

Crimes of the utterest boldness are being committed, despite the most stringent regulations and severe penalties threatened. Burglaries, holdups, murders of the most desperate sort—the regular companion of misery, want and desperation.

Suicides and insanity—soldiers but a short time ago the heroes of the nation, now turned mad and criminal, because they are denied the most primitive requirement of life: the right to a livelihood.

Situation Is Menacing

Mr. Mayor! The Unemployment Council is not asking that you become a revolutionary.

It does not ask that you advocate a system that would allow every worker, and only the workers, to have a living.

The Unemployment Council, however, does ask that you heed the word of warning of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, which cannot be accused of being revolutionary or pessimistic.

It asks you to remember that the situation is "menacing"; that altho summer is coming, it will be followed by autumn and winter. Provision must be made NOW.

Very truly yours,
UNEMPLOYMENT COUNCIL OF NEW FORK
Israel Amter, Secretary.

The second party, numbering about 200 workers, has sailed from New York on the steamship Rotterdam, to participate in the great reconstruction and development projects in the district leased from the Russian soviet government in the Kuznetsky basin in Siberia. Still another party is to start in about two weeks, proceeding via Holland and thence to Petrograd by special steamer.

The S. P.'s New Role

The Miami Valley Socialist, official organ of the Socialist Party of Ohio, in its issue of May 19, publishes some resolutions passed by the Dayton local of the Socialist party. They deal with John H. Patterson of National Cash Register fame and are as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY LOCAL DAYTON SOCIALIST PARTY OF OHIO,
MAY 12, 1922

Whereas, in the death of John H. Patterson, Dayton has lost her leading citizen and the United States one of her ablest men, and

Whereas, the AIM OF THIS ORGANIZATION is the uplift of mankind and the elevation of the race to a new civilization wherein poverty and misery and suffering shall be unknown, and

Whereas, Mr. Patterson has done more for the welfare and happiness of the people of Dayton, as a business executive, as a teacher, and as a student of social conditions, than any other citizen; therefore, be it

Resolved, that LOCAL DAYTON SOCIALIST PARTY OF OHIO, pay its tribute of respect to his memory, and that copies of these resolutions be sent to members of the family as a token of our sympathy; and be it further

Resolved, that these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, and published in the Miami Valley Socialist, and copies of these resolutions be sent to the FEDERATED PRESS, the NEW YORK CALL, the MILWAUKEE LEADER and the LOCAL DAILY NEWSPAPERS.

Signed
WILLIAM A. STINES,
OSCAR K. EDELMAN,
Committee on Resolutions.

To what depths has the Socialist Party sunk when a local in the city that was the scene of the exploits of this nationally known labor-hater passes resolutions eulogising an employer who would not let a union men inside his plant; who ruled over thousands of employees with an iron hand and who became wealthy thru the invention of another man without ever doing a stroke of useful work.

As an instance of what happens to an organization managed by sickly sentimentalists and the contradictions into which it is led, be it known that The Call published an editorial from the Minneapolis Labor Review which told the truth about Patterson, his stolen glory, and of Charles Zallud, the real inventor, who died in poverty.

We now await the publication of the Dayton resolutions by The Call.

We hope that the Socialist Party will be able to maintain an office for the next few years. Judge Gary of the Steel trust is getting old and must soon pass away.

It will cheer him to know that the Socialist Party of America stands ready to assuage the grief of his slaves by lauding their kind friend and master whose hidden virtues only the Socialist Party was able to perceive and appreciate.

Ben Gitlow, Communist [illegible] Letter to His Brother

EDITOR'S NOTE:—Ben Gitlow, while still behind bars as a Communist prisoner, Convict No. 38461, wrote and sent a letter to his brother, Dr. Samuel Gitlow, New York City, giving his views toward the medical profession under capitalism, and especially dealing with the role that the medical profession played in the Russian Revolution. His letter was as follows:

DEAR BROTHER:—I have read an article on the strides Soviet Russia is making in spite of the difficulties in its general health program and in its fight against disease.

Soviet Russia lacks surgical supplies, essential chemicals, medications, proper hospital facilities and professional workers. I am not surprised at this because I have had thru you a wide acquaintance with the medical profession.

To my past observations I add on my more recent observations and the sum total of the result is a poor estimation of the sincerity and humaneness of a large number of the profession.

Like most professional men in present-day capitalist society the goal sought by them is one of material gain instead of service to his fellow-men and scientific advancement.

Even the advantages existing for scientific progress are generally unattainable by the poor practitioner and easily accessible to the wealthy one.

It is therefore no wonder that the physician attaches himself to the wealthy classes and disdains to be classified among the poor and the common workers.

He becomes instead of a man of service a servant to caste and an obedient slave to the ruling and moneyed interests of the country.

That is why the Russian doctors refused to serve the workers as their equals after the workers had dislodged the wealthy parasites and nobility in whose circles the doctors were wont to sport.

When the revolution came the circles of moneyed respectability, sham and pomp were wiped out. The fashionable drawing rooms were no more. The delicate ladies in jewels and silks in peacock fashion strutted the polished floors no longer.

The men in unemotional black with stiff collars and starched shirts had disappeared and with them the whole retinue of Russian royalty with its gaudy uniforms, gold braids, buttons and polished boots.

In their place stood a new power, dirty and in rags, with powerful hands and with fingers that looked like the grasping roots of a giant oak. In his hand he held a rifle. In his weather-beaten and toil-worn face the years of hunger, struggle and oppression were furrowed in deep lines.

His eyes glistened like black coals in the moon's silver light and flashed a heroic determination that was born with the victory he had gained. He who had always made obeisance to a lord, a master, an official and an intellectual, was now himself master.

The hounded underdog, the slovenly peasant, the crude worker were now the leading society, and the other society that paraded in its golden glitter and idled itself on the toil of the poor was now relegated to antiquity.

The physician refused at first to become the servant of this new society, the mighty proletariat. Later some began to realize the treacherous cruelty of their position, while the others were forced to realize it. Now they are all serving the workers. The doctors' place in Russia is recognized on the standard of service, not of wealth. It is not in this country. Very often a physician uses his profession which he considers secondary for the prime purpose of investing in real estate and speculating in stocks and bonds.

Physicians in the United States willingly serve for cash rewards the wealthy and ruling classes against the poor and the workers. You find them in the employ of industrial corporations, life and accident insurance companies, railroads, food-packing concerns, chemical houses, etc., diligently serving those who pay them.

Whenever the interests of their employers clash with those of the workers or the people at large you will find almost always that the paid physician rushes to the support of his paymaster. The paradox of this situation is that the physicians accept this pernicious, and harmful arrangement, unavoidable in a society based upon the accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few, as an ideal one.

He fails to realize that under a workers' regime he will obtain the greatest recognition from the service he renders mankind and not from the fact that he rides in the latest six-cylinder super-elegant automobile.

But then some slaves always fight those who would free them, and of all slaves the professional intellectual in that respect is the worst.

Convict No. 38461.

More Phrases From Amsterdam

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The Call, in a recent issue, published in full the manifesto issued by the Amsterdam International of Trade Unions calling upon the workers of all countries to prevent war.

The Call then draws attention to the manifesto in an editorial which seems to have been written for the express purpose of taking a slap at the Third International; it concludes with the following paragraph:

> Moscow has also a lesson to learn from this manifesto. Are those issuing it in truth traitors to their class, agents and hirelings of the bourgeoisie? Or is it not time now for a sincere retraction and solemn apology?

To this the answer is at hand, written indelibily in the records of the activities of the signers of this belated document. The Fimmens, the Oudegeests and the Jouhaux supported their government in the imperialistic war which they now denounce; they supported the League of Nations and endeavored to lead the world's workers into the trap set for them by their rulers after the war.

These phrase mongers supported every white guard government set up by the Allies with which to crush the revolutions in a dozen different countries; it was enough for them that their masters labeled these counter-revolutionary dictatorships as "democratic governments." It was the followers of these treacherous social-patriots who betrayed the revolution in Hungary and it was not until it was being drowned in the blood of the Hungarian workers, after the overthrow of the Soviet government, that Amsterdam called for a general strike in protest against the atrocities of Horthy, whom their treachery and cowardice brought to power.

They shed tears over the fall of the "democratic" government of Georgia—another creation of their rulers—and they worry much over the social revolutionaries in Russia who were caught red-handed in an attempt to take the lives of the leaders of the only revolutionary government in the world. While every one of their own governments is guilty of innummerable crimes against the workers at home and abroad they remain silent or talk about old-age pensions. From them came no protest while their governments were busy crushing the workers governments of Finland and Latvia and while the whole capitalist world massed its forces against Soviet Russia they too slunk into the offensive with slimy insinuations directed against the integrity of the Russian revolutionists.

They call for a general strike to prevent war. In almost the same breath they repudiate the idea of a disciplined international organization of the workers, responsible to one central authority. To such empty gestures the reply of the imperialists is a sardonic grin; in the imperialist press one will search in vain for any denunciation of this manifesto like those delivered whenever the Third International addresses the workers of the world.

The imperialists know that the revolutionary phrases of Amsterdam are only phrases; the trade union leaders are in the cabinets of the imperialist rulers; each one of them is giving of his best that the capitalist class of his country may further entrench itself.

Another war inevitably means the end of capitalism. The rulers know it if the yellow labor leaders do not and in this day and age a manifesto denouncing war and war alone becomes in reality a reactionary document.

The capitalist press itself is denouncing war and pleading for peace; the capitalist system cannot stand the destruction that another war would entail but—like other phenomena of capitalist society wars occur whether the rulers want them or not and worse things could happen than for the workers of Europe again to find themselves with arms in their hands.

What is needed to-day is not an organization against war but an organization of workers FOR war against the capitalist system. This is a task in which manifestos play their part but they are so much waste paper when issued by individuals who ignore the facts of the struggle and who mislead workers with the ideas that working-class pacifism is an effective weapon against the brutal efficiency of the military machine of the imperialists.

The greatest obstacle to the successful culmination of the revolutionary struggles in which the workers of Europe have engaged in the last five years has been the loyalty of their leaders to the ideals of early capitalism, their devotion to the empty and obsolete phrases of the Manchester school of liberalism, their inability and their fear to acknowledge the lessons that recent history teaches.

The Third International has nothing to learn from this manifesto. It long ago tagged and placed the authors of this document where they belong—in the list of those who help capitalism to exist by obtaining the confidence of the masses thru the use of revolutionary phrases and then leading them into the camp of the imperialists when a crisis arises.

No post-war deluge of revolutionary phraseology can wipe out the black record of those who upheld the hands of the rulers during the war and after; neither will the latest document emanating from Amsterdam conceal the fact that by refusing to unite under the banner of the Third International they are playing into the hands of the same rulers they pretend to denounce.

They stand ready to join in the demand of their rulers that Russia disband her Red Army and they will do so with the hypocritical pretense that peace cannot come without it. They have already denounced Russia as a military nation altho they know that the Red Army stands not only between the Russian people and slavery to their rulers but that it is also the strongest defense that the workers of the rest of Europe have.

The manifesto meets with the approval of The Call, official organ of the Socialist Party of America, altho as the editorial states "it is a document of class-consciousness without using that phrase. Not a mention of Socialism, of the name of Karl Marx."

All of which may be of great value but hardly the thing one would expect approval of from a Socialist publication. As a matter of fact the Socialist Party is no longer socialist except in name.

It is the same reformist organization it was before the war; it has learned nothing and forgotten nothing or it would not give its whole-hearted blessing to a manifesto that differs in nowise from the pronouncements of the Second International before the world war exposed it in its true light as a loosely built organization of national parties whose socialism ended at the national boundaries; an organization without power or discipline, dominated by the democratic ideology bequeathed it by a struggling middle-class and consequently an adjunct, not a foe, of the capitalist system.

Gitlow Views Amalgamated Convention

of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers even tho what transpired there was of vital material importance to every wage worker, particularly to those who are counted in the ranks of organized labor.

The clothing workers' convention may be looked at in two ways. One way is to judge it as a gathering of chosen delegates who at the expense of their locals were sent to Chicago to enjoy a week of riotous pleasure. In taking care of the arrangements of the convention the Chicago Joint Board of the Amalgamated assiduously saw to it that banquets, automobile rides, concerts, dances, etc. were at all times going on for the entertainment of the delegates. The entertainments were so numerous that a special booklet was printed to serve as a program for the joy seeking delegates. The expense involved in carrying out the program of entertainments must have totalled a neat sum of many thousands of dollars.

Spoke for 175,000 Workers

The other way is to disregard the human satisfaction of enjoying oneself immensely without having to pay for it, but to look upon the convention as a gathering of over 300 serious-minded delegates of various degrees of intelligence, with different views and ideas and with widely divergent conceptions of the labor movement, its aims and goal; that the delegates assembled crystallized in expression the thoughts and desires of 175,000 organized clothing workers whom they represented; that from them was expected not only a statement of policy but also a program of action for the next two ensuing years. The latter method is the one we shall pursue in this article.

The deliberations of a convention representing an organization of 175,000 workers cannot be isolated from the general labor movement.

The bad economic conditions prevalent in the U. S. today, with the millions of unemployed, the ferocious onslaughts against the unions by the combined forces of capital, the unstable condition of Europe, the reactionary trend in the administration of government in the U. S., the Russian Revolution and the new ideology developing in the labor movement that finds its expression in the left and progressive movements on foot in almost every labor organization strongly affect the policies of the Amalgamated, as they do the policies of all labor organizations in the country.

Three Groups in Convention

The attitude the Amalgamated is forced to take on account of these conditions is bound in one way or another to influence the general labor movement, just as it is equally true that the attitude of the general labor movement wields a strong influence upon the thoughts of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The delegates to the convention were divided into three main groups. The administration supporters, Socialist Party or right wing group dominated by the Jewish Daily Forward and a left wing group.

The left wing group held the balance of power.

If the left wing had been an anti-administration group it could have made a political alliance with the right wing and could have easily defeated the administration.

The tactics of the Left wing group, however, were based upon principles and not upon personal factionalism and desire for office.

Right Wing Isolated

The decidedly left attitude of the administration upon the big problems confronting the convention won for it the support of the left. The result was that the right wing was unable at any time to assert itself and make a fight.

The actual basis for a fight on the part of the left did not exist.

From the opening day of the convention rumors persisted that the Forward faction would make an issue against General Secretary Schlossberg, in order to defeat him as Secretary and elect in his place A. I. Shiplacoff. The great ovation given Schlossberg the first day of the convention and the ovations he received in the following days greatly cooled the fighting ardor of the right. Well organized and working diligently the right wing took advantage of every available opportunity to stage enthusiastic demonstrations in its behalf. Most of the demonstrations fell flat. Particularly was this true of Abe Cahan's dramatic entrance into the convention hall at the head of about 600 of Chicago's shopworkers. After Abe Cahan's tirade against the "disruptionists," the rebuke administered to him by President Sidney Hillman received such thunderous approval from the delegates that Abe Cahan, the lion-hearted, editor-in-chief of the Jewish Daily Forward, slunk away.

The right wing delegates lost all their ambition and courage for an open conflict with the administration on the floor of the convention. The boom for A. I. Shiplacoff fizzled out into nothing. Chas. W. Erwin, editor of the N. Y. Call, who was busy trying to win over delegates with his broad Tammany Hall smile, packed his grip and left for New York. Abe Cahan, weary and dejected, was somewhere in the wilds of Chicago, left to his reveries and hallucinations of the wierd contortions of the terrible communists.

The left wing delegates were sadly disappointed with President Hillman's committee appointments. The committees were given into the hands of the conservatives. The left wing representation on committees was very poor, on some committees their representation being nil.

Organized labor in the U. S. has been steadily retreating before the forces of capital. The open shop drive has put out of existence a large number of unions, has weakened the fighting ability of a still greater number and has wiped out many of the privileges and concessions that labor organizations have after years of bitter struggle wrenched from the capitalist class.

Amalgamated Forced to Retreat

Economically the worker in the U. S. is worse off today than he ever was. The open shop forces, tho unsuccessful in entirely smashing organized labor, have been successful 100 percent in liquidating the costs of labor by reducing wages of the workers. The trade union movement has been powerless to stop this liquidation.

The Amalgamated has met the onslaught of the Open Shop. After a bitter struggle that in New York lasted over six months the Amalgamated was victorious in maintaining its organization only by sacrificing some of the advantageous union conditions and by accepting a reduction in wages. Reductions in wages were accepted by the Amalgamated for all the markets it controlled.

In other words the Amalgamated withstood the main attack against its organization by retreating and giving concessions to the clothing manufacturers.

Shall the retreat continue or shall organized labor assume the offensive is now the most urgent consideration before all labor organization in the U. S., the Amalgamated Clothing Workers included. Around this question revolve all the questions today holding the attention of the labor movement, such as industrial unionism, shop stewards, amalgamation, international affiliation, political action and the united front.

Old Methods Prove Inadequate

Old methods of industrial warfare carried on by the old forms of labor organizations have proven, in the light of the historical events in the labor movement, inadequate for the occasion. Not only must the methods of industrial warfare be changed, but radical changes must be made in the forms of the labor organizations themselves.

Let us therefore now investigate how the Amalgamated reacted to the demands of the present industrial struggle.

Sidney Hillman's program met with the almost unanimous approval of the convention. His program, briefly, was as follows:

For the General Labor movement, craft unionism, being a relic of the past is an obstacle in the present struggle of the workers and must immediately give way to industrial unionism.

Amalgamation of all the unions in the needle trades, and endorsement of the amalgamation tendencies particularly of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

Recognition of Soviet Russia and the active participation of organized labor in its reconstruction.

The Times Have Changed

Every one should realize that it would be futile to use the military equipment of 1861 in a military engagement of 1922. In the class struggle of 1922 to use the weapons of 1880, the antiquated craft organizations and their isolated strikes, is just as futile.

Capitalism has battered and smashed craft divisions. The skilled mechanic is now in a hopeless minority. The ranks of labor are now composed of hordes of unskilled and semi skilled workers. In industrial warfare these hordes can not be utilized by the old craft unions. Industrial unionism is the organization best suited to mobilize the forces of the workers in industry and through its weapon of the general strike is best able to hurl these forces against the bulwarks of capitalism.

The amalgamation of all the unions in the needle trades would mean the organization of one of the most powerful industrial unions in the country. It would at once so strengthen the industrial power of the workers in the needle trades that they could again resume the offensive against the manufacturers. The International Ladies Garment Workers, an A. F. of L. union controlled by the Jewish Daily Forward combinations, will not be in a position to resist the demand for amalgamation by its rank and file. The leaders, however, of the International Ladies Garment Workers will try to put all obstacles in the path of amalgamation. Amalgamation, if accomplished, will be accomplished by the A. C. W. in spite of Schlesinger and his crowd. Such an amalgamation will be a great victory for the left and will create such a situation in the A. F. of L. on the question of amalgamation that the Gompers machine will have to use all its ingenuity to effectively oppose it. Amalgamation will become a burning issue in the American labor movement.

Offer More Than Lip-Service

The amalgamation of the needle trades will be a powerful lever in the fight in the ranks of the A. F. of L. for the success of the principle of amalgamation all along the line.

The Amalgamated does not offer lip-service to the Russian workers. It early came to the assistance of Soviet Rusia and saved the lives of 37,000 Russian workers. The Amalgamated realizes that capitalist imperialism seeks to enslave Russia before agreeing to help in its reconstruction. The Amalgamated therefore organizes a corporation on a co-operative basis for the investment of capital and the reconstruction of Russia. It appeals directly to the organized labor movement for support in this project.

If every labor union in the U. S. took the position on these three matters—industrial unionism, amalgamation, and recognition of Soviet Russia—in line with that of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, we would have a powerful, militant and revolutionary labor movement in this country.

On this program the left wing must give its endivided and staunch support to the Amalgamated. The Amalgamated is far from being composed of a majority of communists. Among the delegates at the convention the communists were a small number.

Communists Must Face Reality

The communists must face the reality as far as the labor movement is concerned; that is that conditions will drive the mass of workers to take certain positions. Whenever the workers accept advanced policies and adopt a forward program, they must, as communists, support them.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers at their convention took a heroic stand upon most of the problems confronting the American labor movement. The convention has been of a historic nature. If it had done nothing else but lay the basis for beginning the offensive against capitalism it has done its duty and it laid that basis in its stand on industrial unionism and amalgamation.

But the Amalgamated has gone much further. It has put itself in the ranks of the revolutionary international proletariat by deeds and action and not by phrases alone.

The program of the Amalgamated is the program of a United Front for Labor on the Industrial Field in the United States.

On Trial for Treason

William Blizzard, subdistrict president in West Virginia, United Mine Workers of America, has been indicted with hundreds of other miners on charges brought by the state in connection with the march of union miners into nonunion Logan county in August, 1921. Blizzard is on trial now in Charles Town, where John Brown was tried and hanged in 1859 charged, like Blizzard, with treason.

Miners' Treason Trial Shows Women Urged Men to Fight on in West Va.

[illegible] of the honor of the people of West Virginia."

William Blizzard's mother, sixty years old, was with the miners on the firing line, acting as nurse according to the witnesses for the prosecution, and this is one thing the mild young man did not deny or plausibly explain away.

He simply said that "mother is too old to do much" and let it go at that while the audience smiled in sympathy and apparent understanding.

For it IS a sympathetic audience that sits for hours in the humid heat of the crowded courtroom and drinks in every word.

People with the Miners

It is a little hard to understand how it is that the coal operators can do what they have done when incident after incident shows that a majority of the people of this state are with the miners in their fight for organization.

One such incident was the appearance on the stand for the defense of the attorney-general of West Virginia.

He made the bald statement, after describing the system by which the coal companies control the appointment of deputies, that the sole duty they had to perform was to prevent organization of the miners.

Challenged by the bellowing Belcher to name one deputy actually serving the coal companies, he proceeded to name a round half-dozen. Challenged again to give the source of his information he simply stated that he had lived in Logan county for twenty years and that it was a matter of public knowledge.

Both the jury and the audience seemed to be satisfied with this; in fact everyone was—with the exception of the prosecution.

Dictatorship of Coal Barons

The real explanation of these puzzling facts, of course, is this. The operators hold Logan and Mingo counties and prevent organization among their employees and thereby maintain enough political power in the state to avoid any embarrassing interferences with their policies.

In the light of this the march of the miners into Logan county becomes strategy of a high order. With Mingo and Logan organized the power of the coal barons is broken in West Virginia.

The state as a whole is probably a little in advance of the average industrial community and for that reason many of the people outside of the fastnesses of the operators do not fully appreciate the relentless and desperate nature of the opposition with which the miners have to deal.

This is well exemplified by the following incident: I was sitting on the courthouse lawn with some of the witnesses and town people and had asked concerning the sentiment of the residents of this city. One of them told me that he had found just one man who was not in favor of an acquittal. A miner defendant spoke up and said: "I can convince that fellow in no time at all. I'll pin a union button on him and buy him a ticket to Logan county. If he comes back alive he'll be for an acquittal. He won't say that it was state police that beat him up either. The guards will do it and tell him so."

With all its jumble of confused issues about constitutional rights and the question of whether the miners were rebelling against the state of West Virginia or simply defending themselves and their families by an offensive against the hirelings of the coal operators one does not need to be here long to see that it is a class case.

One only has to see the attorneys for the prosecution with their retinue of secretaries of coal operators associations, sleek and crafty looking young men of the Y. M. C. A type on one hand, and the coal and powder marked defendants and witnesses on the other.

Oh! Yes! There are also the state police who hang about the court house in their trim green uniforms—the only persons the prosperous looking prosecuting attorneys treat as equals.

Workers Pitch in to Make Excursion Huge Success

Latest reports on the huge excursion for Russian Relief, which has been arranged for Sunday, June 11, by the Friends of Soviet Russia, show an enthusiastic response from the workers thruout the entire city.

Comrades are working day and night to make the affair a success. Some are using their efforts to increase the sale of tickets, which are being sold thru the individuals as well as thru the following stations: 240 East 23d St., 64 East 4th St., Rand School, 201 West 13th Street; 208 East 12th St.; 431 East 6th St., 138 West 13th St., 1403 Fifth Ave., 143 East 103d St., 350 East 81st St., 1292 Washington Ave., 1347 Boston Road, 1470 Wilkins Ave., 455 Grand St.; Brooklyn: 10 Siegel St., 226 Roebling St., 296 Sackman St., 1801 Pitkin Ave., 764 40th St.

Urge United Front to Aid Coal Miners

States by the Workers' Party. This manifesto urges organized and unorganized, employed and unemployed, to unite in the struggle against the open shop drive of the employers, and to fight unemployment.

The manifesto calls upon the unions to make use of their central labor bodies in each city as the organization to carry on the fight. It proposes that for this purpose the central bodies should invite all unaffiliated labor organizations and groups of unemployed to send delegates.

These central bodies should carry on agitational and educational campaigns thru meetings and mass demonstrations in support of the workers who are attacked by the bosses.

Manifesto Refers to Miners

In referring to the strike of the miners the manifesto calling for the United Front says:

"The half million miners who are now facing a life and death struggle, in a situation carefully prepared to insure their defeat, will fight alone (lukewarm words mean nothing) under the policy heretofore pursued by the leadership of the A. F. of L., and the defeat and even destruction of this splendid working class organization is a possible outcome of this struggle, if the workers organized and unorganized do not rally to their support.

"In place of every railroad man refusing to handle non-union coal every fireman refusing to shovel, every engineer refusing to run an engine deriving power from it, a big section of the organized workers will become the agents of the capitalists in the fight against the miners by using coal produced by scab workers. It is through thus dividing the workers and making them fight against other workers that the capitalists beat them."

The program of the Workers' Party for the United Front of Labor would rally the whole strength of the workers of this country to the support of the striking miners. It would mobilize the other labor organizations for a campaign of publicity for the miners' demands and to stop other union men from handling coal mined by scab workers, and support the miners through financial contributions from the whole working class.

The statement of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers' Party calling attention to the fight of the miners, and urging support of the United Front program says:

"Six hundred thousand miners are fighting against a drive of the bosses to destroy their splendid organization.

"The struggle in which these miners are engaged is a struggle in which every worker in this country, organized or unorganized, has an interest. The defeat of the miners will be a defeat for the workers everywhere. It will be followed by more organizations, for if the bosses can whip the miners they will feel powerful enough to beat any other union into submission.

"In the fight of the miners will be decided the question whether the whole body of workers of this country, organized or unorganized, will be forced to submit to even greater reduction of wages, worse working conditions and the weakening of their organizations.

"The Workers' Party of America has issued a call to the workers to build a United Front to meet the offensive of the capitalists. It has proposed a definite program of action for such a United Front.

"There could be no greater emergency requiring such a United Front than the struggle in which the six hundred thousand hard and soft coal miners are now fighting the bosses.

"The miners' organization is the backbone of the American labor movement. They have many a splendid fight to their credit, their support has always been ready to be given to other workers. Now workers everywhere must rally to the support of the miners and smash the combination of bosses which is trying to destroy their organization.

"The Central Executive Committee of the Workers' Party calls upon the workers everywhere, organized and unorganized, to get behind the United Front program and to make a united stand in support of the miners."

United Front Campaign Under Way

The United Front campaign is gathering headway at the headquarters of the Workers' Party. Already the manifesto and program for the United Front has been mailed out to all of the units of the Workers' Party and to the labor papers throughout the country. The next step will be the circulation of the local unions, urging them to endorse and get behind the program.

Local organizations of the Workers' Party are lining up their speakers for the campaign who will address the local unions of each city and present the United Front program. The manifesto containing the proposals for the United Front has been printed in the form of a four-page leaflet and will be given a wide circulation. Plans for a series of mass meeting in the larger cities of the country, at which prominent speakers will discuss the United Front are also under way.

The United Front campaign represents the first effort to unite the workers of this country in a great mass movement to fight the immediate struggles of the workers. This campaign typifies the proposals in the program of the Workers Party of America. The aim and object of the party is to build a militant, class-conscious movement of the workers on the basis of these immediate struggles and to guide that movement to achievement of the emancipation of the workers from the evils which the present industrial system brings upon them.

What Will You Give to Build the United Front of Labor?

You have often thought what a mighty power the workers would wield if they united in the struggle against the bosses.

You have said that if the various workers' organizations would get together to fight for the things they want they could sweep away all opposition.

THE WORKERS CAN BE THUS UNITED IN THEIR IMMEDIATE STRUGGLES.

The Workers Party proposes to create this unity in the fight against the open shop and unemployment thru its UNITED FRONT PROGRAM.

To do this the United Front Program must be presented to the workers. Leaflets must be printed, speakers must be routed, the organization must be built up which will be the driving force in the UNITED FRONT CAMPAIGN.

WHAT WILL YOU GIVE TO BUILD THE UNITED FRONT?

WILL YOU GIVE A DOLLAR?

Proceedings of Communist International

EDITOR'S NOTE: — The Worker will publish in full the resolutions and thesis of the sessions of the enlarged Executive of the Communist International held from February 24, to March 4. This week we publish an introductory review of the most important results of the meeting, written by A. Thalheimer, the German Communist. It is as follows:

By A. THALHEIMER

The central point on the agenda of the Enlarged Executive Session was the question of the united proletarian front. Lively opposition came from the Italian delegation and from the majority of the French delegation.

The arguments, as far as they were not of a sentimental nature, were not the same from all camps of the opposition, altho the latter agreed upon joint resolutions. Our Italian Party unmistakably lacked theoretical security.

Its practice is ahead of its theory. They wanted to be assured of a limited application of the united front tactics to the trade-unions. They overlooked the fact that the political fraction within the trade-unions bound the party as such.

There was also the unmistakable feeling that by showing their willingness to meet the Serratians, the conflict between these two factions could be weakened.

With our French comrades matters were somewhat different. Here one could clearly see the inadequate appreciation of the necessity of drawing that part of the working class that was still outside the Communist Party's ranks (and which in France still constitutes the majority) into the daily struggles.

Our French like our Italian comrades, expressed their fear that the application of the united front policy might lead to a retrogression into "Ministerialism."

As a matter of fact, however, this policy is just the weapon to be applied in the present situation against the Social Democratic collaboration with the bourgeoisie.

The policy of the united proletarian front is the application of the tactical decisions reached by the Third World Congress in the present situation.

Of course, these tactics have their limits and their special applications. They are superfluous for Communist Parties that already have the majority of the working class behind them, or that are the only proletarian parties in their respective countries.

These tactics are also of no practical value to Communist Parties that are in their first stages of development, and which must first draw the dividing line between them and the Social Reformist parties thru propaganda.

Naturally, the application of this policy must make ample allowance for the situation in the various countries.

The debate was very fruitful. The resolution, which was passed by a majority, approves the December theses dealing with the united front, and calls upon the Presidium and the delegations from the most important sections to decide upon the immediate practical measures to be taken in their respective countries towards the application of the new tactics which must naturally be adapted to the peculiar conditions of the various countries.

After the declarations made by the French and Italian delegations, there is no doubt but that they will not only maintain international discipline, but that the actual facts will fully convince them of the necessity of such tactics.

In close connection with this, there is the question of the proposed international conference of all labor organizations.

The Enlarged Executive Session put particular emphasis upon the drawing-in of the international trade-union organizations, including the Syndicalist, Anarchist and [illegible] organizations. The Enlarged Executive Session made it very clear that it fully retained its independent estimate of the Social Reformistic and Centrist Parties.

Its dominating wish, however, is that the conference deal only with such questions as bear upon the direct, practical common action of the working masses.

The Communist International will not evade discussion upon the fundamental differences of opinion, if it is desired; it wants practical work, however.

The second important question that arose at the Enlarged Executive Session was that of the Red Trade Union International (R. T. U. I.).

It became evident that the liquidating questions that arose in single countries in regard to the R. T. U. I. were of no importance.

The situation did not seem to warrant any debate over the future existence of the Red Trade Union International. The Enlarged Executive Session declared very concisely that the decisions reached by the Third World Congress in regard to the trade-union question required no modifications in principle. It pointed out, however, that due to the varied influences of the Communists in the trade-unions, it was necessary to render the work of the Red Trade Union International more concrete and adaptable to the peculiar conditions in the various countries and industrial groups. In a detailed resolution, the Enlarged Executive Session made general recommendations for a concrete evaluation of the present situation in the trade-union struggle, but particularly on the question of directing the defense struggle against the present capitalistic offensive. The most important points are as follows:

> "In the next period, the task of the Communists is the extension of their influence within the old reformist trade-unions, in the struggle against the splitting policy of the Amsterdam leaders and in the thorough application of the united front tactics within the trade-unions."

No objection whatever was raised against this attitude. The third important question was that of the French Party. In a series of questions, including that of the united front, our French Party still displayed strong right-opportunistic tendencies.

The struggle against these tendencies led to the removal of five comrades from the leadership of the party. These five had been chosen by the Marseilles Convention.

The Enlarged Executive Session did not accept the resignation of these comrades, but demanded of them that they retain their posts in accordance with the wish of the convention.

On the other hand, the Executive Session called for the elimination of the remaining reformistic tendencies, which it named in particular.

Finally the Enlarged Executive Session dealt with a communication from the members of the so-called "Workers' Opposition" in the Russian Communist Party. The tendencies of this group were made very clear.

The Executive Session declared that the attitude and actions of these comrades stood in sharpest conflict with the decisions of the 10th Congress of the R. C. P., and they were seriously warned against a continuation of the struggle they had begun.

The treatment of a number of other questions becomes sufficiently clear from the decisions reached.

The Enlarged Executive Session has accomplished a tremendous amount of work, which bears comparison with that of a world congress. The net result may be expressed as the further definite elaboration and application of the tactical line of action drawn up by the Third World Congress. The next world congress will take place in October unless unforeseen events call for an earlier session.

Frayne and the Lusk Law

By BENJAMIN GLASSBERG

Periodically there is undertaken a hunt for radicals in the schools. During the war a number of teachers in the colleges and schools were dismissed because of their lukewarm support of Mr. Wilson's crusade for the preservation of American [illegible]. After the Armistice, Bolshevism served as the excuse for additional casualties among teachers. Beyond doubt, the past few years have been very successful ones for the radical-hunters in the schools.

The ruling class has always been aware of the importance of the schools in maintaining the status quo. The ruling class has always recognized that if the schools were allowed to teach the truth concerning our economic system, its interests would be jeopardized. The ruling class has always opposed the extension of popular education.

When the fight for free schools was being waged by Labor in the '30s, the cotton mill and other interests bitterly fought Labor's effort on the ground that education would make their "hands" lazy and unwilling to perform manual labor. When labor won its fight, and the foundation of our free public school system was laid, the ruling class, however, quickly gained control of the educational institutions. Every year this control has become more and more absolute. It may be stated without fear of contradiction that not a single teacher in any of the schools or colleges is giving expression to views hostile to the interests of the ruling class. What the average teacher fears more than anything else is dismissal from his job. Let the teacher be dismissed for entertaining or expressing radical views and he is practically barred from engaging in the work for which he has been trained, in any part of the country. Anything will be forgiven the teacher but the sin of radicalism. There is a case on record of a New York high school teacher twice convicted of "immoral" acts committed in the school. The severest punishment meted out to this teacher was transfer to another school in the first instance and the loss of a few months' pay in the second.

The legislature of the State of New York during the reaction following the war took a step further than any yet taken to make the schools permanently safe for capitalism. In essence the Lusk law which was passed last year is reminiscent of the Carlsbad Resolution which the crafty Metternich forced upon the German states following the Napoleonic wars. Every teacher in the German universities was watched by a police officer stationed in the class room ready to report not merely the expression of "disloyal" views, but also the failure properly to impress upon the growing youth the virtues and beneficence of the imperial monarch.

The Lusk law confers upon the State Commissioner of Education the power of passing upon the qualifications of all teachers in the state, especially as regards their character and loyalty. Any teacher may be dismissed by the Commissioner if in his opinion the teacher is lacking in the proper percentage of loyalty, which, while not defined by the law, is undoubtedly at least 110 per cent. It is no longer necessary to go through the bother and the publicity of a public trial to cut off the head of an offending radical. Some recent trials have thrown too great a flood of light upon the workings of the controllers of our educational machinery.

After the passage of the Lusk law, a census of the "loyal" was ordered made by the school principals, who were asked to classify all their teachers on the basis of the principal's knowledge and the tales that are obligingly brought to the principal by his toadies.

Recently an advisory committee was appointed by the State Commissioner of Education at the suggestion of a group of teachers known as the Teachers' Council (representative of the reactionary political interests in control of the schools), for the purpose of examining all those who had been listed as lacking in patriotic fervor by their principals, and then recommending what action the Commissioner should take. On this committee are found names such as the ever-ready Archie Stevenson, Conde Pallen, famous I. W. W. killer, Finley J. Shepherd, a representative of the Gould interests, and, in addition, no less a personage than Hugh Frayne, the Grand Vizier of the Eastern District, the personal representative of the Grand Mogul Sam.

A week ago this committee began its sessions in secret. As a result of a protest on the part of the Teachers' Union, the committee agreed to allow the teacher to be accompanied by counsel, but the press was strictly barred. Mr. Frayne blandly assured the Union that the committee intended no harm to the teacher, that it was merely attempting to provide parents and pupils or fellow-teachers of a teacher to come to the committee with any information they cared to bring.

Organized labor which has always been in the vanguard fighting for free schools, and for the freedom of teaching, is now to be the instrument of the forces of reaction if the plan of the Teachers' Council in using Mr. Frayne is allowed to go thru unchallenged by the forces of labor. The reactionary interests are quick to discern the role which the leaders of the American Federation of Labor are ready to play.

They realize that there is no more devoted servant of the capitalist class in America than the average A. F. of L. leader. They know how easy it is to cover up the most infamous capitalist crime with the mantle of Gompers. They know that the bitterest enemy of the Russian Soviet Republic is none other than the A. F. of L. machine. They know how easily the Labor leader can be "tamed" by being allowed to sit at the capitalist banquet table. And so they add the name of a Frayne to a committee made up of Stevensons and Shepherds.

For once it seems that this clever plan has miscalculated. The Central Trades and Labor Council of New York was quick to realize the false position in which the labor movement was put by Frayne's acceptance. It unanimously decided to call a special meeting of the Council for May 25, at which Frayne will be called upon to explain the reasons for his presence on this spying committee. More than one delegate will be ready to expose this treacherous foe to the best interests of the American labor movement — Hugh Frayne.

It should be noted in passing that at the recent convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Convention held in Cleveland, a resolution was passed conveying the thanks of the Union to those who had been helpful to the organization during the past year. Among those specially singled out for praise were Morris Hillquit, Samuel Gompers and Hugh Frayne.

Boost the United Front

By WILLIAM F. KRUSE

On the subject of the political united front there ha[illegible] much discussion in the ranks of the party and in the colum[illegible] "The Worker," but as to the application of this policy [illegible] industrial field there has been, there is, there can be but one [illegible]

The capitalist class is organized on every side to defe[illegible] strongly entrenched power from attack by the workers.

Standing at the head is the United States Chamber of Commerc[illegible] ordinating all anti-labor forces on every field thruout the country.

It is political, economic, social, propagandist,—it is everythin[illegible] anything the fight calls for. The various employers' associations o[illegible] industry wage their industrial battle. The various political parties and their office-holding puppets provide the anti-labor laws and court decision terrorism. The myriad Rotary, Kiwanis, Union League, Hamilton and other clubs apply the social blockade on those who lack the requisite class consciousness. The press, movie, dramatic, and other associations continually maintain a drum fire of anti-labor propaganda thru every conceivable agency. The school, the pulpit, the lecture platform, the printing press—all are marshalled against us.

Against this solid army of organization the working-class forces seem weak indeed. We have nothing to combat the nation-wide Chamber of Commerce; the A. F. of L. is but a per capita collecting, jurisdiction juggling machine with only potentialities where it should have revolutionary practice. Against the employers' associations our international unions are making the best fight possible considering the handicap of the mediaeval craft divisions that split up each industry into innumerable jealous, fighting craft unions. The employers, united under one head for each industry, have a tremendous advantage over their rebellious slaves, they can pit one group against the other and defeat all except the few great industrial organizations almost at will.

Where the industrial organizations of workers and masters are more evenly matched, as in the case of the miners, victory would always go to the workers were their class as staunch in their support as the rest of the capitalist world is behind the operators. But the workers leave the miners make their own fight, contenting themselves to cheer from the side lines. Not so with the masters. The Chamber of Commerc[illegible] newspapers, movies, courts, c[illegible] ulary,—the entire organized [illegible] ist machine is in active serv[illegible] help the operators beat the [illegible] miners.

Against the social agencies o[illegible] bourgeoisie our own social [illegible] are weak indeed and quite often [illegible] ing in class spirit. Our mea[illegible] propaganda are limited to our [illegible] number of valiant papers and [illegible] activity of our membership. Ou[illegible] tential political strength is la[illegible] in the service of the masters' pa[illegible] and even the independent pol[illegible] organizations claiming to repr[illegible] the working class are more con[illegible] ed with settling their own theor[illegible] differences than with uniting [illegible] workers for action.

Against the united front o[illegible] capitalist class a united front [illegible] bor must be created.

Against the Chamber of [illegible] merce which, octopus-like, put[illegible] its arms to drag down the wo[illegible] on every field of activity, we [illegible] create a Chamber of Labor, abl[illegible] anxious to give battle to the fo[illegible]

The Workers Party issues th[illegible] for such an organization. It [illegible] at setting up no dual agencies [illegible] proposes that this new orga[illegible] struggle be created thru the pr[illegible] local Central Labor Bodies a[illegible] co-operation with all present [illegible] ing-class organizations, indu[illegible] political, fraternal, educational [illegible] social. We are content to take [illegible] part in such a united front of [illegible] and pledge our every resource, [illegible] struggles.

The opening gun includes a[illegible] peal to every union and other [illegible] ing-class organization and to [illegible] union paper, backed up by per[illegible] solicitation by our local gr[illegible] There will be tens of thousand[illegible] letters to individuals formerly [illegible] in the revolutionary movement [illegible] ing them to resume their pla[illegible] the fight. Every member of [illegible] Workers Party is to take part i[illegible] campaign, and every friend is [illegible] to lend his co-operation.

This is the first campaign [illegible] motion by our party. Labor [illegible] in the class struggle—this is the [illegible] of the hour. The Workers [illegible] responds to the need with its [illegible] paign for the united front. [illegible] your place in that campaign.

Appeal for Unity of Revolutionary Forces in the Workers Party

The comrades of the Scandinavian Federation, in which the former sections of the Socialist Party and Socialist Labor Party have recently united, are voting on the subject of affiliation with the Workers Party of America. The Central Executive Committee has addressed the following appeal to the members of the federation:—

To The Members of the Scandinavian Federation:—

There is before your organization for decision the important question of the future affiliation of your federation. We are addressing this letter to you to show you that it is your revolutionary duty to become part of The Workers Party of America.

We are convinced that the great majority of the members of your federation are workers who respond to the inspiration of the Communist movement and are ready to do their duty as Communists.

We could not hope to prove to you that your place is within the ranks of the Workers Party if that were not the case. Believing that your organization is made up of such members we feel assured that it is only necessary to set forth the present situation to assure your taking your place in the Workers Party.

With the coming of the Revolution in Russia and the organization of the Third International there sprang into life a tremendous forward movement of the revolutionary workers. In this country that movement made itself felt in the struggle to compel the Socialist Party to adopt a revolutionary program, to take its stand with the Communist International.

The reactionary Right Wing leaders preferred to destroy the Socialist Party rather than have its program and tactics changed to meet the demands of the revolutionary membership. They expelled tens of thousands of members. Other tens of thousands left the party voluntarily. Differences arose between the groups which were expelled and which left the Socialist Party. No sooner were they organized than the iron fist of the capitalists struck down their organization, bringing greater disintegration and division.

It is not necessary to review the history of the last two or three years in detail. You know that history as we do. Our message to you is not about the divisions of those years but to give you the inspiring message that there has come a new growth, a new solidarity of the revolutionary elements. That solidarity and growth is expressing itself in the Workers Party of America.

The time for division, for separate organization, is over. Just as it is the task of the Communists to build up a united front of the workers, so it is also our task to build up a united organization of those class-conscious disciplined workers who must lead the way in the struggle of the whole working class.

We must unite in one powerful centralized, disciplined organization the understanding, class-conscious, fearless men and women who are the advance guard in the workers' struggle. That is the task which the Workers Party was organized to achieve, and the progress of the last four months shows that it is achieving that goal. It has united nearly a score of groups into one strong organization.

It is only after we have built a strong, centralized, disciplined party that we can hope to assume the place of leadership in the revolutionary struggles of the workers. Your federation standing alone can no doubt do some work among the Scandinavian workers. But how can it play an effective part in the revolutionary struggle in this country if it is not bound together with other workers and does not have a program of action for the greater struggle?

The Workers Party of America offers you a program which will not only help you build your own organization, but a program that will be a guide in the greater revolutionary struggle. In becoming a part of the Workers Party you will be in a position to act together with the whole advance guard of the revolutionary movement in this country. You will have the guidance of the party in your work, you will have the inspiration of being part of an organization actually engaged in the daily fights of the class struggle.

Your duty, comrades, is in the ranks of the Workers Party of America. There you will be able to build a stronger organization among the Scandianvian workers in this country. There you will be able to perform your revolutionary duty to the working class.

Let every member vote for affiliation with the Workers Party. We do not want to split your organization. We want you to take your stand as a body in the ranks of our organization.

Let us go forward with the greater strength that will come to both you and us through your affiliation with our party. Let us build together the united, powerful, centralized, disciplined party that will lead the workers of this country to victory—the Workers Party of America.

Yours with fraternal greetings,
Central Executive Committee
Workers Party of America.
C. E. Ruthenberg,
Executive Secretary.

Suppress Soviet Declaration!

A splendid review of the recent relations between Russia and other countries was presented in the form of a memorandum to the members of the Genoa Conference at the opening of the Conference over a month ago.

The memorandum, which has now reached this country in printed form, has been withheld by the press from the eyes of the general public, and is at last given publicity in the June 1 issue of "Soviet Russia."

This sober but uncompromising document passes in review the claims of foreign countries and their citizens to be indemnified for losses owing to the Russian Revolution, and, after showing these claims to be morally without foundation, admits the expediency of granting them in view of the pertinacity and obstinacy of the foreign capitalist claimants.

But Soviet Russia also has claims—the memorandum proceeds to state—which must be recognized by foreign powers.

These are particularly the losses inflicted on the national and private wealth of Russia by intervention and blockade, for which almost all the powers of the so-called civilized world are responsible.

The whole document presents in fuller and more readable form the material later formulated in the final memorandum of Tchitcherin to the delegates at the conference, which was printed in the American press.

Among other hitherto unpublished matter in the June 1st SOVIET RUSSIA is a correspondence between Captain Hibben, Secretary of the American Section of the Russian Red Cross, and Mr. Walter Lippman, of the New York World, in which Captain Hibben points out that the Russian famine, in spite of Hoover's and Lippman's statements to the contrary, still continues to be a condition requiring every assistance that can be given from abroad.

The same issue contains a tabulated account of the orders placed by the Soviet Government, thru the Russian Railway Commission up to January 1, for locomotives, cars, railway equipment, etc., which amounted to about $150,000,000.

SEATTLE.—The local council has placed its approval on a proposal by Australian labor that various working-class bodies of the Pacific hold a conference, preferably in Hawaii.

MR. HILLQUIT AND THE UNITED FRONT

EDITOR, THE WORKER.—The other day Mr. Hillquit rid himself of an article on the United Front. Three general ideas prevailed in the article. First: The Communist International wants to reconstruct the unity which it had destroyed so mischievously during the past three years. Second: A United Front with the weak Communist groups is undesirable for the Socialist Party. Third: What the Socialist Party needs is closer contact with labor.

Now, Mr. Hillquit, we want to promote your peace of mind and at the same time give you a piece of our mind; so please follow us thru this little article.

Please read the theses of the Communist International on the United Front carefully. It says clearly, explicitly and without room for misunderstanding: a United Front of Labor. Now, since your united front with the Chicago Police in 1919, engineered by your Messrs. Germer and Gerber; since your united front with the Detroit courts, engineered by your Mr. Stedman; since your united front with the most democratic assembly in Albany against the Workers' Republic of Russia, engineered by yourself, Mr. Hillquit, who in all the world, outside of yourself, would consider the Socialist Party when a United Front of Labor is under consideration? No, Mr. Hillquit, you are not meant, indeed not. Tho a United Front of Labor will undoubtedly include workers that are still at the present moment misled by your glib tongue. But even then it will not be a United Front with you and your Party, but against you, Mr Hillquit.

Just one sentence about your remark regarding the weakness of the friends of the Communist International in the United States as against your supposed strength. You, Mr. Hillquit, must have worked up this illusion while sitting in the Cleveland convention of your Party a few weeks ago. Instead of seeing your 22 delegates your conscience pictured to you the 96 delegates you had thrown out by the Chicago police at the 1919 convention. We forgive you for this mixing up history a bit. We can be at least as magnanimous as the moon when the poodle barks at him.

But now to number three. You want to establish contact with Labor. But, Mr. Hillquit, are you not a gentleman of the profession of law? You ought to know, if nobody else does, that there are two parties necessary for a contract of marriage, a party of the first part as well as a party of the second part. Barkis must be willin', Mr. Hillquit. Now Barkis-Labor is not willin.' He does not want to marry a kept woman. Of course you had that lady, your Socialist Party, always fixed up as a pure virgin with joy promising forms. But you were not careful enough.

We knew that it was a fake. But the masses did not. And in one unguarded moment, it was in Albany, you unhappily arranged a public undressing of the lady. And then the knowledge became public property. The swelling bosom turned out to be scraps of paper on which you, Mr. Hillquit, had written a program. The anti-capitalist teeth dropped out and turned out to be a make-believe device.

Barkis-Labor had a master, Gompers & Co. That master always hated your little lady, the S. P. But since Albany, since everybody with eyes could see that the supposed beautiful virgin is an ugly prostitute that keeps up appearance only thru tricks of the trade, he held out little inducements to her. And true to her trade, she accepted them and gives in return what ladies of her kind have to offer. Now, Mr. Hillquit, you may think that that will bring you nearer to the bridegroom, nearer to labor. But you are mistaken. Your little lady will not marry Labor. She will end like most of her kind: kicked by those that formerly bought her body, hated by those she betrayed, and looked upon with contempt by the rest of the world.

Once you had your little lady, the Socialist Party, undress herself in public. There were some that did not look. They are still deceived by her forms and by the glib tongue of her guardian, yourself, Mr. Hillquit. But a United Front of Labor will develop and in her attempt to show off before the giant, your little lady, the S. P. will be again and again led into situations like that in Albany. And it will again and again drop her mask of virginal beauty and will show herself in the ugly nakedness of a prostitute of capitalism, until all workers are out of danger of falling in love with that kept creature.—J. A. Marshall.

Trade Union Educational League Issues Call for Chicago Conference in August

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Every thinking worker in this country will be interested in the Call just issued for the National Conference of the Trade Union Educational League to be held in Chicago August 26-27. Carrying out the spirit of the Call, the radical and militant workers should everywhere organize and be represented at this Conference. The Call, signed by Secretary-Treasurer William Z. Foster, is as follows:

Militants! At last the time has come for us to draw up our programs and to organize our forces thruout the labor movement. The Trade Union Educational League is about to hold its first National Conference. The meeting will take place in Chicago on August 26th and 27th. Militant union workers from every locality and industry are herewith cordially invited to attend.

The labor movement is now passing thru the most serious crisis in its entire history. With unexampled aggressiveness the employers are smashing one section of it after another. Orthodox trade union methods and tactics are unavailing to stop this "open shop" drive. Drastic new measures will have to be applied, or the labor movement will be annihilated and the working class left helpless in the grip of the exploiters.

The multitudes of craft unions must be amalgamated into a series of industrial unions. The prevailing craft form of unionism is out-of-date and obsolete. It no longer conforms to industrial conditions. It prevents real solidarity and it must give way to a type of organization that will include all the workers in a given industry.

Only the industrial form of organization can cope with the powerful employers. Another vitally necessary step is the discarding of the existing trade-union philosophy.

At present our labor unions are in the anomolous position of having working-class bodies and capitalist minds. They are in fundamental contradiction with themselves. They have proletarian interests and instincts, but their petty-bourgeois point of view neutralizes them.

Hence their every effort is paralyzed by uncertainty, timidity, and weakness. And so it must remain until they finally come to realize that there is no hope for them except in the abolition of capitalism and the establishment of a workers' republic. Then, and then only, with a revolutionary goal before them, will the trade unions gain the clearness of aim and the militancy of spirit indispensable to success in the modern class struggle.

In the present crisis the old officialdom stand in helpless consternation. They are at their wits' ends. Again and again they apply the customary trade-union methods, only to be overwhelmed by fresh disasters.

But still they do not change these methods. Disregarding the patent fact that employers have enormously increased their strength in recent years by consolidating their organizations, amassing vast riches, and becoming intensely class conscious, the trade-union leaders cling desperately to their own antiquated system.

They are constitutionally opposed to all real organization betterment and habitually fight it to a standstill. Intellectually they are frozen over solid. There is hardly a twig of progress showing above the cold and lifeless surface of their collective mind.

But if the static trade-union officials fail to perceive the necessities of the movement, the dynamic rank and file will and must seize the initiative itself. Hence, the National Conference of the Trade Union Educational League. This representative gathering of rank and file workers will not only point out the needs of organized Labor, but will also outline a campaign of education to satisfy these needs by revamping the prevailing philosophy, amalgamating the unions and giving them new leadership.

The Trade Union Educational League is opposed on principle to dual unionism. It is not a labor union itself, nor does it propose to become one. It is solely an educational body. It aims, not to split the mass organizations, but to unite and strengthen them in every possible way.

The proposed conference will not be held for the purpose of furthering secession movements, but to work out an organized, intensive campaign of constructive, militant education in all the industries.

Representation will be based upon the local general groups of the T. U. E. L., each of which shall be entitled to six delegates—if there is no such group in your town, organize one at once so that you may be represented.

Trade unions and central bodies may send only fraternal delegates. Each participating organization shall take care of the expenses of its delegates.

Do you believe that Organized Labor should have a real rebel spirit? Do you believe that the craft unions should be amalgamated into industrial unions? Do you believe that the trade union movement should have new and militant leadership? If so, come to the National Conference of the Trade Union Educational League. It will be one of the most important gatherings in the history of the American labor movement.

Wm. Z. Foster, Sec'y-Treas.

Publish First Volume of Workers Party Library

"Dictatorship vs. Democracy," by Leon Trotzky, which has appeared in English only in Great Britain, (under the title of "Defense of Terrorism), will constitute the first volume of a series of cloth and paper bound volumes which the Workers Party will issue under the general name of "Workers Party Library." This volume is now being set by the printer and it is planned to have it ready for delivery June 20th.

The "Library" will be a series of volumes hitherto not published in America and also of works which will be written in the future. The series will be uniform in size and appearance thus adding to its attractiveness for book lovers.

The binding in paper will be strong and the volumes thread stitched and durable thruout. The cloth bound editions will be of the highest character in both appearance and quality. The titles will be stamped in gold leaf on a dark red background.

In a letter sent out by the National Office, all Party workers are requested to assist the publication of this Party Library by securing cash advance sales. Generous reductions are being given the Party units on such sales thus turning into their hands immediately a percentage of profits on all sales and also aiding in the financing of the local work.

"Dictatorship vs. Democracy" will sell at 50c. in paper, and $1.00 in cloth binding. Write the National Office, Workers Party of America, Room 405, 799 Broadway, New York City, for prices on quantity orders.

Local Greater New York Is Preparing for Campaign

Local Greater New York, Workers Party, this year will place a state and local ticket in the field.

At the last City Central Committee meeting the Local adopted the memorandum of the Executive Secretary on the Coming Elections in which he pointed out that with the exception of the Workers League, the Communist movement in America has not engaged in elections. In the coming elections the Workers Party will appear before the masses and appeal for support against the capitalist and socialist reform parties.

Nominations of candidates are to be made at county delegated conventions, subject to the approval of the City Central Committee.

Instructions to start the work will be issued by the Local Office very shortly. Arrangements will be made regarding the raising of funds and the issuing of literature during the campaign. All branches must place themselves in readiness for this intensive period of propaganda and organization.

Will you be there June 11?

Practically all branches reported good activity. The Greek branch, for instance, altho very small in membership, built up a circulation of 400 subscriptions in San Francisco alone for the Greek W. P. organ, "Voice of the Worker", besides handling a weekly bundle of 50 thru the branch.

The Finnish Branch of Berkeley maintains a fine headquarters on which the rent alone comes to $350 per month. It has a membership of 350 and a Y. W. L. of 70 members. Three study classes under trained directors were specially mentioned.

Los Angeles reported the sale of 150 copies weekly of "The Worker". Resolutions affirming adherence to the united front policy on the industrial field, on behalf of the release of Tom Mooney, and urging support of the local labor organ, "Rank and File" were adopted.

The Literary Digest gives a full page to the Foster-Gompers controversy showing that the capitalist press is 100 per cent. on the side of the Anti-Russian, Bolshevik-hating president of the American Federation of Labor. That ought to give the workers a sure tip as to just where they ought to stand.

The Office Boys at Washington

The Harding-Hughes-Hoover outfit in Washington has refused to sanction trade relations, with or give recognition to the Russian Soviet Republic.

But the Standard Oil Interests leased an entire hotel in Genoa during the sessions of the Economic Conference, and its big game is to capture valuable oil concessions in Southern Russia.

And J. Pierpont Morgan, head of the House of Morgan, sails for Europe to make new loans to Germany and Austria. In the language of the London Nation:

"If political America holds aloof from Europe, financial America is coming in with the intervention of J. P. Morgan and Co. So the German loan should be arranged. There is a second and subordinate transaction—a loan of 8,000,000 pounds sterling ($40,000,000) to Austria, in which both the Morgans and the Bank of England are concerned."

So why should the Harding-Hughes-Hoover administration at Washington butt in as long as the House of Morgan is finding Europe a land of milk and honey for its big deals?

In the language of Judge Elbert H. Gary, of the Steel Trust, telling the newspapermen what happened at Harding's banquet to the steel czars last Saturday:

"The President stated that he did not desire to interfere with the natural and legitimate progress of business."

Capitalism sure has a good bunch of office boys at Washington. They do not even wish to pry into the affairs of their bosses, an investigating instinct every office boy is supposed to possess. They are all content to wait and get their orders.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of New York City, threatens to move an army of preachers and rabbis into West Virginia to combat the revival forces of "Billy" Sunday. We await the conflict.

Dragging Labor in the Mire

One of the finest examples of the use of labor politicians to give a "labor" color to vicious and reactionary instruments of the capitalist class is the appointment of Hugh Frayne, New York state organizer for the American Federation of Labor, to the inquisitorial body which is prying into the opinions of New York teachers.

The head of this body, a vestigial remain of the Middle Ages, is one Archibald E. Stevenson, former counsel of the Lusk committee, a malevolent, rat-like personage, whose cess-pool mind has become a standard by which educators in the New York schools are judged; other members are Miss Olivia Leventritt, daughter of an ex-justice, and Conde Pallen, editor of the Catholic Encyclopedia, a gentleman who devotedly upholds the doctrine of his church that faith and not knowledge is the great force for the good of the world and the glory of God.

Associating with this snooping and sniffling crew is Hugh Frayne "representing labor." It is enough to turn the stomach of a jackal. But it is a condition that will continue to exist until labor ceases to be gratified by this kind of recognition.

As for the teachers; if there is an ounce of self-respect left among them, they will tell this self-constituted band of moral guardians to go to hell—individually and collectively.

One Night Sam Dreamed He Was a King

Gregory Semenov, the Cossack butcher, slayer of American soldiers in Siberia, has been released with the apologies of the appellate division of the New York Supreme Court. But Sacco and Vanzetti, working men, still face death at the hands of the ruling class.

End the War on the Children

Washington, the capital city of the nation, has a deaf ear these days, as always, to the bitter cry of the children.

The United States Supreme Court, presided over by that obese symbol of capitalism, "Taft the Fat," has handed down another brutal decision rejecting attempts to combat child slavery in the factories and mills, especially of "The Solid South."

And Warren Gamaliel Harding, president by gift of the capitalist dictatorship that rules the land, has turned away without seeing, for the 9th time, the sons and daughters of political prisoners now held in the steel cages of American bastilles.

The supreme court decision declares that congress has no power to levy prohibitory taxes on child-made goods intended for inter-state shipment. This would be a blow at state's rights, and what rights have children compared to the sacred privileges that must be accorded to the cotton mill owners of Georgia and the Carolinas?

Congress does have the right to levy tariffs against goods imported into this country, but that is to help the steel trust, the coal trust, and the other great industrial combines boost prices to the consumers in this country and thus increase their own winnings.

Congress does impose suppressive taxation on oleomargarine and other substitutes but that is to benefit butter trust profits.

But children are not to be put on the same high level as those goods that bring in a golden harvest to respectable profiteers.

It is unconstitutional to protect the tender bodies and undeveloped minds of children from the rapacious greed of soulless money bandits.

But on the same day Taft's supreme court handed down a decision declaring unconstitutional 80-cent gas rate legislation of the New York state assembly.

The protection that is denied the children is given the gas barons, or any other gang of highwaymen that can rob enough to be "respectable."

That is the way of capitalism. Capitalism allows millions of children to starve in Soviet Russia. Capitalism plunges all Europe into the abyss of war and destruction. Capitalism refuses to listen to the cries of the children in the resulting European and world-wide chaos. Millions of children in these United States are hungry today. They go hungry to school. They are driven hungry into the factories, there to toil for a mere pittance, scabbing upon their fathers and mothers.

And when their fathers protest, when their fathers raise their voices against this system, they are thrown into prison. And when the children raise their voices against that imprisonment they are driven off the White House lawn at Washington, and when they follow Harding to church they are refused admittance.

It is a vicious circle. Some would end the war on the children by constitutional amendments, the only resort now open, it is claimed.

But it is easy to declare even the Constitution unconstitutional when the class war is raging.

Let the workers realize that the whole structure of government is modelled and perfected to serve the interests of private property and to insure increased profits for the property owners.

The workers must destroy this brutalizing, degrading system, that we call capitalism, and rear in its place the rule of the workers that will end the war on the children, that will create a social system that will give first place to the children, who will develop a real civilization under the enlightened order of Communism.

Samuel Untermyer, millionaire lawyer, is scolding overtime because Attorney General Daugherty at Washington hears the voice of his master and refuses to allow the department of justice to proceed against "the interests," especially the General Electric Company, controlled by J. P. Morgan & Co. And he wonders why the people don't get excited and boom him for president in 1924. He evidently forgets that everybody was fed up on "Teddy" Roosevelt's fake trust-busting. Untermyer's return performance doesn't take. The masses are beginning to think deeper.

The kept press in Chicago blamed organized labor for a fire in a 77-apartment house. But investigation proved that the blaze originated in a bonfire started by some boys that got beyond their control. The same kept press reported a woman as stating she had heard a man in the neighborhood declaring, "To Hell with the Landis Award." When questioned she claims she had made no such statement. Thus are the columns of the kept press filled and the propaganda against labor spread.

Graft and misuse of funds so prevalent during the war in Washington has permeated even to the aristocratic Army and Navy Club with the result that $3,000,000 raised for the purposes of erecting a memorial has disappeared. Any attempt to investigate is attacked as a "Bolshevik Plot." Secretary of War Weeks and Secretary of the Navy Denby will no doubt call in "Bill" Burns to uncover this latest "red conspiracy."

The Schlesinger administration in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union has received an endorsement of its anti-amalgamation policies from the "Weekly News Letter," official organ of Gompers' administration in the American Federation of Labor. Anything to keep the workers divided in the needle industry, is the Schlesinger-Gompers' policy.

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, is bold enough to declare that the United States should wait in its aid to Russia until "the Bolshevik government is dead and buried." We fear the Doctor has a long wait coming, and that he will pass away without having his wish satisfied. Sorry the Bolsheviks can't accomodate him.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD REA THIS COPY OF THE WORKE KEEP IT IN CIRCULATIO

Ruthenberg, Workers Party Secretary, Extends Greetings to Convention of Youth

C. E. Ruthenberg, executive secretary of the Workers Party, in addressing the first national convention of the Young Workers League, spoke as follows:

To extend greetings to this gathering of youth is to extend greetings to those who will complete the work of the revolutionary movement that is now under way.

We have learned from our experience of the last four or five years that the revolution of which we have been talking, which we have been working for and which has been the end and object of our movement may be achieved so far as the conquest of political power is concerned, by an action not extending over a long period of time.

But that first act of a revolution—the seizure of political power—is only the beginning of the work of the revolutionary proletariat.

We have found from the experience of our Russian comrades that when we have won that first victory then the great task is still before us.

Then the task still remains of taking the capitalist structure—that system which we are in existence to destroy and rebuilding it on the plan of Communism.

That task must be done and that task requires greater discipline and greater ability, requires greater effort than even the task of winning the revolutionary struggle, and among those of you who sit here today in this convention I am sure there are the men and women who, in the future, will be faced by that task of building a Communist structure out of the debris of capitalism. The work which you undertake here today in this Convention is part of that work which will bring to you the discipline, ability, skill, to undertake the future task, the heavy burden that will fall upon you.

Those of us who today are bearing the greater part of the burden of this struggle, who are in the movement that is fighting on the revolutionary field, may see the time when we in this country will be able to achieve the first victory of the revolution—the establishment of the Soviet State—but the task that will go on for years after—the task of bringing into existence that society which is our aim and ideal, the society in which the services of men and women will have a social use, that is your task. That is the task for which you are to gain the training in the work which begins in this convention in which the Young Workers' League is to be established.

I can only urge you with all my heart that in these deliberations you keep in mind not only the fact that you are training yourselves, but that thru the discipline, the ability to organize, the ability to do constructive work, that you gain here, you are training yourselves for the greatest task that mankind has ever faced—to build a Communist structure and to give all the people of the earth the opportunity to not only secure the necessities of life not only food, clothing and homes to live in, but also to have the opportunity for education, the opportunity for recreation, the opportunity to enjoy the beautiful things of life—not a society in which a few take the heritage of the ages as their own, but a society in which all will enjoy what the genius of the human race has achieved.

Now, comrades, in regard to the immediate problem which you are facing as to the affiliation of your organization, as to how you shall conduct your immediate work to build up your organization, to bring more young workers to your ranks, to train more young workers for the revolutionary struggle and the work of rebuilding society. In order to get clear in mind what we face in that respect, it is necessary for us to review briefly the history of the last few years. You know that in this country, as well as elsewhere in the world, the workers' movement responded to the revolutionary impulse of the Russian Revolution. You know that as a result of that inspiration there surged up within the then existing Socialist Party that great movement embracing the overwhelming majority of the membership of the organization to take power out of the hands of the right wing elements and re-build the organization upon a revolutionary Communist program.

You know the history of the struggle—how the right wing element tried to obstruct our work. You know that when the Communist Parties came into existence, they met the full force of the attack of the capitalist class and their existence as open organizations, leading the working class, was destroyed by that attack. What was the experience of the few years that followed? We found in this country that the Communist movement did not grow, did not secure power, did not take the leadership of the workers' struggle because there was no movement that could openly appeal to the workers of this country and furnish the program and the leadership that would build a strong working class movement in this country. How can we expect that the mass of the workers, still supporting in many cases the old political parties, still accepting the bourgeois conceptions of society, of the government of the United States, how can we expect that this working class will come under the sway of the leadership of an organization which cannot openly come forth and appeal to the workers and rally them around the standard of Communism?

And comrades, that this cannot be done is realized not only by the workers in this country who responded to the inspiration of the Communist International, but it was the Third Congress of the International which told us that in every country in the world there must be an open party which shall take up the struggles of the workers and it is in response to that alone that there has come into existence the Workers Party of America. (Applause.)

You have been told from the platform today (by a fraternal delegate representing an adult organization) that there is a division in the ranks of the Communists, of the United States. I say to you that there is no division among those who accept the leadership of the Communist International. (Prolonged Applause.)

The Workers Party accepts that leadership. The Workers Party is carrying out a program in harmony with that leadership. The Workers Party is in existence because we cannot build the revolutionary movement in the United States without an organization that can go before the workers of this country with its program and appear before the workers of this country with those men who stand in responsible positions and fight for that program.

The Workers Party has rallied to its support, is rebuilding, reorganizing those revolutionary forces which left the Socialist Party because of their response to the Russian Revolution and the Communist International. The Workers Party is combining these forces, these organizations, which were separated from each other by the iron fist of capitalism levelled at the Communist Parties in this country. The Workers Party is building a new and unified organization having but one purpose, and that is to fight the revolutionary struggle, to fight the struggle to establish a Soviet Republic in the United States and its tactics and purpose are those of the Communist International. (Applause.)

Let us see how your organization stands in relation to this organization. How can you best make progress—as a body standing alone, depending upon your own resources, depending upon your own program, or as an organization that is welded together as part of the greater movement which responds to the leadership of the Communist International? Standing alone as an independent organization, you might make progress, you will make some progress. You can build your organization to some extent—but how much stronger you will be—how much greater will be the results of your efforts, if you are part of the greater organization of the movement that throws itself into the class struggle and puts itself in the leadership of the workers of this country.

The Workers Party is now but a few months old, but already there is in preparation, there is mapped out, that campaign which will put the Workers' Party before the working class of this country as the only organization that in the present crisis in the struggle between the workers and the capitalists, comes to the working class with a program to unify, to strengthen, to unite the whole working class in this struggle against capitalism. Yes, we stand for a united front. We stand for a campaign to bring together the whole working class in this country to resist the capitalist offensive, but that does not mean that we lose our identity, that we lose the organizational independence of our organization—the Workers Party.

The Workers Party has a distinct purpose to serve, has a duty to perform and that is to bring into its fold as members of the organization, those men and women of the working class who can be depended upon, those understanding, class-conscious workers, welded together in an organization that will furnish the leadership, that will furnish the program, that will stand in the forefront of the struggle, marching at the head of the batallions of the working class—forward, forward, until the victory is won. And I invite you, this Convention, to affiliate with that organization. To become part of that organization, recruiting for it the youth of this country, making the beginning in training them to become part of the class-conscious army that leads the struggle of the working cla As such an organization, as part such a party, gaining all that c come to you from its inspiratio giving to your assistance the forc which you can use to build up yo organization, you will be a hundr times as strong as you could possib be as an independent organization.

And, comrades, let us now at th time begin forgetting division, se aration, independence. Those not the words of revolutionists, th are not the words of people who c build a powerful working class o ganization. The message that mu come to the workers everywhere —unity.

Build your strength in one pow ful whole. Let us build that drivi force, that engine which may be t power at the head in the revolutio ary struggle in this country, a made up of the leaders of the cla struggle, a rank and file intellige educated, class-conscious, a You Workers League made up of the eli of the working class youth in th country, marching together should to shoulder—youth and those wh now stand in the ranks of the Par —fighting together.

That is the way to victory, that the way to gain strength, that is t way to win that victory which w will win in spite of all the forces, i spite of all the strength and in spit of prisons and all those powers whic capitalism now holds—that victor will be ours which will bring th Soviet Republic of the United States

Unity of the youth and those wh are in the forefront in the struggle that is the way to victory. (Prolonged applause followed by thre cheers for the Workers Party.)

Coal Miners Great Victory!

"Not Guilty!" Treason Trial Verdict Setback for Coal Barons

"Hopes" for Convention of A. F. of L.

By PATRICK MONAHAN

The coming convention of the American Federation of Labor, Cincinnati, June 12, is of tremendous importance to the workers of America, not because of what it will accomplish but because of what it will fail to accomplish.

The vital issues concerning the future of the workers of America will come before that convention and be steam-rolled and railroaded as only the "Old Guard" can do.

In order to understand the workings of the A. F. of L. convention, one must keep in mind its personnel. The convention opens in Cincinnati, formerly a wet town, at present [illegible] interest to a large proportion of the delegates.

Sam's "Eyes" and "Ears"

President Gompers will, as usual, be chairman of the convention. He will sit, as for years the writer has watched him sit, like an old owl, whose senses are failing—eyesight and hearing especially. On each side of him sit his "eyes" and "ears."

Miss LeGard, his private secretary, who knows most of the delegates by sight, sits on one side, and William C. Roberts, one of his pussyfooters-in-chief, on the other.

William C. Roberts was, for many years, a newspaper reporter in the City of Chicago in the employ of William Randolph Hearst, the same Hearst whom Sam charges as wanting to unseat him as President of the American Federation of Labor.

Should a delegate more than fifty feet from President Gompers rise and desire the floor, Miss LeGard or "Billy" Roberts will lean over and whisper in Sam's ear the name of the delegate and the organization he represents, and then Sam in a voice and manner resembling an old Oriental potentate, will say, Delegate "So-and-so" has the floor.

On issues of vital importance when various delegates are struggling for the floor, on many occasions the "eyes" and "ears" do not see or hear those delegates whose views are known to incline to the progressive side.

Power of "Grand Dukes"

The power in the convention of the American Federation of Labor is concentrated almost solely in the hands of the General Presidents (the grand dukes) of the various International Unions.

The vital issues coming before the convention are decided by a vote. The Internationals usually cast their ballot for the entire delegation thru the General President. Should any individual delegate dare to break this precedent, it would be very unfortunate for him.

The coming A. F. of L. convention occurs at a time when the workers of America ought to be piling into the unions, head over heels, for self-protection.

One of the vital issues that will no doubt be smothered, is the tremendous loss in membership of all the International Unions, with probably the one exception of the Coal Miners who are at present in a nation-wide strike which rallies their membership to the standard. This loss of membership is the most ghastly that has ever confronted the

Tchitcherin Sends Message to America thru "The Worker"

THE WORKER takes exceeding pleasure this week in presenting to its readers, and thru them to the workers of the United States, a message from George Tchitcherin, commissar for foreign affairs of the Russian Soviet Republic; head of the Soviet Delegation at the Genoa Economic Conference. This statement was secured by our representative at Genoa, Comrade Juliet Stuart Poynts, with Comrade Tchitcherin's signature attached as reproduced below. The message is as follows:

Special Message from Tchitcherin to The Worker (original signature)

Whatever may be the outcome of the Genoa Conference, it has accomplished a great deal in bringing together certain states that have been separated. It has shown to the western world that the workers and peasants of Russia have created a mighty state which rests upon another basis than the other states. It has its distinct and independent international policy which is based upon the idea of peaceful, productive, common work of all peoples, upon the right of every people to dispose of its own fate and upon equal rights for all peoples. The Conference will help to make known to the other peoples that Soviet Russia is bringing positive, constructive aims in its political relations with the world. Russia itself will maintain inviolate the principles of her internal life. Her economic system is based upon the principle of national ownership and upon this principle no bargaining is possible.

As The Worker Sees It

If we understand Sam Untermyer correctly, he now thinks the capitalist courts are almost as much of a menace as the Jewish Bakers' Union.

Count and Countess Zichy announce that they are going to work because they need money. Why not sell the limerick rights to the only name that rhymes with Vichy?

If the porch-climbing leadership in the labor movement ever fights the boss as hard as they now fight the Volstead act, "the Red Dawn" as Jack Carney calls it, will begin to impinge upon our vision.

White Hungary is getting ready to select a national assembly. The standing army and the police are being reinforced. It is a cinch that any daring Communist seeking to cast a ballot will not succeed in the attempt.

Hoover has laid down a fair price for coal at the mines in West Virginia.—$3.50 per ton.

For digging this coal the miners are paid the enormous sum of 20 cents per ton. Out of this they must pay for tools and powder. Thus is the dear public protected.

The record of the present federal administration will be the subject of criticism in the coming report of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, according to a statement recently issued by President Gompers.

The criticism, however, will be of a friendly nature; otherwise some radical might think Sam was earnest.

Do You Know What United Front Can Do?

By WILLIAM F. KRUSE

There is a disposition in some quarters to look upon the "United Front" program of the Workers Party as a mere tactical maneouver to gain access to otherwise hostile labor elements.

This charge is most persistently raised by those who themselves have been hanging on the fringe of the labor movement for decades and whose every move was dictated by considerations of their own position and prestige.

The call for the United Front of Labor is not a gesture. It is a program of action that must and will be realized. [illegible]

The Workers Party pledges its whole resources to this campaign not because it seeks partisan advantage by so doing but because it has no aims and aspirations separate and apart from those of the working class itself.

We push this particular slogan to the fore at this time because it alone contains any hope of successful working class resistance to the enemy.

Were the United Front in existence now the position of the workers in their present struggles would be much stronger.

They would not now have their backs to the wall; they would not be fighting for their very lives, they would be attacking the master class and wresting from them the control of the means of production.

In the case of the striking West Virginia miners, for instance, we see an unanswerable argument for the United Front of Labor.

Situation in West Virginia

The strike has been on for over a year, the men, with almost superhuman endurance have literally fought for the lives of their loved ones against all the massed power of the capitalist class, as expressed in terms of militia, soldiery and other hired gunmen, controlled-courts, newspapers, stores, churches and MONEY.

As soon as the men quit work they found themselves cut off from food, clothing, shelter,—had it been possible they would have been cut off from breathing air.

Even now they are starving, they appeal to us for food for their families, and we are responding to the appeal.

Yet these men are comparatively well organized. The United Mine Workers is one of the strongest industrial units of the working class movement. The miners' wants are simple, their habits gregarious, they have the advantage of a certain job consciousness and solidarity found in few other industries. Yet they must appeal for help.

How came this appeal to the notice of the workers of New York? Did it come from the national organization of the U. M. W.? Did it come from local central labor bodies? It did not.

How Miners' Appeal Came

A few liberal women became interested in the appeal of a group of hard-working local officers of the union. They organized relief activity among their friends in Baltimore, doing excellent work but forced by

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

Acquitting William Blizzard of the charge of treason growing out of the march of the coal miners on Logan county, a year ago, a farmer jury in Charles Town, West Virginia, dealt the union smashing campaign the severest blow it has yet received.

Had Blizzard been convicted, the United Mine Workers would have been declared a treasonable organization in West Virginia; its locals and publications would have been suppressed with the full power of the state and the miners left to the tender mercies of Don Chafin and his army of thugs paid by the coal operators' association.

Doubtless an epidemic of prosecutions for treason would have developed in every industrial center following the precedent the coal barons hoped to establish in West Virginia.

Without fully understanding the importance of the decision they were called upon to make a farmer jury of Charles Town, Jefferson County, after listening for more than five weeks to the scores of witnesses brought in by the coal operators and to the arguments of the best legal talent the mine owners could procure, declared Blizzard, president of Sub-District No. 2, District 17, of the United Mine Workers of America, not guilty after considering the testimony for six and one-half hours.

The first ballot stood ten to two for acquittal and the second was eleven to one. In some mysterious manner the news got abroad and Charles Town prepared to give Blizzard an ovation when the decision was finally rendered. To [illegible] who predicted a hung jury old-timers had but one reply: "He'd better come around with the rest of the boys or get ready to move."

Sentiment was about ninety per cent in favor of the defendants, and it had become a matter of local pride to prove to the miners that in at least one county of the state the coal operators could put nothing over.

Intense Interest

The courtroom was jammed to suffocation by residents who had been there since the court went into session at nine thirty in the morning; when the announcement was made that the jury had agreed the buzz of conversation ceased; it seemed that every one stopped breathing as the stereotyped question: "Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon a verdict?" was put to the twelve tired men. The foreman answered in the affirmative and then read the verdict which they had couched in the language used in civil cases: "We find for the defendant." Judge Ward had cautioned the crowd to make no demonstration until court had adjourned, and the crowd waited impatiently while the change was made in the verdict to conform to criminal procedure. All restraint was thrown to the winds.

A line formed to take hands with Blizzard and his young wife. Then he was picked up and carried to the street on the shoulders of young fellows of his own age—ex-service men, members of the American legion. The legion headquarters was unlocked and out came the fife and drums belonging to the post, a parade formed and the whole town swept in behind the band and Blizzard,—whose fight they did not understand, but whose courage they admired and who symbolised for them the struggle that they sympathised with, but whose significance they did not fully grasp.

That is probably how most big things are done—without a full appreciation of the danger or the importance of what is happening.

Blow to Labor's Enemies

Perhaps the most important decision rendered by a jury in the long record of the use of the machinery of the law to cripple and hamper labor organizations, it has checked the open shop offensive in the coal regions and has proved that where juries cannot be actually bought outright and judges be handpicked for the purpose; where some idea of what an idustrial hell is where the employers rule supreme can be given to farmers and farmer communities, the assembling of armed workers for the purpose of correcting infamous

New York Must Hear West Virginia Coal Miners' "Bread" Cry

"We are again clear out of relief for the strikers and their dependants, and I don't know where to turn."

That is the message that comes out of the heart of the miners' strike in West Virginia to Lawrence Dwyer, international executive board member of the United Mine Workers for West Virginia, who is heading the Relief Committee for the West Virginia Miners now working in New York and vicinity.

The message has been sent by John Gatherum, Secretary, District No. 29, from the center of the greatest suffering among the miners. Gatherum writes as follows:

Miners Lose Homes

"I have just had a visit from a man at Bellwood. These men have not worked since last July and are in pretty bad condition. We have been unable to send the people on Meadow Creek anything for over three weeks. Therefore, if you can possibly raise anything please let me know at once.

"I have spent all that has been received, even in advance of the receipt of the checks sent to us from New York. The necessity is so great that I cannot help it.

"Evictions are still the order of the day. It is sure that if the mine owners have their way in this struggle, that the very best miners in the field will be forced to leave it. Still, I have no idea that this will happen, as I find the men are stiffening their lines instead of breaking, and the men the companies are bringing in are doing so little work that it is a mystery to me that the mine owners have not already notified us of a willingness to meet us in conference."

International Board Member Dwyer has also received a letter from a coal miner evicted from his home on company property, it being charged that he is in the "taxicab business," since he drove some women to a miners' mass meeting.

Here is one of the many pathetic letters that Dwyer receives daily from some coal miners:

"I want you to know what I am up against. I am on my way to the Fayette County jail. I have been living in a house for 11 years. Now the Convention of Furriers at Philadelphia

By BOB LOW

I have often had occasion to read the advertisements of fur concerns.

It is not unusual to come across items of women's fur apparel listed as a bargain for $5,000.

The fashionable wealthy parasite thinks of a piece of fur as an exquisite medium through which to enhance her exclusive social station.

In wearing an expensive wrap costing many thousand of dollars, the fact is publicly advertised that only those who are fortunate enough to possess many more thousands of dollars are in a position to wear them.

Never Consider Human Effort

The amount of human effort involved in producing such garments is never considered by those who wear them.

In every finished fur piece, however, is consummated the toil of numerous workers.

In the U. S. thousands of workers are engaged in the fur industry.

These workers produce the expensive wraps that the wealthy wear. The workers work hard, receive small wages, suffer unemployment and are subject to all the disadvantages that the average worker has to undergo.

The fur worker's wives never enjoy the pleasure of wearing the expensive wraps her husband produces.

The Industry is owned and controlled by an unscrupulous, greedy band of manufacturers who accumulate fortunes by unmercifully exploiting the workers.

Between the fur workers and the fur bosses a savage class war exists.

Fur Workers Organized

The manufacturers have their association and the fur workers have their union known as the Fur Workers' International Union of the U. S. and Canada.

The Fur Workers' International Union is an A. F. of L. organization. The coming convention that will be held in Philadelphia promises to be the stormiest convention ever held by the organization.

The main center of the fur industry is New York City where 80 per cent of the fur workers are organized.

In New York a bitter conflict rages between the old corrupt officialdom which has been ousted and the live active militant left that is now in control. This bitter fight will be carried to the floor of the convention.

In order to know then what the convention may do it is necessary to know what the situation in New York is.

The Situation in New York

In 1920 the furriers union declared a strike against the fur manufacturers in New York City. The workers were opposed to the strike because they knew that the bosses wanted a strike because economic conditions in general were bad and particularly so in the fur industry. The New York Joint Board disregarded the wishes of the membership and actually ordered the strike. When the strike was called the union had ½ of a million dollars in the treasury.

Morris Kaufman, who is to-day the president of the International Union, was then the general manager of the New York Joint Board.

He was the recognized head in New York of a corrupt, parasitic group

NEXT WEEK—DUNNE'S First Report of A. F. of L. Convention—Read It!

[illegible] to Labor by "The Jobless"

The Unemployment Council has issued a paper to meet the needs of the unemployment movement of this country. There has been no means of connecting up the many Unemployed Councils that have formed thru the United States during the past year, no mode of common expression.

"The Jobless," Organ of the Unemployed of America, published by the Unemployment Council of New York, 201 W. 13th St., New York City, will supply this want. It states as its mission: to help organise the unemployed; to link them up with the Labor Unions; and to create a United Front of the workers.

Unemployment the Great Issue.

This little paper, which sells for one cent, will be sold in every part of the country. It is the duty of every worker, whether he has a job or not, to read this paper.

Unemployment is not a matter of importance to the unemployed alone. Unemployment has diminished but little, as the Government report demonstrates.

Less than 1 percent more workers were able to find employment on April 1, than the month previous. In some parts of the country, unemployment has increased, this not taking into account the great number of workers locked out and on strike.

Harding Playing the Game

Gary, Schwab and Co. have decided that the way to find work for the worker is simply to smile and deny that there is such a thing as unemployment. They see plenty of work, coming, coming, always coming. Harding, supple tool in the hands of these rich gentlemen, knows that he must talk as they decree. Hence, following the lead of his secretaries, Hoover and Davis, he too, is trumpeting the "end of unemployment."

There has been no suffering during the winter for him. He has not been deprived of food and shelter—his pleasures have not diminished. There has been no rebellion of the unemployed, altho at certain times, in various cities, it was quite close to it. Hence Harding is quite satisfied with the situation.

Unemployed Still With Us

The unemployed are still here, as every worker will attest. According to William Leavitt Stoddard, who recently lectured before the Twentieth Century Club of Boston, the figures given out by the government are "utterly inadequate." He states that there are not 6,000,000 unemployed, but at least twice that number. He points out that the figures issued by the government are based upon the number of jobless in factories employing 500 men or more; whereas these factories represent only 50 per cent of the workers of the country.

Unemployed Aid in War on Unions

The drive against the unions, with the aid of the unemployed, persists. In fact it has not yet reached its climax. Recognizing this fact, the Unemployment Council of New York, at its special meeting on May 27, passed the following resolution:

"The unemployed outside the Unions are potential scabs. Driven by need, even Union men act as scabs, accepting wages and conditions far below the Union standard, thus reducing the standard of all organized labor.

"The unaffiliated unemployed feel no compunction in acting even as strikebreakers. It is useless to PREACH to them about class solidarity, about robbing other men of their jobs. The unemployed have but one wish—one aim—a JOB.

Organized Labor Must Fight.

"Men who have employment, and particularly Organized Labor, on the other hand, are the sufferers from such activity on the part of the unemployed. Hence, it is the duty, especially of Organized Labor to show by ACTS the meaning of class solidarity. This can best be done by Organized Labor fighting against the lengthening of hours, thus affording work for the unemployed.

Must Admit Jobless Without Fees

"Again, the Labor Unions can assist the unemployed and themselves at the same time, by creating a solid front of Organized Labor against the bosses.

"This can only be effected by the Labor Organizations admitting unemployed workers without payment of initiation fees and dues during the period of their unemployment.

They can also build up their organizations by taking back into their organization all members in arrears and declaring them in good standing without payment of dues during the period of their unemployment."

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

[illegible]

[illegible]

That is why we see that Eugene O'Neill has put on a soap box, right inside the Plymouth Theatre, on 45th St. near Broadway, in his "The Hairy Ape," with Louis Wolheim, otherwise "Yank" as the principal soap boxer.

It isn't customary for one to see in the performance of the average street corner orator, the well ordered advance of the vanguard of an enslaved wage earning class.

So it is no doubt difficult for many to discover in the mental struggles of "The Hairy Ape," the brain processes of the great mass of the workers. But let us take for granted that that is the intent of the author.

Scorns "First Cabin Stiffs"

"The Hairy Ape," which is the name given "Yank," the stoker, by the heiress, daughter of the head of the steel trust, tries to assert his importance in this machine age, even down in the stokehole, in the stinking bowels of the ocean liner. He is steel, smoke, force, speed, "25 knots an hour," he belongs, whereas the first cabin stiffs are dead they don't belong.

That is about the only consolation that the ignorant among the great masses get, in their drudgery, the false delusion they are "it," that they dominate because they run the machine.

"Yank" began suffering from disillusion when the heiress went slumming in the fire pits of the ship's boiler rooms, where the stokers were bending to their tasks before the hungry furnaces.

"You beast," she shrieks, as "Yank" discovers her presence during a burst of profanity, and if she didn't call him a "Hairy Ape," her eyes "looked it."

He Tries to Think

That set the "Yank" to trying to "think," symbolic of a helpless working class trying to "think." He wants to knock her block off with his shovel. He wants to spit in her face but there are too many detectives around. He lands on Fifth Ave., and a fellow stoker tries to talk class solidarity into him to replace the individual violence, but to no avail.

We take it that the author is seeking to symbolize the present social order in the church service, and then in the churchgoers coming down the Avenue, mere human automatons who go into ecstasies over a display of monkey furs in a shop window.

"Yank" hurls his anathema at these automatons, the jibberings of the worker-individualist against an established order. And when "Yank" punches one of the "gentlemen" in the jaw, he is hauled off to "The Island," where he gains an added sense of his insignificance as he faces steel bars, locks, keys, used against him.

Repulsed by I. W. W.

Then he hears of the I. W. W. thru a daily newspaper, that reports a speech of Senator Queen, obviously Senator King, of Utah, charging the "Wobblies" with dynamitings, arson and sundry other crimes, all of which appealed immensely to "Yank," so much so, that he wants to join.

But when he prefers dynamite to literature to pass out among his fellow stokers, he is taken for a department of justice provocateur and thrown into the street, finally landing at the zoo at night, where he thinks he has found comfort in the company of a huge gorilla. He releases the gorilla from its cage, but instead of receiving him as a brother, the powerful animal crushes him to death; may we say, even as the wages system crushes the worker who depends upon his own, individual strength to win against the giant forces opposing him.

The police, in real life, as well as on the stage, have been urged to stop "The Hairy Ape" as obscene, etc., etc., etc.

Now Write the Sequel

It cannot be denied that the orthodox squirm in their seats as the drunken stokers in their orgies between watches give the "Ha, Ha, Ha" to God, government, law, justice, equality and when a similar scene is enacted in the prison.

The play is iconoclastic. It destroys faith in things as they are. It is art, and as art it is probably not called upon to be constructive, to point the way. The Socialist stoker, with his appeal for votes, is not presented in a favorable light. The I. W. W. is shown as a mere minority sect. Nowhere, thruout the play is one made to feel the mass strength of the workers that comes thru organization. But, as an author or a lecturer is sometimes privileged to say, "That is a different story." We would, therefore, like to see a sequel to "The Hairy Ape" by the same author.

[illegible]

People are piling up [illegible] that Hoover is not carrying on relief work alone in Soviet Russia and [illegible] that is playing a double game.

On April 11, Hoover advised President Harding that in all probability all of the [illegible] appropriated by Congress for Russian relief would not be needed. He stated that the famine was "well in hand," and it was understood the American Relief Administration forces would withdraw from Russia about Sept. 1.

This statement, however, was at such variance with fact, that a refutation was not required. The famine has spread and to-day embraces the Ukraine, the granary of Soviet Russia, a fact of which the American Relief Administration is well aware.

Change of Front During Genoa

Since making the statement, the Genoa Conference has taken place. During the conference, the Soviet Government gave the world to understand that it would not bow before the capitalist powers.

The Soviet representatives declared they would not barter away the achievements of the Revolution and of the four years of civil war imposed upon Russia by counter-revolutionaries within and hostile capitalist governments without.

Their attitude was so definite, so vigorous, that it gained the approval of the whole world—and particularly of the working class in every country.

Relief Activities Supplemented

Even before the conference, however, authentic information was reaching the outside world to the effect that the American Relief Administration is not adhering to the agreement made with the Soviet Government, viz., that the A. R. A. would abstain from all political propaganda.

It is, for instance, a very strange fact that America shows such a predilection for ex-army officers as officials for relief work.

It is not generally known that the army is the best service for acquiring efficiency in that domain. Yet we find that all the officials of the American Relief Administration working in Russia are army officers, from colonels down. Working in conjunction with these forces are primarily school teachers and priests. These are the two groups part of which refused to co-operate when the Revolution broke out and sabotaged to a great extent afterwards.

American Flag Flying in Russia

When the A. R. A. went to Russia, it was decided not to use the American flag, in order that there might not "appear" to be any politics in the relief work.

"Where they could have found the flags, no one knows," Mr. Bowden, district supervisor of the A. R. A., recently declared. "An enthusiastic kitchen manager has adopted the idea and probably passed it along until a number of them are now unfurling the flag during feeding hours."

This display of innocence is too bald to be effective. Flags do not make their way into a country in large numbers without having been ordered. Nor have flags the capacity of distributing themselves. The A. R. A. is now proclaiming what was known from the very beginning, despite all asseverations—and the blue and white flag of the A. R. A. did not conceal it.

Politics Easy to Mix with Relief.

It is very simple to admix a little politics to "humanitarianism," as the record of Herbert Hoover in Soviet Hungary demonstrated. It was not difficult for Hoover, thru his agent, Mr. Gregory, to offer aid to the starving people in Hungary, and at the same time plot and organize the overthrow of the Soviet Regime in Hungary.

The same methods and tactics are being applied in Soviet Russia at the present time. The officials of the A. R. A. are active in arousing and organizing sentiment for the destruction of the Soviet Government.

[illegible]

[illegible] Communist [illegible] Profintern [illegible] Germany. The Call [illegible] as follows:

To All Organizations Affiliated with the Red Trade Union International.

Comrades! The Central Council of the Red Trade Union International has decided to convoke the Second Congress in Moscow, October 20th. According to the decision of the First Congress of the Revolutionary Trade Unions (see Constitution, division 4) the representation is distributed as follows:

Every national organization of trade or industrial unions having less than 10,000 members receives one consultative voice at the Congress; national organizations having from 10,000 to 25,000 members send one delegate with a deciding vote; from 25,000 to 100,000—two delegates with a deciding vote; from 100,000 to 250,000—four delegates with a deciding vote; from 250,000 to 500,000—six delegates and for each additional 500,000 members one delegate with a deciding vote is added.

International revolutionary class organizations by trades or industries have the right for two deciding votes each. Minorities organized by countries have the same representation, but all the organizations of a given country affiliated to the Red Labor Union International form a single delegation within which the votes are divided proportionally to the membership of the respective organizations.

The organized minorities and fractions have a representation at the Congress only in case the National Trade Union Organization of that country is not affiliated to the Red Labor Union International.

It is to be seen therefrom that the number of votes depends in general upon the number of organized workers. Naturally, the number of delegates, if necessary, may be more or less than the number indicated in the Constitution, but this does not alter the number of votes.

The Executive Bureau has drafted the following preliminary agenda:

(1) Report of the Executive Bureau;
(2) Task of the Revolutionary Trade Unions and the Single Labor front;
(3) The Comintern and the Profintern;
(4) Question of organization;
(5) Position of Trade Unions in colonial countries.

The Executive Bureau requests all organizations affiliated to the Profintern to start from now to enter alterations and additions in the agenda and beginning about August to send on their concrete propositions. It is understood that the final agenda will be established by the Congress itself.

Yours fraternally,
The Executive Bureau,
A. Losovsky, Secretary General.

Jokes by Lenin

The Moscow daily, soviet official paper, the Izvestia, is in a rollicking humor about the recent Genoa Conference. It is full of jokes, such as:

"The conference was held at Genoa because there is the statue of Columbus and the Allies hope they will discover some American money."

"England, the land of Shakespeare and Lloyd George. Both 'made much ado about nothing,' and the propounding of the question, 'To be or not to be.'"

"The Little Entente conspiracy—three whales wanting to swallow the Bolshevist Jonah."

"Barthou—a cardboard figure worked by strings from Paris."

"The conference is the first funeral mass on the field of battle after the world war."

"Lloyd George—The universal political matrimonial agent."

FURRIERS' CONVENTION AT PHILADELPHIA

that controlled the union through terroristic methods. His right hand man was Sam Cohen, an unscrupulous, unprincipled corruptionist. This Sam Cohen was a member of the Socialist Party and is at the present time an executive member of the 6th Assembly District, Socialist Party, New York City.

Officials Paid During Strike

A strike committee was organized with Sam Cohen as its head. In this strike committee were placed not the good courageous fighting workers in the unions, but a group of men who were not furriers, but utilized the furriers' union to keep M. Kaufman and Sam Cohen in power by doing whatever dirty work they demanded from them.

In return they were well paid and permitted to graft upon the organization. In the period of the strike that lasted over 30 weeks this strike committee was paid handsomely while the workers were out on the street starving because of their loyalty to the union in supporting a strike the calling of which they were opposed to.

During the strike M. Kaufman & Co. settled with many small manufacturers. These small manufacturers were permitted to do the work of the large manufacturers against whom a bitter strike was being waged. You had in New York City a situation in which members of one union were forced by their officialdom to scab upon their own brother members.

The workers in these settled shops were taxed to support the strike, first 15 per cent of their wages, then 25 per cent, and finally 40 percent.

Union Faces Deficit

Just before Christmas the workers refused to pay the tax because there was a scarcity of work. The workers were then ordered back to work on the old conditions.

When the strike was called the union had ¼ million dollars in its treasury. This quarter of a million dollars was spent together with the hundreds of thousands of dollars collected by the tax upon the workers in the settled shops. With the settlement of the strike the union treasury was left empty and with a deficit of $110,000.

The corruption that was flagrant during the strike as well as the mismanagement of the strike itself aroused the most bitter protests from the membership and the corrupt officialdom found itself face to face with a revolting membership.

The membership refused to support their leaders. They stopped paying union dues and assessments.

Unique Situation Develops

The union was fast heading for bankruptcy, and the leadership of M. Kaufman could do nothing to stop it because that leadership had lost the entire confidence of the membership. So a unique situation developed in the early part of 1921. The reactionary, corrupt, parasite leadership of M. Kaufman retreated and without a fight turned over its power to the lefts.

But in retreating M. Kaufman, Sam Cohen and Co. organized to treacherously stab the lefts in the back to disrupt and smash the organization.

The convention that should have been held that year was postponed. The subcommittee was in charge of the Kaufman who had lost his position as general manager of the New York Joint Board, the president of the International.

M. Kaufman, not being satisfied with using the International presidency against the lefts who now controlled the New York situation, joined the Socialist Party in order to gain the support of the Socialist Party and particularly its organs of publicity in his fight against the reds. M. Kaufman never was a socialist.

In the headquaters of the 6 Assembly District, Socialist Party, M. Kaufman and Sam Cohen gathered their corrupt henchmen together and organized a welfare club.

The welfare club, using terroristic tactics, began to sabotage and do everything possible to disrupt and smash the union.

In their dirty work, Lang, labor editor of the Jewish Daily Forward, came enthusiastically to their assistance.

The Welfare Club is the nefarious instrument for joining together the reactionary forces in the furriers' union with Sam Gompers, the Socialist Party, and the Jewish Daily Forward in an onslaught against the lefts.

The manager and organizer of the Welfare Club is the same M. Kaufman who is to-day the international president of the furriers' union.

One of the best means used by the capitalist class to divide the workers and to break the power of their organization is to play upon their religious differences. The great problem of organized labor is to keep the workers loyal to one another in their labor organizations in spite of their religious and racial differences.

Mr. Kaufman as international president of the furriers' union used his office in an effort to smash the left wing control of the New York unions by the dividing the workers on religious lines.

M. Kaufman, a Jew, sent out the call for the organization of a gentile local in the fur trade in New York.

Dues were remitted to gentile members and new members were received in the gentile local with the payment of a very small initiation.

The plan was to set up this local in opposition to the Joint Board of New York City that was in the hands of the left and controlled 10,000 members.

The storm of protest that the call for the organization of a gentile local aroused made M. Kaufman change his tone.

The local was designated as a retail local, but the work as originally planned was carried on.

The New York Joint Board, however, was able to effectively combat this treacherous maneuver of M. Kaufman.

The work in the retail local is at standstill. Its consideration at t coming convention will be among t convention's important problems.

Recently an election for busine agents was held. In order to comb the terroristic tactics of the welfa club the New York union obtain protection. After counting t biggest vote ever cast in the fu riers' union all the left candidat were declared elected with big m jorities. Thereupon the welfare cl complained to the U. H. T. Max Pi of the U. H. T. came to their suppo The welfare club thereupon beca very active in the nailers' and oper tors' local, and with bulldog t roristic tactics succeeded in getti control of the local and lodging protest against the New York Joi Board as well as withdrawing the delegates from that Board. The d legates, however, refused to withdra whereupon M. Kaufman, the intern tional president, declared that th sat illegally on the New York Jo Board. A similar decision was han ed down by the United Hebre Trades. This question will also com before this convention for final d cision.

The welfare club in its brief exis ance has broken up a meeting calle to adopt plans for the relief of u employed members.

The welfare club has used the s cialist press, particularly the Jewi Daily Forward, in a treacherous ca paign of slander against the union.

The welfare club has used religio animosities to break and smash t furriers' union because the lefts are control and have the support of t membership.

What has the left done? It h gained the complete confidence of t membership. The membership fro 2000 at the end of the strike has no reached a paidup membership of a most 10,000. They have in spite all difficulties and obstacles placed their way reduced the debt of $110,0 in the short period of their control $45,000. That is a wonderful reco It speaks for itself. It shows that t left can assume responsibility.

The New York unions controll by the left should control the inte national organization because they r present the bulk of the membershi In the coming convention the lefts, believe, will have to make a stubbo fight for the control of the Intern tional in order to administer a smas ing defeat to the corrupt, disrupti tactics of M. Kaufman-Samuel Go pers—Socialist Party combination.

The reactionary forces have program at all for the coming co vention. The lefts have a well d fined progressive and revolutiona program.

The main demands of the left del gation to the convention will be follows:

A shop delegate system for the fur i dustry;
Recognition of May 1st as labo holiday;
Amalgamation of needle trades in one organization;
Recognition of Soviet Russia and r sumption of trade relations;
Indorsement of the revolutiona press, in this instance the Jewi Freiheit.

In successfully carrying out th program at the coming convention w can wish the left wing delegation a possible success. They should b proud of the record of achievemen in New York City. The revolutiona labor movement in the United Stat will score a great victory if they ca carry their achievements successfull through the convention.

Boost Price of Bricks, Reduce Workers' Wages

By HARRY GODFREY
(Federated Press Correspondent)

HAVERSTRAW, N. Y.—A year ago bricks were selling around $15 a thousand, and wages in the local brickyards and the other great brickyards on the Hudson averaged about $4.75 a day.

Now the ruling price of brick is $30 a thousand, and the average wage of brickyard workers is about $3.75 a day.

That, in short, is the story of the conditions which brought about the strike in the local yards—not to speak of the conditions in the industry.

One of these, however, is the fact that the industry is highly seasonal, and affords work during only part of each year. The men are asking for a restoration of last year's wage scale.

Do You Know What United Front Can Do?

the widespread destitution to extend the scope of their work.

They came to New York, bringing Lawrence Dwyer, International Board Member of the miners' union with them, and made some impression among the liberals of New York.

Aided by the New York Call, the Forward, and other "respectable" radical organs, but shunning the Communist papers as they would a plague, they arranged several "mass" meetings with Dwyer as speaker.

But the meetings failed to draw out the mass; they were flat failures, because there was back of them no labor force capable of insuring success.

Labor Begins to Move

On his own account Dwyer then got after the labor elements here. The C. L. U. elected a committee which started its work by rejecting the Communists' offer to help in the campaign.

They decided to establish food stations in various parts of the city at which food could be donated directly, and are looking into the possibility of having the Actor's Union (Equity) put on a show as a strike benefit.

THE WORKER prints the list of food stations elsewhere in these columns but the meagre response of so powerful a labor movement as that of New York to so touching an appeal for assistance again brings forth the need for a United Front.

Supposing that the United Front of Labor were a reality! Suppose it were here, and that every man, woman and child thru whatever organization he or she belonged to—union, party, fraternity, co-operative store, school, or what not, was a member of that united front!

In every city the employers' Chamber of Commerce would be matched by the organized might of labor the Chamber of Labor.

In every state there would be federations of these bodies and finally for the entire country there would be one centralized fighting organization with an active executive composed of representatives of all principal nation-wide organization members of the Front.

Must Mobilize in Advance

Before a major labor battle like the miners' strike would even be begun the forces of labor would be fully mobilized. Plans would be made to carry that fight to a victory if it took ten years to do it. No thought of defeat would be even entertained, there could be no such thing unless the entire working class of America were put out of business with poison gas.

One cannot starve out an entire working class, nor coerce it, the only hope of the masters is to divide its ranks and thus make it beat itself. The United Front will prevent that. It is victory insurance for the workers.

With the outbreak of the miners' strike the entire working class would move like a trained army to the support of the strikers. Funds would be collected, food and clothing provided. In case of eviction new homes would be built but unemployed building tradesmen on land provided by organized working farmers.

The entire labor press would be at the disposal of able labor publicity experts, demonstrations would take place all over the country on behalf of the strikers, and working class opinion would be and remain a unit in their support.

United Front—Then Victory

Just as now the coal operators can count on every section of the masters organizations as their allies so the miners could count every organized worker an active, fighting soldier in his cause. From being, at the start, a mere defensive organization to fight back the attacks of capitalism, the United Front of Labor would soon develop into an active machine to win new power for the workers. Control of the shops and mines would soon be wrested from the employers and the workers would be in a position to protect themselves against any effort of the dispossessed masters to regain their power.

Our activity in the unions and other workers' organizations was never more necessary than now. Agitation, propaganda, for the united front in the class struggle—that is the need of the hour.

Help Organize Workers' Power

The national office of the party, in directing the campaign on a national scale is burdened with the heaviest expense. It appeals to all who would see the realization of the United Front to help bear that expense.

Now is the time to send in your contribution. Against the organized money might of the masters we must array the power of the workers' numbers. That power must be organized to be effective. Help organize it now into the United Front of All Labor.

[illegible]

[illegible] Chafin dynasty. There was no denial of the fact that it was war—between the operators and their private army and the union miners.

The Miners' Army

One of the prosecuting attorneys—John Chafin, first cousin of Don Chafin, sheriff of Logan county—stated to the jury: "Gentlemen, this organization (the United Mine Workers) had a larger army than Lee had when he surrendered to Grant at Richmond." The defense did not contradict him, and the spectators seemed highly pleased at this evidence of efficient organization.

The prosecution claimed that the miners' army advanced in three divisions, and that the password: "We come creeping" had to be given even by General Bandholz of the United States army before he could get through the lines. It was not denied.

The right of men to revolt against intolerable conditions, to avenge the murder of their fellow-workers, by the use of force if necessary to wipe out the upholders of a government that had obviously become the tool of the industrial lords, was aparently never questioned by the townspeople who witnessed the trial and evidently the local sentiment was reflected in the jury.

Employer's Real Object

It should be remembered that the chief object of the attorneys for the coal operators was to link up the march of the miners with the United Mine Workers and to prove that the plans for the rebellion had been laid and carried out by the district officials. To convict Blizzard of treason they had to prove an overt act on his part by two witnesses. It was the theory of the prosecution that when martial law was declared in Logan County by their tool, Governor Morgan, any attempt to restore civil law by force automatically became treason.

The farmers of Jefferson County could not see it that way.

They crowded the courtroom with their wives and they smiled approval when the coal operators' lawyers who called themselves "the state" tried to prove what they regarded as some particularly atrocious act on the part of Blizzard or Keeney or Mooney or Petry or Porter—district officials whom they had selected from the hundreds of indicated men simply because thru them they could involve the union.

The informations had been sworn out in wholesale fashion. One man Lavender by name, had been in jail on another charge for months before and during the march; another had been dead for two years.

Glimpses from the Front

How the crowd laughed when witnesses were questioned as to Blizzard's arrival at the front with an automobile load of ammunition! The prosecution claimed that he unloaded the ammunition and then said to the miners: "You've got what you've been waiting for; now go and get 'em." They had to be warned by the bailiff when witnesses for the coal operators said that when someone had asked Blizzard how the battle was going he had replied: "We're moving forward on all four fronts."

The state claimed that Andy Porter had said at a meeting at Burston that "the only way we can stop the calamity the operators are trying to force on us is to stick together, march on Logan County and wipe it off the map" and that Bill Petry, following him on the platform had endorsed that statement. If I am any judge ninety per cent of the audience likewise endorsed it.

Farmers Listen and Laugh

State witnesses swore that Frank Keeney had stated in the course of a speech that "whoever voted for Governor Morgan had voted for a red-handed murderer." The patriotic lawyers for the patriotic coal operators made much of this statement and worked themselves into a righteous frenzy over it but the farmers kept on smiling. Two or three of the jurors smothered a grin as they looked under their chairs for the ample cuspidors with which they were provided.

The prosecution insisted that these young officials who looked so innocent and harmless were really reds of the deepest dye and that under their leadership the marching miners had requisitioned every red handkerchief, scarf and necktie from every store in their line of march; that they had pretended to be attempting to get the miners to lay down their arms and go home by sending out communications to that effect from the district office but in reality that they had got to the front as soon as their letters did and had told the miners to pay no attention to letters; "you men know what you have to do; go ahead and do it," the prosecution witnesses swore that Keeney said on more than one occasion.

[illegible] they looked upon it as strategy of a high order.

It is a [illegible] One could always see a miner at the center of a group of interested farmers and townspeople when court was not in session and this had its effect. It had to for these miners have tales to tell.

What They Told the Farmers

They tell of how Don Chafin, when the march was on, went into the home of a non-union miner and ordered him to get his gun and join the operators army; how the man refused and how Chafin shot him, blowing his brains all over the breakfast table where he sat with his wife and two children. They tell of men arrested for minor offenses and never seen again. They tell of the operators owning the "hollows" as they call the valleys, "from hell to heaven," how you cannot get within ten miles of some mines without being on "company" property; of being forced to trade at the company store, unable to buy direct even from the farmers who are their neighbors without incurring the displeasure of the company and its hirelings.

They tell about how the Logan County operators vote their whole payroll and make of officialdom a murderous appendage of the industrial machine.

The farmers believed the miners, but did not believe the coal operators, and the few lost souls they could induce to testify for them when they painted the miners as devils incarnate, because a mine guard, one John Gore, had been found with eleven bullet holes in his body in the line of the miners' march.

No more vicious pleas were ever made to a jury than were made by the attorneys for the prosecution. It was the union they denounced during most of the six and one-half hours they pleaded and threatened; where the name of Blizzard was mentioned once the United Mine Workers was uttered a hundred times; it was the union they wanted to convict of treason.

Every trick was used, every prejudice was played upon; the home, the flag, "our" country, the boys who died for democracy, religion, the honor of women, all the devices of clever and unscrupulous lawyers, well paid for their contemptible task, were worn threadbare by the prosecution but to no purpose.

Blizzard went free and it is doubtful if there will be any more treason trials in West Virginia for many a long day.

Patriotic Revolutionists

I hope no one will run away with the idea that either the miners or the farmers have any intention of overthrowing the government of West Virginia or of the United States. They have no such intention. They believe in the constitution. They love the flag. They are Americans and they are proud of the fact. Not one in ten thousand has ever heard of Karl Marx. They believe that peaceful methods should prevail and that changes should come thru the ballot. If you compared them to the Bolseviks they might get very rough with you.

And yet there is no getting away from the fact that several thousand of these same men armed themselves, gathered from different places far from Logan county and took part in a revolt against the government and that men were killed on both sides in the course of this uprising.

Neither is there any doubt of the fact that twelve of these men heard all the evidence and decided that what had been done was right; nor is there any doubt that the verdict was a popular one in Charles Town where everyone heard all there was to hear about the case.

What Is Treason?

The whole affair rather upsets a lot of perfectly plausible theory. The ordinary terms of the revolutionary movement do not fit here.

Maybe after all the much-touted Yankee genius for invention is going to furnish us a revolutionary terminology with a peculiar native flavor.

What is treason, anyway?

Is it rebellion against the state?

Is it armed insurrection?

The farmers of Charles Town, Jefferson County, W. Va., say that these things are not treason when it is plain that the state power is in the hands of profit-taking individuals who use the state for their own selfish purposes.

That is worth remembering.

HOUSTON, Tex.—The International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen in convention here turned down a proposal to join in creating a $3,000,000 fund for establishing labor daily papers all over the country.

[illegible]

A number of new locals have been organized, and the strike in the Pawtuxet valley is being prosecuted with vigor.

The Amalgamated was the first of the textile unions to strike in protest against the wholesale wage reductions inaugurated by the textile operators resulting in the crippling of the entire industry. The union now has a membership of about 25,000 and expects to double this number before the next convention which will be held in New York City, May 30, 1923.

The convention in passing upon a resolution endorsing the Workers Party of America, decided to endorse no political party at the present time.

Russel Palmer, secretary-treasurer of the organization, was unanimously nominated to succeed himself for the coming election which is held by referendum. He was unopposed.

Two delegates were chosen to represent the organization at the convention of the Federated Textile Unions to be held in New York City, August 3.

The convention was addressed by Louis Hollander of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers who spoke on "Organizing for Working-Class Power," and by Ernest Lamb of the Tapestry Carpet Workers of America, who spoke on industrial unionism.

New York Must Hear West Virginia Coal Miners "Bread" Cry

Thayer Coal Co. claims it,' and arrested me for trespassing on my own property. I have a wife and six children. They have nothing to eat and me in jail. If you run across a man in New York that has a heart have him send something down here for my babies. I tried to get work and failed because I belong to the United Mine Workers. They have me blacklisted. What in the world am I to do? They won't let me live in a barn, and won't let me work, so Mr. Dwyer, see if you cannot find a way so that my poor babies won't starve to death. The Red Cross sent me to Ohio, and I found no work. And, Oh me, what will my babies do, now that I am in jail? I have been digging May Apple roots at six cents per pound, to keep from starving, so, for God's sake, find some way to help my children. I'll close as I have no more paper to write on."

The above letter is written from the Fayette County jail on the back of a sheet torn from the calendar.

In order to facilitate the gathering of food supplies to be sent to the West Virginia coal miners, food stations have been established at the following places:

United Hebrew Trades, 175 East Broadway.

Brownsville Labor Lyceum, 229 Sackman St., Brooklyn.

Beethoven Hall, 110 E. 5th St., near Third Ave.

Labor Temple, 84th St., near Third Ave.

Central Labor Council, 287 Broadway.

Amalgamated Temple, 11 Arion Place, Brooklyn.

It is especially urged that the food supplies consist of cornmeal, flour, beans, fat backs, dried and salted meats, coffee and sugar.

"If the miners and their families are kept from starving, the strikers will not go back to work," declares Dwyer. "They will stick out and win."

Comments on Blizzard Verdict

Speaking of the "not guilty" verdict returned in favor of William Blizzard, president of sub-district No. 1, District 17, Dwyer says:

"It is the first time we ever got anything like a fair deal in my whole experience in West Virginia. The judge was fair and the citizens of Charles Town and Jefferson County were fair, and our people appreciate it. I am confident that the authorities won't attempt any more prosecutions on the charge of treason."

THE WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER. KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

The [illegible] the iron-clad autocracy of Samuel Gompers, will be discussed at the various all-night poker parties, perhaps not with as much heat and fire-works as will occur in the day sessions of the convention but the same G. P.'s who rule the convention will play their poker, smoke their cigars and figure out how to crack the whip on their various delegations on these vital issues.

The first week of the convention will be taken up in speech making to rank-and-file delegates, a few G. P.'s and empty chairs. The real power behind the throne will be off somewhere being entertained while discussing the political problems concerning the perpetuation of their particular brand of leadership.

Sees Substantial Minority

The writer is confident that there will be a substantial minority in rebellion against the tactics of the G. P.'s, but this rebellion will be blind—without much semblance of leadership as yet. It is on this minority that the writer bases his hope.

All over the country those of the rank and file that are left are sick and disgusted with the present leadership. They realize that the national open-shop program of the employers has had a tremendous effect on the membership and finances of their various organizations.

The rank and file has not yet developed an intelligent leadership or a concrete program, but it is rapidly approaching that stage. The time is at hand when the rank and file, in increasing numbers, will rally to the standard of a united front in the Trade Union Movement against the United Front of the employers.

Foster "Exposed" Again

One of the "sensations' of the convention will no doubt be another "exposure" of William Z. Foster and the Trade Union Educational League.

The Trade Union Educational League is the leadership that is developing in the rank and file movement in the American Federation of Labor.

Its growth is so rapid and so full of tremendous possibilities to the workers of America that its influence will be felt in this convention, the first one since the inception of the Trade Union Educational League some months ago.

The League's program of amalgamation is the most vital thing that could possibly confront a convention of the American Federation of Labor.

At the present time the writer is in possession of figures pertaining to the membership of our various International Unions that would shock even the most pessimistic. The only answer to this is amalgamation. This issue will crop up again and again in the convention and no doubt will be stifled, smothered and steamrollered by the autocracy—most often perhaps in a clever and diplomatic fashion or perhaps in a brutal fashion like last year at Denver on the Irish resolution.

Membership Loss Frightens

President Gompers and most of the General Presidents of the various International Unions are thoroly frightened by their loss in membership and will wave the bogey of Bolshevism to throw dust in the eyes of their followers. This old bogey will not avail much longer. The workers are growing more impatient all the time and are demanding some real definite substantial efforts to bring about closer unity in their ranks.

If the convention does not make some move in this direction it will simply prove that it does not represent the rank and file but simply a bureaucracy—hand-made and designed to stifle all militant trade union working class aspiration.

The real progress to be made is not in the A. F. of L. conventions but in the local unions taking up vital issues such as amalgamation, voting for them, electing delegates to their district councils, all instructed to vote for amalgamation; local unions electing and instructing delegates to their International Conventions to vote for amalgamation who will, in turn, vote in their International Conventions in favor of amalgamation and instruct their General Presidents [illegible] A. F. of L. and vote for amalgamation.

Golden Opportunity for Militants

[illegible] will have to vote in accordance with that action.

Now is the golden opportunity of every militant in the Trade Union Movement to point out the hopelessness of the present form of leadership and to urge a program advocating amalgamation and militant trade union tactics and make of the American Federation of Labor convention a representative gathering of delegates who represent the rank and file and its aspirations and not a gathering of "Grand Dukes" principally concerned with perpetuating their jobs over various games of poker.

Jap Censorship Hits at Song of Revolution

By GERTRUDE HAESSLER

(Federated Press Correspondent)

KOBE, Japan (by mail).—The May 2 issue of The Japan Advertiser, an American newspaper printed in Tokio, was suppressed by the police authorities on account of the translation of the Song of Revolution which was printed in connection with the account of the May day parade.

The issue was delivered in Tokio and Yokohama, but all the copies in Kobe were seized before distribution could take place.

The texts as printed in the suppressed issue were:

Song of Revolution

Revolution is near. Revolution is near. Rise up, hundreds of thousands of men garbed in tattered clothes. Wake up, dwellers of the slums. Who are those that destroyed our garden of freedom? Who are those that trampled upon justice? How long must we submit to the rule of oppression and persecution? The blood circulating vigorously in our veins craves freedom If there were no freedom we would rather choose the grave. Are our brethern not fighting for freedom in Russia?

TACOMA.—Approval of the work being done by the Trades Union Relief for Starving Russia was voted by the labor council here, and a committee appointed to back its efforts. The council approved of the circulation of petitions asking the release of I. W. W. convicted in the Centralia-Montesano trial.

[illegible] The Worker with New Subscriptions

[illegible] more support, financial support, is what's required.

THE WORKER is preparing to reach these new readers, to get this support. We realize that no paper is justified in asking support of the workers unless it has something to give them. And that something must be a thing that the workers feel a need for.

It is the purpose of THE WORKER to give the working class of America that which they not only need, but that which they cannot get from any other source.

And that something is the facts of the class struggle here and now, and an outline of the tactics which the workers must follow in order to win in the struggle with the capitalist dictatorship. The facts, the whole facts, given with the communist interpretation and clear-cut analysis of tactical problems—these are what the workers need.

If the capitalist press gave these to the workers there would be no reason for THE WORKER'S existence.

It is because there is no other source from which the workers can expect this that they—those at least who realise the situation—establish their weeklies, monthlies and dailies.

And it is for this reason that we go to our readers demanding that they bear a share of the burden of maintaining their own press, THE WORKER.

THE WORKER is taking every step possible to make it more attractive to the awakening workers. Special issues now before the workers are dealt with fully and scientifically. Our own reporters are covering many struggles, strikes and phases of the war between our forces and the enemy—Capitalism.

William F. Dunne, labor editor, is giving special attention to the most significant phases of this struggle. His attendance at the "treason trial" of the fighting miners of West Virginia exemplifies the policies THE WORKER will follow. He will attend the A. F. of L. convention and give the story of that convention of America's organized workers.

These are labor matters which touch every American worker, in which every one should be interested, in which every one is concerned whether he realizes it or not. These are matters which the workers need to know about. These are the matters which THE WORKER will deal with week after week, placing squarely before the workers the salient phases of their struggles and illuminating them with the communist interpretation.

Proceedings of Communist International

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The Worker is publishing in full the resolutions and theses of the sessions of the Enlarged Executive Committee of the Communist International held from Feb. 24 to March 4. Last week we gave space to an introductory statement by A. Thalheimer. This week we publish the resolution on the question of participation by the Communist International in the proposed conference of the three internationals at Berlin. The C. I. did participate in this conference which was broken up last week by the representatives of the Second International. The attitude of C. I. toward this conference is here stated. Here is also the statement of Marcel Cachin, for the French Communists, pledging themselves to carry out the program, for the United Front in France. Next week we shall publish the theses on the question of combatting war and the danger of war. This week's installment is as follows:

Resolution on the Theses of the United Front

After the discussion which cleared away all misunderstandings and confusion and showed that the policy of the united front, as proposed by the Executive Committee, in no way signifies the cessation of the conflict with reformism, but the continuation and development of the tactics adopted by the Third Congress and our sections, the Enlarged Executive Session approves the December theses on the united front.

It calls upon the Presidium and upon the delegations of the most important sections to decide upon the immediate practical measures that are at once to be taken in their respective countries for the application of these tactics, which must naturally be adapted to the peculiar conditions of each individual country.

Resolution on the Question of the Participation of the Communist International in the Proposed Conference of All Labor Organizations of the World

After acknowldeging the proposal made by the Vienna Working Union of Socialist Parties, the Enlarged Executive Session declares itself in favor of the participation of the Communist International.

The Enlarged Executive Session of the C. I., for its part, proposes that all trade unions and their national and international associations be invited: the Red Trade Union International, the whole of the Amsterdam Trade Union International, the French "C. G. T. Unitaire," the Italian Syndicalist Union, the American Federation of Labor and other independent unions.

The Communist International considers it necessary to invite the most important organizations of the Syndicalists, Anarchists, I. W. W., the Shop Stewards, the Factory Councils, etc., to the World Conference.

The International Conference must have the actual universal representation of all the labor organizations of the world.

The World Conference of Labor Organizations must set one great task before itself: the organization of the defensive struggle of the working-class against international capital.

The capitalists of the whole world have systematically assumed the offensive against the workers. Everywhere, wages are cut, working hours lengthened, the misery of the unemployed is growing and taxes and the high cost of living are increasing.

World imperialism takes advantage of the splits and divisions in the ranks of the working-class and is attempting to shift the financial and economic burdens occasioned by the world slaughter, upon the shoulders of the working class.

The imperialistic policy revived immediately after the war, which finds its crassest expression in Versailles, has divided the world into new camps of contention; it leads to attempts at new alliances that inevitably lead to new wars. Washington and Genoa are milestones in the new piratical expedition of world imperialism, and are breeders of new wars.

Even the leaders of the International Transport Workers' Federation (belonging to Amsterdam) and recently the leaders of the International Metal Workers' Federation (likewise of Amsterdam) alarmedly declared that such a danger really existed.

Under these circumstances all the workers must unite for the defense of their most elementary and innate interests. Under these circumstances, whoever refuses to participate in the united front of all the workers, shows that in reality he is for the [illegible] political differences of opinion.

The workers who are well conscious of the deep-seated reasons for such differences, nevertheless demand in overwhelming majority of the working class that unity of action be established for the pressing and immediate practical interests of the working masses. This healthy demand by the working masses is in full accord with the attitude and actions of the Communist International.

Cachin's Statement for French

We have the mandate with which we are charged. We have given our reasons and have defended our resolutions up to the last vote.

It seems to us that the reformists of all countries are daily getting further and further away from the working class, and that they pursue a policy which is in opposition to the daily struggle and welfare of the proletariat.

We entertain no doubt whatever but that they will in all circumstances sabotage the real united front of the laboring masses.

The Executive fully agrees with us in all these opinions, altho it does not quite agree with our conclusions.

We willingly bow to the majority which has just accepted the proposed tactics. We beg of you carefully to examine the significance of the vote. Three countries have joined to make common reservations.

We note with great satisfaction that the Enlargod Executive Session has put itself under obligation, thru its repeated declarations, to make the greatest possible allowances in the application of these decisions for the peculiar situation in each country.

As far as we are concerned, comrades, you may rest assured that we shall always maintain discipline and remain faithful to the decisions of the Third International. The debates just ended have shown conclusively that the Third International is today more than ever the vanguard of the revolutionary proletariat.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The chief of police [illegible] refused to serve [illegible] out by officials of the [illegible] and Textile Workers [illegible] against Lieut. [illegible] of the national guard [illegible] charge of shooting without provocation at Paul and Jacob Paukiewicz, brothers and both textile strikers.

The chief contended that the serving was prevented by the military authorities on the ground that guardsmen are exempt from civil law.

Later it was established, however, that the statute providing for this exemption has been repealed some time ago.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Child wage slavery in its most brutal forms, with more than 5000 children between the ages of 3 and 15 years affected, prevails in the Rhode Island textile strike territory. Physically crippled and mentally stunted by the work, they toil in their cramped unsanitary homes many hours daily. 80 percent of them receiving less than 10 cents an hour.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Here is another installment of the decisions of the second conference of the Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International. The third installment appeared recently and reviewed the attitude of the Red Trade Union International toward the Revolutionary Syndicalists. This week we publish the resolution on the report of the International Propaganda Committee. It is as follows:

Resolution on the Report of the International Propaganda Committee

1. Having taken cognizance of the report of the International Propaganda Committee on its activities and immediate tasks, the Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International endorses the tactics followed by that Committee so far. The Propaganda Committee must continue and intensify its activities of propagating the idea of revolutionary class struggle within the international union federations in the direction pursued hitherto.

2. The Executive Committee declares that at the instance of the Amsterdam Trade Union International the International Trade Secretaries affiliated to the latter have after the First Congress of the Red Trade Union International redoubled their efforts at splitting the trade-union movement and excluding from it and isolating all revolutionary elements.

3. By their savage struggle against the revolutionary unions the leaders of the International Craft Secretariats undermine the forces of labor and prevent uniform organization of proletarian resistance against the offensive of capital.

4. The tremendous defensive actions of the proletariat that with an elementary force break out in all countries in this or that trade are in most cases viewed with apprehension by the leaders of Amsterdam. In other cases, as for instance in the English miners' strike or in that of the French textile workers, those leaders have even openly betrayed the interests of the proletariat.

5. The reactionary policy of splitting followed by the Amsterdamers is most apparent in the case of the Russian trade-unions, which were under various pretexts denied admission to the International Craft Federations. At the international craft congresses that took place during the last six months the delegates of the Russian trade-unions were either (in most cases) refused admittance or were merely treated as guests. The leaders of the respective Craft Secretariats have in a number of instances (Metal Workers' Congress in Lucerne, Building Trades' Conference in Bregenz) even mobilized the bourgeois government and its police force in order to keep the Russian delegates away from the conferences.

6. In spite of this provocative attitude of the leaders of the International Craft Secretariats the Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International proposes that the Propaganda Committees and all revolutionary trade-unions acknowledging the principles of the Red Trade Union International do everything in their power to keep the organizational unity of the International Craft Secretariats intact, because it deems it essential that in the present period of capitalist aggression the attacks of the employers be met with the united front.

7. The Executive Committee advises all revolutionary trade-unions to stay within the International Craft Federations and there conduct an intensive campaign against the attempts at splitting the trade-union movement and the expulsion of revolutionary elements and to secure the admittance of all trade-unions to the next international congress of their respective trade.

All trade-unions which for any reason whatsoever have hitherto refused to join their International Craft Federation are urgently requested to do so as soon as possible.

8. The Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International holds that at the present time the activities of the Propaganda Committees are of especial importance in the interests of the revolutionary trade-union movement. Hence it instructs the Propaganda Committees to intensify their activities and institute all necessary measures suitable for creating ideological ties and active connections between the revolutionary unions and the revolutionary minorities in the respective trades. The Committees must define their attitude towards all concrete problems and occurrences both within the national and the international trade-union movement.

8. The Executive Committee advises the Executive Bureau to pay serious attention to this branch of its activities and support and unite the work of the Propaganda Committees as much as possible.

9. All organizations affiliated with the Red Trade Union International are requested to afford the Propaganda Committees in their countries the most extensive assistance.

10. All adherents of the Red Trade Union International must pay special attention to revolutionary propaganda amongst the organized workers in all the various trades, to the calling of congresses of the various trades and to the corresponding development of the trade-union press.

11. All revolutionary trade-unions or minorities must appoint officials or national propaganda commissions (according to the importance of the industry) for their respective country. These officials or commissions must carry out in a systematic manner the tasks of the Propaganda Committees in close and continuous collaboration with the respective secretariats; they must also see to it that monthly reports are turned in regularly. The necessary communication between the officials or national propaganda commissions in the various countries is to be established by the accredited representative of the Red Trade Union International together with the revolutionary trade-union headquarters in the given country.

12. The most important task of the Propaganda Committees is the elaboration of a concrete program of action which must correspond to the peculiarities of the respective [illegible] offensive. The [illegible] of the First Congress of the Red Trade Union International must be [illegible] to correspond to the tasks in hand.

13. In adopting the tentative statutes for the International Propaganda Committees drawn up by the Executive Bureau of the Red Trade Union International, the Executive Committee declares that these are merely to provide the basis for the statutes of the various Propaganda Committees which must elaborate them to correspond to the peculiarities of their respective trades.

14. The Executive Committee proposes that the question of headquarters be settled at the congresses of the revolutionary trade-unions and minorities of the respective trade. It is deemed advisable, however, that the headquarters of the Propaganda Committees be established in the country with the strongest and most active revolutionary trade-union or trade-union minority.

15. The Executive Committee advises the Propaganda Committees carefully to regulate the financial side of their work. The manner of this regulation must correspond to the conditions obtaining in the respective trade and be carried thru with a view of providing the necessary means either by collections and donations in the minorities or by regular dues of the trade-unions adhering to the Red Trade Union International.

16. In trades where the majority of organized workers are adherents of the Red Trade Union International and the present International Trade Secretariats are in control only owing to the expulsion of the revolutionary unions, the Executive Committee thinks it nevertheless advisable to do everything to maintain the organizational unity of the international federation in question. Only where all attempts in that direction have failed owing to the sabotage of the Amsterdam leaders who use all weapons at their disposal to foil the clearly expressed wish of organized labor, are the Propaganda Committees compelled to safeguard the interests of the workers, to adopt far-reaching measures for establishing international organizational unity of all revolutionary elements within the trade-union movement and to make all preparations necessary for the calling of an international congress of the particular trade to which all unions standing on the basis of the class struggle should, if possible, be invited.

Tolerate No Sabotage! The Second International Seeks to Obstruct the Workers' World Congress

Editor's Note:—Under the above title, the delegation of the Executive Committee of the Communist International to the Conference of the Three Internationals at Berlin, has issued a statement to the world's workers thru the International Press Correspondence. This manifesto shows conclusively that the Second International is responsible for the breaking up of the conference of the three internationals entrusted with the duty of calling a Workers' World Congress for the building of an international united front. It is as follows:

Working Men and Women!

The Conference of the Executives of the three Workers' Internationals which took place at the beginning of April pronounced in favor of the calling of a Workers' World Congress at the earliest possible moment. The necessity for a speedy convening of the Workers' World Congress was so apparent in view of the Genoa Conference that even the Second International did not dare openly to oppose this demand, although in reality it was firmly determined to frustrate the holding of the congress. The Second International is a union of reformist parties who are either immediately allied with their capitalist governments or desire to avoid any conflict,

The Leaders of the Second International Do Not Want to Interfere With the Work of the Capitalist Diplomats

They therefore opposed the natural demand that the annulment of the shameful Versailles Treaty should be embodied in the official proclamation of the Berlin Conference and also declared that the World Congress could not be convened until the end of April. They hoped that the Genoa Conference would be ended by that time so that the Congress would lose the character of immediate intrusion by the proletariat into the haggling of capitalist diplomacy.

Things have turned out differently. The interests of the capitalist states are so divergent that even the common desire to rob and exploit the world cannot immediately bring about unity among the leaders of the world bourgeoisie. For a month past they have been disputing in Genoa as to who shall seize the greater portion of the tribute which they in common desire to levy upon Soviet Russia. The Genoa Conference has not yet come to an end. To everyone who has maintained a spark of Socialist conviction in his breast, to every honest worker, it is abundantly clear from the results of the Genoa Conference that it is the duty of the international working class to intervene with the greatest energy against the politics of the capitalist governments. No less a man than the English Prime Minister, Lloyd George, has openly and clearly proclaimed to the world that if things go on as they are. The motion of the Russian Soviet Government to put the question of disarmament on the agenda was defeated by the protest of French Imperialism. The motion of Lloyd George to secure a peace for ten years will remain a mere scrap of paper, so long as the capitalist states are armed and the Versailles Treaty remains in force. The differences between England and France which revealed themselves in their most acute form at the Genoa Conference already indicate the future battlefield on which fall as victims in the interests of capitalist profits.

The demands which the Allies make upon Soviet Russia are directed against the whole international working class. The workers of all lands have fought for these things,—that the factories shall belong to the community and not to individual exploiters. And in Genoa the chief issue in the struggle is nothing else than a demand for the restitution of the Russian factories, mines and docks to the foreign capitalists.

The Russian People Should Return To Their Old Slavery

In addition to this they are to be compelled to pay milliards upon milliards of the debts of Czarism and the bourgeoisie. Every worker understands that it is necessary to oppose this. The Executive of the Communist International made the suggestion on the 23rd of April to the Second and Vienna Internationals to convene the Commission of Nine, the representatives of the three Internationals, at once so that they could decide on the convening of the Workers' World Congress. Two weeks went past with some petty negotiations and finally the Commission of Nine was to meet on the 7th of May.

The Secretary of the Second International, Macdonald, has expressed his agreement therewith, although he states he is prevented from attending. To the German Social Democracy belongs the credit of having sabotaged this meeting of the Commission of Nine in the interests of World Capital. The Party which by its vote on the 4th of August, 1914 gave the first death stroke to the old International, the Party which as the tool of imperialist, capitalist Germany covered itself with shame during the war; the Party which after the collapse of German imperialism prevented the victory of the proletarian revolution in Central Europe, the Party which gave back to the bourgeoisie without a blow the political power captured by the German working class on the 9th of November, 1918; the Party which helped the bourgeoisie to reestablish its power on the bones of fifteen thousand workers slaughtered by Noske's guards—this Party now seeks by every means to prevent the beginning of common international action by the proletariat. It now declares openly and clearly in its Press, that it is "premature" to convene the Commission of Nine and still more so the Worker's World Congress. One is astounded and asks how it is possible that the German Social Democracy prevents the meeting of the International Workers' Congress just as the day approaches on which

French Imperialism Will Lay Its Bill Before the German People

But it is in this day of presentation, this 31st of May on which Poincare will present his bill to the German people that the explanation of the attitude of the German Social Democrats lies. Just as it has subjected itself body and soul to the German bourgeoisie, just as little does it dare to struggle against the world bourgeoisie and the setting aside of the Treaty of Versailles. All its hopes are centered in diplomacy and chicanery, none are bound up with the self-defense of the international proletariat. Like a good child it renounces any insurrection against the world bourgeoisie in order to be spared by it and sabotages the meeting of the Workers' World Congress. The German Social Democracy sabotages the meeting of the Workers' many millions of workers will again World Congress because it fears that it will also be compelled in Germany to sit round a table with the other workers' parties in order to deliberate how the German workers can jointly fight against the enormous burden of taxes with which they are threatened.

Working Men and Women!

The Vienna International, faithful to her part which is to conceal what exists and to mask the real state of affairs, seeks to raise the hope that it is only a question of technical reasons for the postponing of the session of the Commission of Nine for a week.

We warn you not to believe this! Whoever was capable of observing matters at Genoa for a month without feeling that immediate action ought to be taken, whoever after this month seeks to further postpone the meeting of the Commission of Nine, has proved that not technical but political reasons are holding him back from common action.

If you desire that the World Congress of the working class take place, that it result not in the acceptance of paper resolutions as was the case at the Congress of the Amsterdam International at Rome, but that it lead to practical action, then you must not be silent, you must not wait until the diplomats of the Vienna International have convinced the diplomats of the Second International of the harmlessness of a Workers' World Congress, then you, working men and working women must, without regard to the party to which you belong,

Take the Matter of the Workers' World Congress Into Your Own Hands!

We herewith appeal to the workers of all parties who are in favor of the united front of the proletariat against the offensive of capital to form in every workshop, in every city, joint committees to promote the Workers' World Congress and to compel their local and central party and trade union organizations to pronounce in favor of the immediate convening of the Workers' World Congress.

Working Men and Women!

If you, without regard to the party to which you belong, powerfully raise your voice for the convening of the Workers' World Congress, your leaders will think ten times before they go on with their sabotaging.

The Second International has seriously violated the Berlin Agreement of the three Executives. It will rest with the Communist International to declare what are the consequences. It is the business of the proletariat without regard to party to see to it that the energetic unmistakable call of the whole proletariat now rings forth.

Enough of sabotage of the proletarian united front!

Immediate convening of the Workers' World Congress.

The Delegation of the Executive Committee of the Communist International.

News of Workers Party A[illegible] State and Nation

Great W[illegible]k of F.S.R. [illegible] Big O[illegible]

The Friends of Soviet Russia, which must be regarded as the most important of the workers' famine relief organizations in the world, has collected more than $650,000 in cash and $400,000 in clothing, food, tools etc.

More than One Million Dollars from the Workers of America to the Workers of Soviet Russia

Taking into consideration the acute economic depression that has held America in its grasp in the past two years, the strikes of the miners and other struggles, this must be accounted an achievement.

Up to April 1, the Workers' International Famine Relief Committee had collected nearly 500,000,000 marks for famine relief. Of this sum, the Friends of Soviet Russia furnished more than half—255,000,000 marks.

Lining Up With the F. S. R.

Canada has been doing yeoman work for relief. Up to a few weeks ago, however, there was a large organization in Winnipeg, with more than 60 branches, still working outside the F. S. R.

This organization has joined the forces of the F. S. R., which now operates in all of the important cities of the United States and Canada.

This denotes affiliations in more than 230 cities—a widespread organization embracing hundreds of thousands of workers.

Tool Drive Under Way

Despite the splendid accomplishments of the F. S. R. and the other famine relief organizations, the situation in Soviet Russia has become worse.

Reports emanating from Russia reveal that no hope is to be expected until the new harvest is in. That cannot be before the end of August. Even that offers little, since the long famine has eaten out the lives of the people, has weakened them and made them prey to all kinds of epidemics.

The full amount of seed, furthermore, could not be delivered. Railroad facilities were not sufficient. Added to this, is the terrible want of tools, of farming implements and machinery. Here is a situation crying for help.

The Friends of Soviet Russia's Tool Drive is just about to begin. Tools of all kinds are wanted. Saws, hammers, scythes, files, lathes, engines, pumps, locomotives, tractors, threshers reapers; there is no tool that Soviet Russia does not need in enormous quantities.

Organizations Pledging Tractors

Branches of the Friends of Soviet Russia are pledging themselves to buy one or more tractors, the machine most wanted in Russia.

Workers are getting together to buy machines of all kinds. The appeal to the unions is strong. They know what it means to be without tools.

American workers, in particular, having been accustomed to the most highly improved types of machinery, can appreciate what a machine breakdown represents. A ready response, therefore, is awaited.

[illegible] Peril

[illegible] political scare thrown [illegible] by William [illegible] from them. [illegible] they have no country [illegible] are obliged to offer for sale [illegible] to secure the means [illegible] working class of America [illegible] Gompers, the [illegible] yellow Socialist [illegible]

And when the [illegible] out of the purchase of this [illegible] and starve as far as the [illegible]

There is a real yellow peril [illegible] however, and the key can be found [illegible] reactionary head of the American F[illegible] Labor Leaders of the Schlesinger type and the muddy-yellow editors of the yellow Socialist press such as Ervin of the Call and Cahan of the Forward.

Not very long ago the Call used to take a periodical crack in its editorial columns at the corrugated fossil who presides over the destinies of the A. F. of L. The writer of these idiotorials divided his satire equally between Sam Gompers and the head of the Civic Federation. He still attacks the Civic Federation but Gompers is now featured in the news columns of the Call as a champion of labor and the editorial columns are silent as to his misdeeds. We do not see how the Call can much longer continue its attacks on the Civic Federation and remain in the good graces of Gompers, seeing that Sam and Eastley are boon companions and members of the Ancient and Honorable Order of Enemies of Soviet Russia.

Grease Schlesinger Machine

Since the Left Wing movement in 1919 the Call and the little group that maintains itself thru its influence have little by little consigned whatever revolutionary principles they ever held to the scrap heap. At one time proponents of the policy of "boring from within" they are now horrified at the idea of the Communists permeating the unions with revolutionary propaganda. So at first they formed an ENTENTE with the reactionary labor leaders to squelch the left elements in the unions and when they perceived that this gentlemen's agreement was not having the desired effect a more ironclad alliance was formed which if not signed by a notary public is none the less working smoothly as was demonstrated at the Convention of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union.

The treatment accorded the Left Wingers in the I. L. G. W. U. is a sample of what is in store for the workers in all the other unions. Schlesinger in approved style grandiloquently announced his intention of declining the re-nomination for the presidency of the union. The alleged reason was the criticism of his administration by the left elements. Immediately the machine was oiled and greased (and a greasy machine it is) and resolutions began to pour in requesting Schlesinger to reconsider his decision. Even Untermyer who is busy trying to smash the Building Trades and the Hebrew Bakers Unions, was one of those who considered it a public misfortune should the President of the International persist in his refusal.

Cahan Makes Threats

Sam Gompers, who is making faces at Untermyer for the edification of the workers, appeared at the convention and joined Untermyer in his eulogy of Schlesinger. Cahan, that slimy political prostitute whose praises are being sung in all the capitalist press for making of the Forward a tool of the yellow labor fakers came on the scene and joined in the fray. He wanted a "United Front" against the progressive elements in the union. The yellows had expelled every left winger they possibly could, and Cahan threatened to drive out of the labor movement thru the medium of his yellow sheet any delegate or group of delegates to the convention who would not agree and faithfully work to secure the unanimous election of Schlesinger.

The New York Call is the English affinity of the Forward. They are soul mates and as far as political morality is concerned both are beyond the pale of the moral code of the revolutionary movement. Both these sheets are putting up a United Front against the movement to win the workers from the reactionaries, and to bring about the amalgamation of the craft unions into industrial unions. They fear the rising tide in the ranks of the workers and in their panic they resort to the most extreme tactics to retain their influence. Hence the efforts of the Call to get the support of the reactionary labor leaders in New York to boost its dwindling circulation.

[illegible]

The [illegible] Branch, Workers Party, will hold a picnic at [illegible] Sunday, June 18. [illegible] Directions: Take [illegible] train to Myrtle Ave., change for Wyckoff Ave., take Richmond Hill Car to Park.

Fight the "Yellow Peril"

The yellow peril in the form of this alliance between the yellow socialists and the extreme reactionary labor leaders must be fought with a powerful stream of propaganda thru the medium of a daily press. Already the Jewish radicals have in the Freiheit a fighting daily that is sending the cold shivers down the spines of the old machine in the I. L. G. W. U. This accounts for the frantic attempts of the Forward-Call-Gompers-Hillquit - Schlesinger combination to retain their stranglehold on the machine. They know they are fighting a losing battle but they are determined to hold on as long as they can.

An English Daily is a dire necessity to give the workers the inspiration that they need at this very critical period.

What we need now is a daily English paper here in New York to combat the Yellow Peril of the reactionary alliance and to infuse a fighting spirit in the ranks of the workers.

The time is ripe for the Daily Worker. Down with the Yellow Peril. Up with the United Front of Labor against the capitalists and their labor lieutenants!

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

The Children's Crusade for Amnesty has issued a financial statement from their headquarters in Washington, which shows that $4,036.78 was collected at the sixteen cities they visited between St. Louis and Washington during April. This amount was used to defray their railroad and other expenses en route. New York radicals, who were interested in the pathetic but brave little group who visited us on April 25th, will be glad to know that the New York meetings head the list with a total proceeds of $869.20. The expenses for the Webster Hall meeting arranged by the Workers Defense Union and other items incidental to their visit were $248.07, which left a clear balance to the Crusade of $621.13.

[illegible] to Bear Mountain.

After the excursionists have enjoyed themselves to the full by listening to the excellent program arranged on the boat, after they have taken in the beautiful scenery along the Hudson, and after they have partaken of the delicious luncheon to be served on the boat at moderate prices, they will alight at Bear Mountain Park to spend an enjoyable afternoon and evening in one of the most attractive spots along the Hudson.

The price per ticket has been fixed at $1.10. All passengers, with the exception of children in arms, will have to pay the regular price. The steamship company charges the Friends of Soviet Russia 66 cents for every passenger, adult or child; this makes it necessary to charge everybody so that the expense of hiring the boat may be covered.

Secondly, a slight acquaintance with the program will convince everyone that it would be impossible to enjoy a similar program without paying more for a ticket. The best talent obtainable, the most artistic dancers and singers, actors and performers, have been engaged for the occasion.

Finally, all the excursionists know that the proceeds of this affair are for Russian Relief, and they will certainly not consider $1.10 too much to pay for a single ticket.

The latter are $1.10 in advance, $1.50 at the boat, and can be obtained at the following places: 240 E. 23 St.; 64 E. 4th St.; Rand School Book Store, 208 E. 12th St.; 431 E. 6th St.; 138 W. 13th St.; 1403 5th Ave.; 143 E. 103 St.; 350 E. 81st St; 1292 Washington Ave.; 1347 Boston Road; 1470 Wilkins Ave.; 455 Grand St., Brooklyn, 10 Siegel St.; 226 Roebling St.; 296 Sackman St.; 1801 Pitkin Ave.; 764 40th St.; Obrana, 360 E. 73 St.; 606 E. 140th St.; Stern's, 1337 Wilkins Ave.

New York Picnic July 30th

Local Greater New York will hold a picnic, July 30th, at Elmhurst Park, Elmhurst, L. I., to raise funds for the coming elections.

Elmhurst Park is located twenty minutes' ride from Queensborough Bridge and is one of the most beautiful parks in the near vicinity, with large, spacious grounds.

One of the features of the picnic will be the acceptance of a challenge from the National Office to the Local of a baseball match.

Other features will be athletic exhibition by the Finnish comrades, with prizes for the best exhibition, a one-act play by the Workers Drama, a concert by the Lettish comrades, as well as games for men, women and children—ball-playing, dancing, bowling, special cafeteria. The park will open at 10.30.

[illegible] Work in the Labor Unions

Local Greater New York has com[illegible] registration of membership [illegible] reports that about 40 per cent [illegible] affiliated and active in trade unions.

The Executive Committee feels that with such a degree of organization and activity we cannot hope to revolutionize the trade unions and dislodge the present reactionary leadership.

The socialists and socialistic leadership in the trade unions of New York have begun another campaign against the communists and left wingers with the object of removing them from any influence in the unions.

They have begun this work at the conventions which they will no doubt follow up in their organizations.

This decision of the "socialist" bureaucrats is in tune with the recent activities of the Gompers reactionaries in their attitude toward the Trade Union Educational League and is the result of the constructive work of the militant elements within the past year.

The reactionaries already realize the danger of the new program of action adopted by the revolutionaries of this country.

The members of the Workers Party should continue this work more intensively. They must join their unions and learn how to win over the workers in these organizations to their program. A series of membership meetings will be held as follows;

Sections 1 and 2—Tuesday, June 6th, 208 E. 12th St., basement, 8 P.M.

Bronx and Yonkers Section—June 9th, 1347 Boston Road, 8 P.M.

Harlem and Yorkville—Monday, June 12th, 243 E. 84th St., 8 P. M.

Williamsburg and Brownsville—June 13th, Tuesday, Lithuanian Headquarters—Lorimer, cor. Ten Eyck Sts.

Borough Park—June 16th, Friday, Finnish Hall, 764 40th St., Brooklyn.

[illegible] Campaign of Open Air Meetings for the Summer in Philadelphia

By M. KUSHINSKY

Secretary, City Central Committee

PHILADELPHIA.—Local Philadelphia of the Workers' Party has secured permits for 20 street corners for open air meetings. More have been applied for.

Meetings are already being held with available speakers at the following places: Front and Dauphin Sts., Kensington and Indiana Sts. These will be kept up all summer on Fridays and Saturdays.

A speakers' club has been organized to meet every second and fourth Tuesday, at 7 p. m., at the party headquarters. All comrades who have some ability as speakers, or to act as chairman, are urged to attend these meetings and help carry on this work.

Plans are going forward for a big mass meeting with Joseph M. Coldwell, and another with one of the comrades, recently released from the New York state prisons.

The City Central Committee is developing considerable activity, and all delegates are urged to attend the meetings regularly every first and third Tuesdays.

The June 17th picnic, to be addressed by Ben-Bitlow, will be one of the biggest ever held in Philadelphia. All party members must join in making this affair a huge success.

JURORS HIT BY CONSCIENCE

Two of the jurors who sent seven I. W. W. members to prison for 25 to 40 years in the trial arising out of the Centralia, Wash., tragedy on Armistice Day, 1919, have become conscience-stricken, and have repudiated their verdict in a joint affidavit which expresses the belief that all seven—and another now in an insane asylum—were innocent of killing or injuring any one that day.

ST. LOUIS.—The board of directors of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers has ratified the joint resolution for a closer alliance between miners and the 16 standard railroad labor organizations.

World imperialists are having a hard time trying to decide whether a revolution has really taken place in Bulgaria. The peasant dictatorship, which seems to dominate, announces that it is the "friend of new Russia," which should help them decide.

Cain, What of Your Brother?

Reports from Berlin state that the Anti-Soviet Social Revolutionaries and Mensheviks are a little timid about going to Moscow to defend their partners-in-crime against the proletarian dictatorship.

They are afraid, it is said, that the workers and peasants of Soviet Russia, who have successfully fought their alliance with foreign interventionists and internal counter-revolutionists, will not receive them with open arms.

They are afraid, it is said, that the ill-mannered proletarians of Moscow will greet them, as they did Theodor Liebknecht, brother of the murdered Karl, who came to Moscow with Emil Vandervelde to do the dirty work of reaction. They asked the living Liebknecht, who has come to defend the traitors to the working class:—

"Cain, what have you done with your brother?"

Karl Radek, at the Conference of the three Internationals at Berlin, promised Vandervelde that the records of himself and other Cains of the Second and Two-and-a-half Internationals would be laid bare during the Moscow trial.

No doubt, both Theodor Liebknecht and Emil Vandervelde, like the Social Revolutionaries and Mensheviks at Berlin, will regret the day they ever interfered with the buzz saw of Soviet Rule in Russia.

"No army can long resist the Demon Hunger," writes John Gatherum, secretary, District No. 29, West Virginia coal miners. Let the Workers of New York City rally in support of the Relief Committee for the West Virginia Miners now carrying on its campaign here.

Help Build the United Front

The Workers Party has undertaken a great task. It has inaugurated the campaign to build the UNITED FRONT of labor in the United States of America, part of the world front against the capitalist exploiters.

This front must be built out of the organized ranks of the wage workers, out of the masses of the exploited men and women workers.

It is therefore essential that every worker in the land should be reached with the United Front Manifesto issued by the Workers Party Central Executive Committee. That should be the goal, nothing less.

The party organizations, in all sections of the country, should immediately map out the campaign that will carry the UNITED FRONT struggle into every labor union in their respective communities.

No worker dare reject the message of the UNITED FRONT in this hour of crisis. This effort will win many workers and many workers' organizations to contribute financially toward spreading this solidifying program in less favorable districts.

Read again the manifesto as published in the May 27th issue of THE WORKER. Turn to the last issue and read again how the coal miners, in their present struggle, would be helped by the emancipating struggle of the UNITED FRONT.

The UNITED FRONT campaign is under way. Are you going to help? Or, will you remain one of those who only wait and watch?

The future will judge you by what you do NOW.

Fifty-one Communists in Esthonia have been convicted and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment. No protest is heard from the McDonalds, the Vanderveldes, the Hendersons, and especially from the democracy-loving American Socialist Party. But then, Esthonia is not under the rule of a proletarian dictatorship. It is much easier to protest against the "cruel" Soviet rule in Georgia.

Memories on Memorial Day

Memories of Memorial Day, 1922, on University Place, in New York City.

A squad of police working from a flivver, advertised as having been secured for the pursuit of payroll bandits, but in reality being used on this Memorial Day to mop up stray fruit peddlers trying to win a few pennies from holiday throngs, without City Licenses.

"I'm trying to get a living for my family and I get pinched," complained a swarthy Italian, standing beside his banana cart, as the officer wrote down an order hailing him before the judge.

The stalwart Jew, vender of cherries, just smiled the smile of oppressive centuries, as the Police Sergeant threatened, and we read the little sign on his cart that said, "Please don't take any samples." Those samples, purloined by would-be purchasers, were the difference between profit and loss.

Perhaps the added license fees were needed for the increase in Mayor "Red Mike" Hylan's salary, or to meet the expenses of his next winter's trip to Palm Beach.

"Move on there," bullied the police, as the crowd gathered. "We can arrest you, too. Get out. Move on. Beat it," and the crowd moved, all except one, until he was pushed along, unceremoniously.

But before he left he spoke to the throng, "That's the way they treat the workers. I'll bet they're afraid John Wanamaker will lose some of his business."

After a while the flivver with its police moved over into Union Square hunting other peddlers, who were fighting poverty, hunger, WITHOUT LICENSES, on a holiday, now also compelled to meet police oppression, the power of the merciless capitalist state.

Thus was Memorial Day, 1922, providing rich memories for the oppressed, memories to aid in solidifying resistance to an oppressive system, so that, perhaps, the dead, on whose behalf Memorial Day came into existence, did not die in vain.

Gompers will attack Communism.

Gompers will oppose recognition of Soviet Russia.

Gompers will oppose trade relations with the First Workers' Republic.

Gompers and his crew will howl down all radicals in the convention.

Gompers admits there are 6,000,000 unemployed but he will do nothing for them.

Gompers will oppose amalgamation of craft unions into industrial unions.

Gompers will oppose any real assistance to the coal miners' strike.

Gompers will only weep over the wage cut handed the railroad workers.

We know this because the Gompers' administration program in the American Federation of Labor is an opposing program, opposed to all progress in the labor movement.

The only interest in this convention will consist in watching the forces of the Trade Union Educational League get their baptismal fire from the Gompers' machine.

This convention of the A. F. of L. is the first held since the T. U. E. L. was organized. It cannot be expected that the League forces will constitute a big factor at the Cincinnati Convention. But they will make their power felt.

The reactionists of the Gompers' machine will be faced with the first really organized effort of the Militants in the labor movement.

That effort has already been strengthened by the attacks directed against the League by Gompers himself, and also by his first lieutenant, Matthew Woll, vice-president.

The Cincinnati Convention should prove to large numbers of militant trade unionists in this country that the Trade Union Educational League is their organization, that it is fighting, conducting the lone fight for their best interests.

Always the Frame-up

Five court jurors in the Montesano, Wash., I. W. W. trial, have signed affidavits declaring their belief in the innocence of the seven workers now serving long prison terms for the Armistice Day shootings at Centralia.

The Centralia frame-up was a well-planned plot by the Chamber of Commerce acting under cover of 100 per cent Americanism. The hideous nature of that frame-up is only now coming to light as the cloak of prejudice slips from the minds of hostile jurors.

This case now adds another to the long list of instances in which labor has been "framed" by the ruling class.

In Massachusetts hidden witnesses are being unearthed at this late date, witnesses pushed aside by the prosecution because they could testify that Sacco and Vanzetti were not the payroll bandits who committed the murder with which our comrades are charged.

The frame-up against Mooney and Billings has been so thoroly exposed that no intelligent person doubts their innocence.

The attempt to legally lynch William Blizzard, official of the West Virginia coal miners, was so evidently a frame-up that it didn't go over, it proved a dud even in the capitalist law courts.

The "open shop" drive in the building trades in Chicago results in a frame-up against the most reactionary officials of labor. The kept press considers no charge too vile to make against the labor movement.

Two of our own women comrades are now in prison in New York State charged with distributing literature they had never seen. The New York City police force found it easy to frame them, to "discover" literature in the homes of these women, literature that had in fact been placed there by these same police, enforcers of capitalist "law and order."

The use of the frame-up only shows the lengths to which the ruling class is willing and able to go in order to maintain itself in power.

The ruling class of today is only able to make use of the frame-up successfully because it is in control everywhere, in the halls of legislation, in the courts, in the police headquarters; its power permeates the capitalist system.

The workers will never come into power until that system is destroyed and a new social system established that the producers dominate and control, a system that must grow out of their organized strength and intelligence. The frame-up is a bludgeon driving the workers onward to the creation of this new social system,—driving them towards Communism.

It Was Born to Fight

"The Labor Herald" is the official publication of the Trade Union Educational League. Its June issue, "No. 4," has just arrived.

That "The Labor Herald" was born to fight has already been proved by the spectacular events of its short career. It has made enemies. It has won friends.

Samuel Gompers says, "The Labor Herald is a monumental brazen publication."

Tom Mann, the British labor spokesman, says: "The Labor Herald is comprehensive, argumentative and unanswerable; I do not understand how you can get thru with such a thorogoing document."

That just about hits the two opposing points of view.

"The League Under Fire," is an article in the June issue in which Earl R. Browder reviews the struggle of "The Labor Herald" and "The League" up to the present time, the latest assault being "Nine pages of inflammatory attack in the American Federationist," the official organ of the American Federation of Labor.

Browder replies to Gompers' "May First Scare" issued in Chicago, in which he attacked "The League" and won an eight-column headline in the anti-labor Chicago Tribune, on the morning of May Day, May 1, reading as follows: "GOMPERS HITS RED MENACE."

Browder says that, "Gompers himself, and a flock of his 'organizers,' have been going from place to place, denouncing 'The League' and organizing the opposition against it. But his only weapons are still, as they have been from the beginning, slander, prejudice, villification and untruth."

Every militant in the labor movement ought to have a copy of this June issue of "The Labor Herald," containing Browder's article, "The League Under Fire." Wherever a Gompers' untruth raises its head, hit it with the article.

The issue also contains a wealth of timely material. J. B. Salutsky writes about the conventions of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Salutsky is educational director of the "Amalgamated" and knows the needle industry. Arne Swabeck writes on "The Building Trades Problem"; Joe Peterson, on "Towards Unity in the Building Trades"; William Z. Foster on "The Railway Employes' Department Convention"; Fritz Heckert on "Struggles and Difficulties in the German Labor Movement," and Jay Fox on "Metal Workers Awake!" There are the various departments as usual, including "The International," interesting features and the always excellent editorials.

Get "The Labor Herald!" Read it! Get others to read it!

In the struggle between poverty and talent, poverty generally triumphs.—ART YOUNG

Algernon Lee is another "Socialist" who is trying to cover up the reactionary declarations of the recent Cleveland Convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. Referring to the "left" delegates he says, "they were not ousted because they held and expressed unorthodox views, but because, in the judgment of the convention, they had used disruptive methods within the organization." That sounds pretty much like the autocrat of the post office, Burleson, during the war, who suppressed labor papers, not because of their views, but because they interfered with the conduct of the war. But, in the eyes of the yellow reformists, any excuse will serve their purpose.

23 Cents an Hour

The United States Railroad Labor Board, at Chicago, has presented the maintenance-of-way employes and unskilled laborers around railroad shops a Fourth of July gift in the shape of a wage cut averaging 13.2 per cent, effective July 1st.

The workers' spokesmen on the board opposed, but the railroad members and the "public's representatives" joined hands and decided that:

"Common labor on railroads will now receive a minimum of 23 cents an hour."

Even for the 10-hour day this means that these workers will get but a mere pittance of $2.30 per day, which the Labor Board has the audacity to claim is:

"In excess of that paid to similar labor in other industries."

In other words, because the lumber trust, the steel trust, and other "open shop" task masters, are able to maintain sub-slavery conditions in these industries, therefore, approximating conditions should prevail on the railroads.

The lowest paid workers on the railroads have been attacked first. There will be other wage cuts affecting 500,000 skilled shop workers and about 200,000 clerks, telegraphers, station employes and other small classes. It is stated that:

The "Big Five" transportation groups—the conductors, engineers, trainmen, firemen and switchmen, will not be affected.

The aristocracy of the railroad workers will remain in undisputed sway over the wage situation in the transportation industry. They will stand as staunch allies of the money power in keeping the low-paid, unskilled in submission.

In attacking the majority decision of the Labor Board, the minority labor members, declared that:

"The rates of pay established by this decision are not based upon the human needs of the hundreds of thousands of families involved.

"They are insufficient to provide these families with the absolute essentials. The earnings of this large group of railroad employes will not provide the father of a family with as much food as is allowed convicts in the Cook County, Illinois, jail."

It will be remembered that the cry for "Bread!" was the first demand of the general cry for "Bread! Peace! Land!" of the Russian workers and peasants as they swept away the Czardom and established their Soviet Republic.

By the decision of the Labor Board, 400,000 railroad workers have been added to the growing army of oppressed in this country being forced to join in the common cry for "Bread!"

This is no doubt only one of the sequels of the banquet given recently by President Harding to a large number of railroad magnates at the White House.

And then Wall Street and Washington wonder at the growing power of Communism even in the United States of America.

The police smashed a demonstration of London jobless in front of the Bank of England. But the pillars of capital must have shivered a little before "order" was restored.

The Associated Press now nails the tale that Lenin is a "physical and nervous wreck" as "ridiculous." Yet that fake will be just as hard to kill as the oft-repeated story of Lenin's death.

President Harding's banquets to the steel barons and railroad kings are now of things past and forgotten. The 12-hour shift in the steel mills remains and railroad rates have not been reduced. Yet the American workers are supposed to fall for this sort of bunk. Will they?

The coal mine operators and their newspaper and financial associates no longer are pretending that the coal strike is not hitting them hard. A special dispatch to the New York Evening Post from Pittsburgh, Pa., admits that the walkout in the non-union fields continues to be exceedingly disappointing—to the operators.

Horatio Bottomley, the raving jingo editor of the London weekly, John Bull, gets seven years for stealing $750,000, mostly from poor workers who fell victims to his schemes. But he retains his seat in parliament pending appeal. Criminals are just as "respectable" in England, if they are members of the House of Commons, as they are in our own congress. Senator Newberry should send an official congratulation to Horatio.

Walter S. Ward, petted son of the millionaire bread trust head, seems to have established a travelling "Hollywood" for organized baseball. He is reported to have kept night life booming in all the cities his father's baseball team visited, especially [illegible]. This news should be a great encouragement to sweating bakery workers, toiling before glowing ovens, to accept new wage decreases.

"Give Us Food!" Cry From West Virginia

Here is a letter from West Virginia straight to you. It was written by John Gatherum, Secretary, District 29, United Mine Workers of America, to Lawrence Dwyer, international executive board member of the miners' union for West Virginia, who is now in New York. But it carries a message to every reader of THE WORKER. It is in part as follows.

WOMEN JOIN THE BATTLE

The women are taking up the battle. They realize even more than the men what the operator's terms mean for them and their children should this strike be lost.

This morning, at Sprague, women to the number of 30 or 40 met what few men, some 8 or 10, had started work. Now, I understand, these women are cited to appear before Squire Lilly here in Beckley. I leave it to you to guess what they can expect from him.

I am also told that at Eccles the same thing happened, altho I have not heard that any of the women there have been arrested.

It seems to me that the injunction of Judge McClintic is proving a boomerang because with the men shut off from the fight, unless they are ready for prison, the women are rising to the occasion.

I understand that at some of the mines they are now offering higher wages in order to get the men to break the strike. So far they have not had much success. It is true that some of the places are working but everywhere comes the cry, "Assure us of some food so we can live and we will strike again."

Starve While Working

The money we have had from New York has been spread out over the field to the very best of our ability.

We find the cost of food supplies of every kind is rapidly rising. If that is any indication of the future I am utterly at a loss to know what we could get to live on were we assured of steady work at the 1917 scale. With work like it was last year they would simply starve while working.

I had a letter from Meadow Creek, which we have been absolutely unable to reach with aid for several weeks, and I am told that there they are eating more "greens" than anything else.

Also Fought by Courts

We are having the tent colony a Thayer enlarged by people fro Laurel Creek, who are being evicte We have no more tents and are un able to buy any, so they are doublin up under what shelter there is. President Sprouse gave instructions toda that some tar paper shelters be buil on the tent ground.

The men are only anxious abou the women and children. For them selves they tell me they will cam under the trees. At Price Hill t men are still being evicted. This i the worst weapon the operators hav to use, because of the natural fear f the health of the children.

War in its most brutal form ca not be much worse, and the wor of it is that we have a poor show t fight back. The courts take care o that.

We are desperately in need o finance. I have relieved Eccles wher we have close to 600 men, a grea majority of whom have families, t the extent of $350 in two weeks.

These men and women are cer tainly putting up a battle. But I wi further say that conditions are suc all over the field, that if Judge Mc Clintic wants business in the way o giving sentences for contempt of hi injunction he is likely to get th chance, because the men will com together to talk over the situatio whether he likes it or not.

Anti-Union Offensive Grows as the A. F. of L. Meets at Cincinnati, O.

Wages, Children and Union Funds Are All Objects of Bitter Attack; Labor Faces Return to Feudal Status

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

On the eve of the convention of the American Federation of Labor the employing class of the United States, thru that efficient medium, the United States Supreme Court, has renewed its challenge to the labor movement.

The Coronado decision, laying down the rule that unions are liable for damages to business and property caused by a strike for which they are responsible, means that with the judiciary in the hands of the employers, as it is, the bankruptcy of the existing unions is only a matter of time.

The pussyfooting policy of the American Federation of Labor under the leadership of Sam Gompers and other fossils has had its inevitable result.

The movement must now completely change its tactics or go out of business. Its labored attempts to [illegible] the industrial and political lords have been rewarded in the same manner that cowards are always compensated.

Gompers, of course, fulminates at the decision but his utterances on the question are [illegible] of the real function of the supreme court.

An additional slap has been handed labor; as if for good measure, that pet of the reformers, the child labor law, has also been declared unconstitutional. There is much weeping and wailing among the sob sisterhood and talk of a constitutional amendment.

A GHASTLY FAILURE

Not a single word in the official pronouncements of the trade union leaders would lead one to believe that they have the slightest inkling of the fact that the spineless policy of the labor movement itself is the sole reason why child labor is an issue here in the twentieth century. There has been no real attempt made to organize industry and TAKE the children out of the factories. They will be there until this is done no matter what any court decides.

The begging and "good boy" policy of the American Federation of Labor stands today a ghastly failure from every angle as it is about to meet for its annual wind fest.

No convention of the Federation has ever been called upon to deal with so many vital issues as the one that begins its sessions in Cincinnati June 12th. Never was there a time when the membership waited more anxiously for some sign that a militant policy would be set forth by officials whose salaries warrant the assumption that they have some brains.

It is more than probable however that the militant minority will be stronger than ever before but that the old machine, at the risk of jeopardising the future of labor will adhere to the policies of the past without change.

There is one thing that the present trade union officialdom fears more than the employers and that is the radicals and their program. With the bosses, a compromise can be reached by being sufficiently servile. With the reds there can be no compromise, it is a struggle between the old and the new in the labor movement. The bureaucracy hates new policies more than it hates the bosses.

When this is understood many

Against the Next War the World Revolution!

[illegible] consider the international situation confronting the world's working class.

This gathering of the spokesmen of organized workers in 36 nations did not delude itself into believing that labor had anything to expect from the meeting at Genoa.

It was looked upon, even as the Conference planned for The Hague is now considered, "a breathing space for capitalism."

The world economic situation, showing the big part played by the United States, is reviewed, and the reasons set forth why a new world-war threatens.

Against this threat of new imperialistic wars the Enlarged Executive Committee of the Communist International advances a program for the Communist Parties of all countries to follow, declaring, however, that the only effective protection against "the threatening wars is the proletarian revolution that overthrows capitalism."

The main arguments of this theses on the question of combating war and the danger of war are as follows:

Why War Danger Threatens

The economic and political conflicts among the great capitalistic powers of Europe have not been settled.

Sharper conflicts between England, the United States and Japan are blooming forth.

France's role as England's competitor is growing in importance.

England's domination of the world market passed to the United States during the four-year wholesale imperialistic butchery.

The United States, formerly an exporter of raw materials, has now become an exporter of manufactured articles.

The United States has the lion's share of the world's gold reserve.

Japan's growing imperialism is pointed at the United States.

Notwithstanding the incurable conflict of interests between the great capitalist states, they are united in their readiness to overthrow Soviet Russia.

French diplomats are preparing to launch new military attacks against Soviet Russia, using Finland and Roumania as bases.

Soviet Russia must be ready to fight in the interest of the proletarian revolution.

The capitalist world is saturated with combustible material that may go off at any moment, resulting in new imperialistic wars.

The capitalist states are armed more heavily than before the war (1914-18).

Against the driving forces of capitalist imperialism that lead to world-wars, the pacifistic tendencies within the bourgeois order are absolutely powerless.

All alliances of capitalist states are no guarantees of peace, but of war dangers and preparations.

The Washington Conference is the latest proof that the capitalist world is neither able nor willing to secure peace for humanity.

Order and stability can be brought into the existing economic chaos, occasioned by the war, only after the revolutionary proletariat will have overthrown bourgeois rule.

Capitalist economy is declining and is approaching its end.

The most that capitalism can expect of Genoa is a breathing space, but it cannot save its life.

After Genoa, this question—world-wars or the proletarian world-revolution?—this question will remain on the historical order of the day.

Imperialism is capitalist reality, but bourgeois pacifism is capitalist illusion.

The only effective protection against the threatening wars is the proletarian revolution that overthrows capitalism.

The theses in full, that should be preserved for future reference and study, is as follows:

1—Thru the imperialistic war of 1914-1918 and thru the treaties of "peace" that concluded it (those of Versailles, Trianon, St. Germain, Sevres and Neuilly), the economic and political conflicts among the great capitalistic powers of Europe have not been settled.

They are spreading and intensifying under varied forms and conditions in the struggle for domination of the European and world markets.

Alongside of these, new economic and political conflicts have arisen

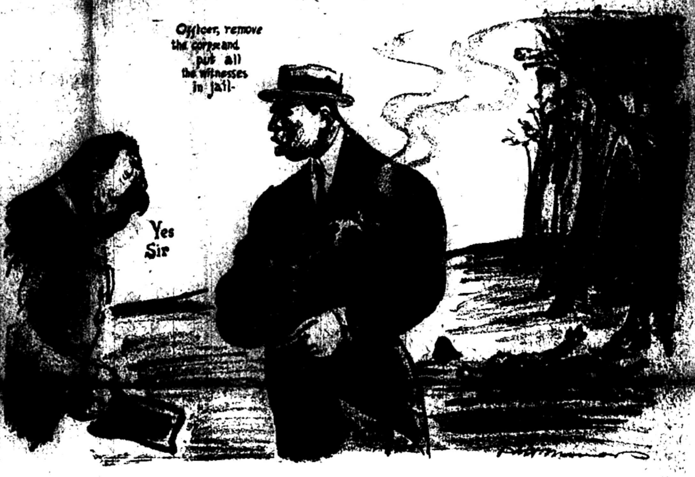
When a Son of the Rich Kills a Son of the Poor



Officer, remove the corpse and put all the witnesses in jail-
Yes Sir

Just an incident in the career of a wealthy young gentleman in "blowing in" the millions wrung by the bread trust out of the labor of the Bakery Workers.

The millionaire bread manufacturers' son must not be inconvenienced for merely killing a poor man's son. His excuses are given out by his lawyer—no policeman would dare ask him impolite questions.

No jail for the man who confesses the killing—but when alleged witnesses try to tell of the killing, they are sent to jail.

How different from the case of two young workingmen accused (and falsely accused) of murder in Massachusetts!

Sacco and Vanzetti are now awaiting electrocution for a murder they did not commit. Everybody knows they did not commit it. Yet, the police "framed" them up, kept them in jail many long months without bond, "third degreed" them, terrorized their friends, the witnesses and jurymen, to get a conviction.

Why? Because these are young class-conscious workingmen, active in strikes. Witnesses whose testimony convicted these workers now admit that they lied. But Sacco and Vanzetti are to die anyway because the capitalist class wants vengeance on them.

But, when wealthy young Mr. Walter S. Ward confesses that he killed a penniless boy, he must not be inconvenienced in his pleasure, while he spends the money the workers earn.

Protest Wave Sweeps Big Membership of Workmen's Circle

The reactionary attitude taken by the Toronto convention of the Workmen's Circle under the influence of the Socialist—Forward machine was repudiated in a workman-like manner by the special convention held in the Labor Temple, New York City, Saturday and Sunday.

At this gathering were represented 236 locals of the Workmen's Circle and 35 locals who were unable to send delegates have since sent resolutions endorsing the stand taken. These branches are located in 61 cities and 23 states.

The Toronto convention joined with the capitalist class of the world in denouncing Soviet Russia. The

As the Worker Sees It

Ten thousand "necessitous" children in Glasgow, Scotland, were deprived of free meals on the occasion of the recent holiday celebrating the birthday of George V, ruler over the British Empire. That's nothing. Capitalism in New York City has an all-year-around birthday celebrated by 60,000 children going continuously hungry.

Untermeyer raves but the amalgamation of the steel industry by the steel capitalists goes on just the same. We hope the workers in the steel industry learn the lesson of this amalgamation and unite their forces just as solidly as the capitalists are uniting theirs. It is "Amalgamation or Annihilation." The capitalists have chosen. How about labor?

Leslie's, illustrated weekly, and Judge, humorous weekly, are to unite during this month of universal matrimony, adopting the harmonizing slogan of "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness." If it had changed this sage saying and made it, "The pursuit of life, liberty and happiness," it might, at least, have been considered a little funny, because the "pursuit" as conducted by the wage-workers of the U. S. A. at the present time is indeed ridiculous.

The Vienna International again proves itself the catspaw of the Ramsay McDonald-Emil Vandervelde (Second) International by issuing a statement charging the Communist International with breaking up the united front that the Berlin Conference of the Three Internationals sought to establish. The statement of the Communist International published in last week's issue of THE WORKER should convince any doubting worker of this new betrayal of the Second International.

"How do they get that way?" asks the Davenport, Ia., Tribune, in commenting on the resolutions of the Dayton, Ohio, Socialists mourning the death of John H. Patterson, the cash register king. "Industrial Solidarity," the I. W. W. weekly calls it "A case of Socialist Insanity." Only the New York Call has stood the test. It comes back strong with a column article by a Dayton Socialist hitting at the Minneapolis Labor Review for ever having questioned the integrity and high-mindedness of the Dayton millionaire. The Call, by mistake, published the Labor Review article.

EDITOR'S NOTE:—The "open shop" drive is being conducted in two huge offensives at the present time, against the coal miners and against the building trades in many cities. This article on the struggle towards unity in the building trades should, therefore, be of great interest to all workers, no matter what their work. This article is taken from the June issue of "The Labor Herald." It is as follows:

There is serious division of Labor's forces in the Building Trades. Both nationally and locally our forces are broken up.

We are finding it impossible to get common action in the face of the most terrific attack which our unions have ever had to face.

We are attempting to meet the situation with antiquated, 18th century methods of craft unionism, while the employers have united all their forces so that they act together in the entire industry.

Due to the disease of [illegible] disputes, our organizations [illegible] back before the enemy.

STOP THUG RULE IN WEST VIRGINIA

[illegible] Russ Trade

By HARRY GODFREY

Powerful French interests are secretly negotiating for a Franco-Russian agreement, and a trade agreement between the two nations in all probability will be entered into within a year, possibly sooner, according to Charles Recht, who since the departure of L. C. Martens has been acting as the latter's representative in America "in all matters."

Recht has just returned from Russia with a commission not only to continue as attorney here for the Russian Government, but to act in a much wider capacity for that Government practically as its envoy.

U. S. the Last to Act

The United States, which once occupied among nations practically the same position as that now occupied by Russia, probably will be the last to recognize and restore trade and diplomatic relations with Russia, Recht said.

He expects all the other European nations to conclude agreements with Moscow as rapidly as possible after France shall have made a treaty, thus leaving the United States to get the "leavings" of the great trade and industrial revival which will follow.

He has been charged by the Russian Commissariat of Education to invite American motion picture interests to assist in the building up of the film industry in Russia, and in addition has been appointed general representative of the Russian Volunteer Fleet for the United States and Japan. This fleet has been reorganized as a corporation along lines similar to those under the Czarist regime, and action will be taken immediately to recover the property of the fleet in America.

Sees No More Trouble

"There will be no more political trouble in Russia," he said. There is no move of any kind against the present government, and there will be none.

Martens Heads Metal Industry

Mr. Martens, formerly Russian trade envoy to the United States, he said, now is a member of the Supreme Council of National Economy and head of the metal industry. Santeri Nurteva, chancellor of the former Russian Soviet Bureau here, is commissar of education in Karelia, following his complete exoneration of charges of lack of discipline in the Communist International for alleged attacks on Louis C. Fraina, who was editor of the Revolutionary Age here.

Most of the new enterprises which are being created in Russia he explained, under private management, are doing so on a basis of sharing profits half and half with the government. Private property is being recognized in various ways to the same extent, including oil and mining concessions.

"The Russian government, however," he added, "while keeping the title of everything, is making such compromises as are necessary to attract capital.

Recht Goes to Washington

"The Germans are penetrating the country very rapidly. Experts and pioneers of all kinds are pouring in from Germany in great numbers and taking a big part in the revival of industry. Stinnes, the German capitalist, is acquiring heavy Russian interests, and soon will have under his management a chain of hotels in Moscow."

Recht will go to Washington at once, where he will ask for an audience with the State Department to present his credentials and apprise the government of the exact nature of his authority from the Russian government.

At the White House Gates

Denied admission to lay their grievances before the President, the mothers and children of the Amnesty Crusade have taken places at the White House gates with banners bearing their appeal.

"Mr. President: Why do you refuse to see the wives and children of political prisoners?"

"Mr. President: 100 men are serving 10 to 20 years sentences for free speech. You pardoned others. Why not these?"

As the President passes to and from the White House in his motor he sees these banners held at his gates each by a woman with two children at her side.

The question of accepting affiliation of the British Communist Party will come before the 22nd Annual Conference of the British Labor Party, to meet June 27, at Edinburgh. The terrible Zinoviev must be hiding in the woods somewhere.

[illegible] strike fields. That The Worker is appreciated by the coal strikers is shown by the following letter received from John Gatherum, Secretary-Treasurer, District No. 29, United Mine Workers of America, with its offices at Beckley, West Va. Here it is:

Beckley, West Va., June 5, 1922.

Mr. J. Louis Engdahl,
Managing Editor, The Worker,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir and Brother:—

And I may add Comrade, because of the fact that I can fully understand that you also are in the fight to better the conditions of the Human Race.

I have had more than thirty years experience in the Coal Fields, nearly all in the New River District, and know the conditions that have led up to the present fight for Bread. That is what it actually means, because while we are fighting for other things as well as Bread, yet that is the main issue.

Death Rather Than Slavery

We might indeed eat the bread of Slavery and have fuller stomachs than we can get while fighting for Freedom, but while I am not myself a native born Mountaineer of West Va., I have been here from childhood, and can feel what the native born do, Mountaineers are always free, the "Motto of the State" and as even the Operators acknowledge eighty per cent of our Miners are native born, and would welcome death in battle rather than submit to slavery.

Death to themselves and their Women and Children by starvation is another matter.

Therefore we have been compelled to throw ourselves upon the charity of others and look more hopefully to our Brother Unionists and those who are already enlisted in the Struggle for Human Rights as opposed to Property Rights.

Lack of Solidarity Hurts

It is a fact that Union Leaders or those who continually point out to the Workers, that they are laboring under unjust conditions are always under Fire from the Capitalist, but that bothers them none at all, and means little in the issue of the battle. What does hurt is the lack of Solidarity among the Workers, and I fully agreed with your paper on what can be accomplished by "A United Front", and believe that a jealousy to be eliminated from the ranks of the Workers. I hardly know why it exists, as certainly the Labor Leader, who is conscientious in the exercise of his duties, has no "Flowery Bed of Ease".

I thank you and your associates for the co-operation Brother Dwyer tells me he has had from you, and will say now that it certainly is appreciated, and I further hope that it will mean that in the future, there will be a greater Solidarity not only in the ranks of the miners, but that we will all get closer together whether we work with Brains or Muscles.

Strike Situation Good

With reference to the general situation of the Strike Zone over which District No. 29 claims jurisdiction, it is in much better condition than any one (least of all the Coal Operators) could have believed it would be at this time.

The boasts were openly made when the Strike Call went out, that the miners would be crawling back to them before two weeks were past. More than two months have gone by since the strike was ordered, and they are not yet crawling back to any extent, altho in some cases, it would necessarily be nearly a crawl.

One of the men turned back by the women at Sprague, had his dinner pail overturned, and he had nothing in it except a very small piece of corn-bread and fat meat. Another case brought to me was of a man who got a job on the street and had nothing at all to eat before he started to work in the morning, and his wife and six children had nothing in the house. This man had to wait for several days before he could get his pay, and in the meantime the merchants refuse credit.

Again let me voice my appreciation and that of our associate officers also of the Rank and File, who understand what you are doing for us and them in New York. The officers here are experienced miners and expect to return to the mines. Therefore if for nothing else than self preservation, we must fight to a successful finish.

This is a personal letter to you, but if you want to use any part or all of it in your paper, I have no objection except that I am no correspondent, and my education was gained in the school of hard knocks.

John Gatherum
Secretary-Treasurer, Dist. No. 29,
U. M. W. of A., West Virginia.

[illegible] Bradon, national organizer, May 10, at Minneapolis.

Concerning the labor movement Bradon said:

"To the economic worker organizations such as the A. F. of L., the Railroad Brotherhoods, the Independent Industrial Organizations; Mass organizations such as the I. W. W., and to some extent the O. B. U.; to the progressive and reform political parties such as the Nonpartisan League, Farmer, Labor Parties, Socialist, etc.; to workers' class organizations, such as the Workers Party; to all of you we say, "If you are sincere in your contention when you say that you stand for a real democracy, you will not fail to align yourselves with all other groups and organizations whose mission is the achievement of democracy."

Recruit Anti-Labor Army

"To the organizations of progressive inclination we must make it clear that there are about three million unorganized ex-service men who at any time may be mustered by Reaction for reactionary purposes, of course.

"Even now the National Guard in various states is conducting a recruiting campaign so as to create a necessary fighting force to manhandle the striking coal miners when the button is pressed by the mine owners.

"It must be understood that hesitation on the part of the ex-service men to join the National Guard influences the civilian potential recruit to stay out. On the other hand, head-long plunging into the National Guard by the ex-service men creates a favorable recruiting field among the civilians.

"The problem then, is to remove as many of the three million ex-service men from the recruiting field as possible, for upon them the success or failure of recruiting is gauged.

"It is with a proposition of absorbing these three million men into our organizations that we turn to the progressive faction for assistance.

An Appeal for Help

"We ask, first, that the W. W. V. be indorsed not merely by signing a resolution to the effect, but by making your members acquainted with the principles and mission of the W. W. V.

"Secondly, we ask that in order to carry out a membership campaign of the magnitude that it essentially must be if it is to absorb the bulk of the three million unorganized ex-service men, a considerable sum of money will be needed.

"To overcome this difficulty we ask that all organizations favoring our policy and proposed membership campaign, see to it that every one of your members contribute five cents each towards a drive. It is at option, of course, with the organizations as to whether this contribution is to be made from the treasury fund or whether it is to be contributed by members individually."

That the World War Veterans do not believe that the late world war was the last struggle of its kind and are not fooled by the peaceful protestations of the Washington conference is evidenced by Bradon's concluding remarks.

See New Thieves' Quarrels

"Some may say that there is no potentiality of war for the immediate future. But then a closer examination of the international situation will leave no room for such an argument. And let us not forget what Carlyle said about war. 'War is a quarrel between thieves who too cowardly to fight their own battles, take the boys from the villages, stick them into uniforms, equip them with guns, and, like wild beasts, turn them upon one another on the battle field.' And the thieves may quarrel any day."

As the only organization of ex-soldiers really representative of the rank and file of the enlisted and drafted men the World War Veterans look to the labor movement for support. They have taken an unequivocal stand against the open shop and the union smashing campaign of the employers and have done much to discourage the violence of the white-collared mobs directed against labor and radical organization.

Jack Bradon, national organizer, is well-known in labor circles in New York and was also active in the street-car strike in Denver, Colorado, where he was singled out for persecution by the employers because of his work.

Struggle in Building Trades

and the employers were competing small contractors without great capital, then the divided craft unions had a chance to make a showing and obtain a few concessions.

But the industry has been changing. In the process of building, a revolution has taken place. New methods have been introduced, new materials have become common, and machinery is playing an ever greater part in the industry.

To-day, while suburban building remains technically simple, the dominating factor in the industry is the standard city building of steel and concrete. The new elements brought in by this change cut across our craft lines. This brings the craft unions into conflict.

The amount of work being limited, each craft wants to get the lion's share. We then have a mad scramble among them, often several claiming that the nature of the work places it under their jurisdiction. There is usually plenty of evidence on all sides, with nothing to decide between them but power. So they fight.

The test of battle has for many years been the only one to receive respect. The result is a continual, bitter fratricidal struggle, with consequent loss of power and demoralization.

The Employers' United Front

While we have been fighting among ourselves, the employers have been busy in another way. The rapid development of large and expensive machines in building, with the use of steel and other new materials, did not affect the bosses in the manner it did the unions. Instead, it became a power for unifying the employers against our organizations. More and more capital was required for machinery and equipment, greater sums were needed for building investment; it naturally followed that the industry came into the hands of the trust companies, great banks, and the agents of the Steel Corporation. Large construction has thus come to be directly controlled thru the giant construction companies and banking interests, while the great bulk of small building is kept in line by the control of building loans.

This concentration of capital and financial control has been going on for a long time. Following it has come the unification of the building trades employers into ever more powerful associations. These have continually been combining and amalgamating, until today the building interests have one organization, directing thruout the country the fight against the unions. The so-called Citizen's Committee in Chicago combines practically all building interests, controlled and directed by the great bankers. In other cities the unions are similarly fighting the united power of the capitalist class.

Our Unions Lag Behind

The increased power of the employers has been forcing the unions to also close up their ranks. The bosses find, with each new step in their consolidation, that they have more power as against the workers. Their greed for huge profits immediately causes them to attack our wages and working conditions. We resist one at a time with our craft unions, but find ourselves losing. Then we finally search for ways of acting together. For years the writer, who is a practical building tradesman, has taken part in these efforts toward unity. Thus, although the workers' organizations are continually lagging behind those of the capitalists, they are nevertheless constantly changing and coming gradually closer together.

During the years 1900-1910 there were many amalgamations brought about of closely related crafts. The movement gained great headway for a time, resulting, among others, in uniting the steamfitters and plumbers; the carpenters and wood workers; the granite cutters, polishers and rubbers; the stone masons and bricklayers; the marble workers and several independent unions; and the hod carriers and the excavation laborers. The reactionary leaders did their best to head off the movement, but even they were forced to give it lip-service. Samuel Gompers, in addressing the marble workers' convention in 1909, expressed the hope that all men engaged in the stone industry would soon be in one powerful organization. The movement culminated in the organization of the Building Trades Department of the A. F. of L., in 1908. This was a definite recognition of the common interests of all unions in the building industry, and a step toward unification.

The organization of the Building Trades Department was a very "radical" step. The writer remembers quite well the fights that raged around this issue. Many of the same arguments now used against the program of the Trade Union Educational League were then hurled against the idea of forming the Department. But in spite of the reactionary fulminations, the "radicals" of that day went ahead and established the Department.

The new body was intended to eliminate the worst features of jurisdictional wars, and to bring about greater unity between the various craft unions. It was a great step forward. At least it got the unions in touch with one another, and laid the basis for some approach to common action. But its results, especially under the pressure of the employers' present organization, have not justified the high hopes placed upon it. It has exhibited the fundamental weaknesses of all federations. In moments of greatest crisis, when strength is needed most, it has a disconcerting habit of giving way, leaving the unions in dire confusion. The wars of jurisdiction rage on. The Department is only another field of battle. Union resources are still taken up more with fighting each other than in fighting the employers. The bosses are also affected by these struggles; strikes over jurisdictional claims continue, and the "fair" employer is in the same danger of them as the "unfair" one. The net result for the unions is loss. Federation has not met the situation.

Two False Remedies

Efforts to change this situation have been many. Two of them should be pointed out, because, coming from widely different sources, they are equally false and dangerous to the workers. One is the effort of the employers to set up "impartial" boards to decide upon jurisdiction; the other is the program of dual unionism advocated by the I. W. W. and others. Untold mischief has been done by both of these quack medicines of unionism.

The movement for a national board to arbitrate jurisdictional disputes was launched by engineers and employers. The proposal for such a board, composed of architects, engineers, employers and employees, was brought before the Atlantic City convention of the Building Trades Department. One delegate, speaking for the adoption, said that he believed it would go far toward eliminating the radical element from the building trades. The proposition was [illegible] the "Carpenters" refuse to [illegible] are obeying a [illegible] instinct of the trade union movement not to allow non-workers to dictate solutions to their problems.

The program of building new "ideal" unions, to replace the imperfect craft unions, has been one of the chief evils of the labor movement. Disgruntled and rebelling elements have thought to take a short cut to solidarity, by breaking away and starting all over. Actions of this kind have done nothing but increase the confusion and weaken the labor movement. To-day it is plain to all intelligent men, that progress cannot come in this way. Every one of the many efforts in this direction has failed, and dual unionism is dead in the building trades. The militant union men have learned to be on the watch for this tendency, and to root it out in its beginnings.

For Building Trades Unity

The way out of our present mess lies along the road of amalgamation, the unification of all building trades workers for common action on wages, hours, and policies in the industry. One union covering the entire building trades is required.

Such a plan will not mean wiping out craft lines, wherever these meet some need of the workers. Instead, it will take the form, outlined in 1913 by the famous Tveitmoe resolution adopted by the Building Trades Department, but not carried out, which groups together the closely related crafts, such as the mason trades, pipe trades, iron trades, woodworking trades, etc. In a Building Trades Industrial Union these groups would form departments, under the general executive which would have supreme power on questions of wages, hours, disputes, etc. Within these departments the old craft units could be retained as sections and separate locals, so long as wanted to handle purely craft matters. Related crafts will also have the machinery for handling their own peculiar problems, in the departments. But in the struggle against the bosses, they will all be united under one executive committee, concentrating the entire power of the building trades workers.

The technical obstacles to this program are not great. Unlike the railroads, the building trades (with the exception of helpers and laborers) are very close together in wage scales. The adjustment necessary are easily provided for by the department and craft sections. The advantages are so evident and so immediate, that they completely overshadowed any little objection that may be raised.

A great source of weakness to-day is the thousands of workers in the small towns, where there are not enough of their craft to make a live local union. The small-town worker is just as good material for unionism as the ordinary union man in the city, but he does not have the association of numbers of his fellow craftsmen to keep him in line, as the city worker has. Imagine what would happen to our great city local unions if they were divided up into little groups of three or four, or even 15 or 20. The organization would die out. That is what happens, particularly in the smaller crafts, when you leave the large centers.

The Building Trades Industrial Union could immediately rally all these workers to the union. The cities like New York, Chicago, and the like, would need little change in the local unions. The next smaller cities could unite the little fragments of locals together according to groups, thus giving them size and strength and a feeling of power. The little towns could have department locals, should be only one or two in each craft, and have a fair size local union which could be alive and healthy. Consider that this would eliminate the entire supply of scabs, relied upon by the bosses in fighting the union, and judge the value of such a united organization in increasing our power. Every building trades worker in the country would soon be a union man with a paid up card and membership in a live local.

Greater power in the union, that is what amalgamation means. The employers are out to smash our unions. They do not discuss the right or wrong of it—they have the power. The only thing that will save our unions and defeat the bosses is greater power. When, instead of a score or more of executive committees at the top, each making a different decision and pulling different ways, we have one committee uniting in itself the combined power of the building workers, then we will stop our retreat and move forward to new victories. Amalgamation is the road to that goal.

Take this up in your union and urge action be taken to get all our unions together, for the purpose of consolidating their forces. Get your local union to act; take it to your district council; then put it up to your international executives and conventions. Demand that your officials take action. Vote for those union men for office in your union, who stand for this program. Help to defeat those who oppose it. Discuss the question wherever building trades workers get together, and make this the dominating issue in the entire industry.

OAKLAND, CAL.—The Disabled Veterans of the World War, in convention here, were invited to a big dinner by the city authorities. Delighted, the wounded veterans accepted, and gathered at the appointed hour outside the designated restaurant, 250 strong.

But when they arrived they found the cafe was being picketed, being on the unfair list of the Cooks' and Waiters' union. Dinner was ready inside, the speakers and municipal hosts assembled, and everything was all right except the guests. They held a mass meeting outside on the question of unionism, and when it was over, just five went in the cafe to be feted and the rest of the 250 marched off, singing, to a union restaurant, where they bought their own dinners and paid for them themselves.

Forty thousand of the leading spirits of the non-co-operative movement in India are held by the British under revolting and inhuman conditions, and multitudes more have been arrested without any real cause, according to Pandit K. Santanam, the new leader of the Nationalist movement in the Punjab and the representative of most of its 70,000,000 Moslems as well as the Hindu followers of Ghandi.

The Labor temple at Eureka, Cal., is establishing a workers' library consisting of books on economics, politics and sociology and donations of books are requested. Eureka, lost in the wilds of northwestern California, is a rendezvous for the striking lumbermen, and also a shipping port. It is now the scene of several "criminal syndicalism" cases.

Amnesty ive Week of ne25-July1

he Amnesty Alliance has set the week of June 25—July 1, Special Drive for amnesty.

me people think there is no lon- a need for amnesty in New York because Ben Gitlow, Isaac Fer- Jim Larkin, C. E. Ruthenberg Harry Winitsky are out on bond. e must remember the other six rades, Paul Manko, Mistler, Alonen, Minnie Kalnin and Leisman.

eir names are not so well wn, it is true, but they are in jail ause of their activities in the la- movement.

ey are class war prisoners and such they merit the support of all ss-conscious elements among the kers of New York.

ain, we must remember that e of the political prisoners who e out on bail, are by no means free. stice for the worker is yet a rarity capitalist courts and he can only a semblance of it when there is organized concerted move from e workers, in his behalf.

We therefore urge friends and mrades to clamor for amnesty. here are petitions to be signed, petitions for state amnesty and petitions for general amnesty.

From June 25 to July 1, open air etings will be held in every locality—all organizations should encourage their membership to attend the eting nearest to them. Every la- r organization that has the workers' cause at heart should send a delegate to the Amnesty Alliance that eets every Monday, at 81 E. 10th t., and substantiate the affiliation by contribution and so enable this organization to go on with its work.

Remember, the class war prisoners e in jail for us and the least we n do is to fight for their release.

Revive Mine-Railway Alliance

The revival of the matter of a working alliance between the railway shop crafts and the miners, brought to the fore again by the threatened assault on the wages and working conditions of the railway shopmen, is one of numerous recent examples showing the influence that economic pressure is exerting on the pure and simple trade union officialdom as well as on the rank and file.

Only wild-eyed radicals ever broached such a matter as this a few years ago. To-day it is the most important topic of discussion at the conference of officials of railway unions held prior to the convention of the American Federation of Labor.

The Convincing Argument

What has served to convince the craft union leadership of the railway unions that such an alliance is not only desirable but is a crying necessity?

Nothing more or less than the announced intention of the Railway Labor Board, complying with the request of the railway executives, to reduce in a substantial manner the wages of the shop crafts.

The maintenance-of-way workers have already suffered a reduction of something like forty cents per day. The shop crafts failed to come to the support of the unskilled workers and encouraged by the apathetic attitude of the unions, the henchmen of the railway magnates promptly took a crack at workers who were pleased to believe they occupied a slightly higher position in the social scale.

The miners had already been forced to fight for the very existence of their organization and the tentative agreement in existence between the United Mine Workers and the railway unions has not brought support to the miners. Scab coal is hauled by union men; in return for their services the railway board hands them a cut in wages.

Adhere to the Ritual

This is enough to make even the most dyed in the wool scissor-bill stop and think; particularly when it comes following a long period in which the officialdom of the unions has worked strictly acording to the policy laid down by the giant intellects of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor for these emergencies.

The sacred ritual of the A. F. of L. has been adhered to in every detail. Enemies have been punished and friends rewarded but the ratio of enemies to friends has been steadily increasing.

Governmental agencies have been used to the limit. A peaceful program of negotiation has been followed carefully. Evidence upholding the contention of the railwaymen that their present incomes do not constitute a living wage has been laid before various commissions.

The unions have fought for the Railway Labor Board and apparently believed for a time that this body was for labor and against the employers.

With what to the union officials seems base ingratitude the railway labor board now hands out a reduction and the federal courts decide that its decisions are not subject to review by any other agency of the government.

It is little wonder that even the most conservative trade unionists begin to realize that the reason for the contemptuous attitude maintained by the government and the employers toward the labor unions is bound up with the fact that labor in the United States is not even able to mobilize at the point of attack any considerable percentage of its strength, that it has no fighting policy and that quite often it is really playing into the hands of the employers when it thinks it is fighting them.

The miners and the railway workers are the only economic groups in the American labor movement that are really well organized; with the miners, of course, far and away in the lead in unity and militancy. In reality it is only by the continued division of the railway workers into crafts and the neglect of a bona fide offensive and defensive alliance between the miners and railway workers that the railroad capitalists have been able to so successfully attack labor all along the line.

The shop crafts, like the miners, despite their use of every piece of machinery set up by the employers, have found that the neck of the employing class is stiff with the determination to reduce wages and destroy union effectiveness while the opportunity offers. They seem to have discovered what the class-conscious minority in the unions has known for a long time: that the wages and conditions of all workers are determined to a very large degree by the amount of pressure they can exert against the wage system. The railway unions, like the miners, find themselves forced either to strike or surrender without a struggle.

The logic of events has placed the old officialdom of the railway unions with its back against the wall.

See Influence at Convention

Upon the deliberations of the convention of the American Federation of Labor this situation will have tremendous influence. The retreat of labor before the attacks of the employers, the utter helplessness of officialdom in the face of this retreat has left nothing to which the standpatters can point with pride.

Out of this same situation and bearing directly upon the mechanical construction of the trade union movement comes another question of embarrassing moment to the ancients who guide the destiny of the American Federation of Labor. It is the question of the re-admission of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees.

This organization took in as members all maintenance-of-way workers on railway lines and unskilled workers in the shops and terminals. It came into a jurisdictional conflict with the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and other building trades organizations; it was expelled because it refused to surrender men whom the United Brotherhood claimed were carpenters and under its jurisdiction.

This incident is an object lesson for workers who believe that progress can be made by the labor movement without breaking down craft lines. No attempt had ever been made to organize this particular class of workers until the main- [illegible]

It is here that the issue of purely craft unionism against organization by industry will be [illegible].

Demand Support for Miners

Support for the West Virginia miners is another [illegible] matter that the convention will take up. There are optimistic souls who believe that no opposition could possibly arise to this proposal, but they do not know the unscrupulous politics that are played in the labor movement. The relief work has already been sabotaged in various districts with the full knowledge that the miners' strike will be won or lost in West Virginia. Lip service will be rendered to the heroic struggle, but relief for the miners will come from the efforts of the left wing only.

So it will be with all other vital issues. No more progress will be made than the left wing can force. This will not be much, but if the minority come out of the convention with a better understanding of need for organization of the militant elements and a determination to carry on the fight the whole year round and at all costs about all will have been gained than can be hoped for at this time.

There seems to be no organized campaign for a successor to Gompers, and upon this issue it is unlikely that there will be a test of strength.

Wilmington, Del., Comrades Are Aiding the Miners

The Wilmington, Del., branch of the Workers Party of America are doing their bit for the hungry miners and their families in West Virginia. On Tuesday June 6, a meeting was held in the Labor Lyceum at which Lawrence Dwyer and William F. Dunne spoke. The local party members financed the meeting by selling tickets to the workers in the Pennsylvania shops. Despite the backwardness of the local labor movement and the fact that the shopmen are working but a few days per week $33 was turned over to the miners' relief fund over and above the expenses of the meeting.

In addition to this the wife of one of the comrades donated a valuable opal brooch which will be raffled for the same purpose.

The Wilmington comrades are also planning to hold a miners' tag day.

Conference of Metal Workers Starts Drive for Industrial Unity

Following an address to their conference by P. J. McClellan of the United Labor Council, the Amalgamated Metal Workers of America decided to urge all its locals to affiliate with that organisation.

The conference was held in the Food Workers' hall on 51st Street and was attended by 21 delegates. The two important matters before the gathering were the outlining of a plan of intensive organisation and a clear definition of the function and scope of the independent unions in the industrial centers on the Atlantic seaboard.

Plan Membership Drive

The Amalgamated takes as members all workers in metal manufacturing establishments and recognizes no craft lines. The conference decided to detail organizers for several localities where there is an indication of renewed interest in organization and to make a drive for membership during the coming summer.

Delegates pointed out that on the Atlantic coast there is practically no organization among the metal workers and expressed the belief that with the full energy of the Amalgamated Metal Workers devoted to the task it would be possible to build up a powerful industrial union.

Following a short talk on the labor movement by William Dunne the floor was thrown open for discussion. Dunne stated that with the comparatively feeble labor movement in the United States and with that movement dominated as it now is by corrupt and incompetent officials it was impossible to conduct any successful organizing campaign in the basic industries where no organization exists; that the entire force of the labor movement must be mobilized for any successful organization campaign and that it could not be mobilized for independent union movements; that the history of the dual union movement shows that the employers were too powerful and their anti-union machinery too well organized for independent unions to secure and maintain efficient organization. Dunne took the position that the immediate task of the class-conscious workers was to gain such control of the trade-union movement that the sabotage of organizing campaigns by officialdom could be prevented.

Membership Intelligent and Militant

The 21 delegates present differed with him and about three hours were spent in a debate between Dunne and various speakers who took issue with him.

After the subject—and the speakers—were exhausted it seemed to be the prevailing opinion that the Amalgamated Metal Workers would have to prove its right to existence by its success or failure in the task it had set for itself—the organization of the metal workers in the east into an industrial union.

Of the spirit of the members of the Amalgamated Metal Workers there can be no question. The membership is intelligent and militant and is earnestly working for the organization of the workers in the industry.

It has an almost unlimited field for its endeavors and if, as the delegates seemed to believe, the unorganized can be brought into the union in great numbers within the next year it will become a powerful factor in the industrial life of the eastern section of the United States.

Retains Its Identity

It does not intend to interfere with the International Association of Machinists where that organization has control and it looks with sympathy, upon the efforts being made to amalgamate the various metal trade unions in the American Federation of Labor, but it has little hope that these efforts will be successful; for that reason it will retain its identity and attempt to increase its membership and influence.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

[illegible]

[illegible] It says:

"At a time when the heart of the international proletariat is aglow with enthusiasm and wonder at the heroic struggle of the Russian workers against their capitalist enemies, at a time when the only workers' republic in the world, the hope of the suffering workers of the world, carries on a titanic struggle against a world of powerful enemies, the majority of the Toronto convention added its voice to that of the enemies of the proletarian republic and placed the Workmen's Circle among all the black forces of the world."

The Toronto convention violated a custom that has prevailed in the Workmen's Circle since its inception when it denounced the Workers Party of America, its Jewish Federation and its policies. The only qualification for membership in the Workmen's Circle, outside of the technical requirements have previously been the acknowledgement of the class struggle and the desire to abolish capitalism. Political or industrial affiliations had no bearing on membership if these two requirements were fulfilled until the recent reactionary gathering at Toronto.

The special convention passed the following resolution which gives a clear idea of the division existing in the organization between the petty bourgeois—the cockroach capitalist and the working-class elements.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas, The Workmen's Circle is a non-partisan organization which takes in Jewish workers in America without party distinction as long as they accept the principle of the class struggle and favor the abolition of the capitalist system.

Whereas, The last convention of the Workmen's Circle in Toronto in adopting a resolution against the Workers Party, its Jewish federation and the Freiheit, its official organ, has violated the principles and provisions of the Workmen's Circle, making it a part of another party and a tool of the Forward, and,

Whereas, The Socialist Party, its Jewish branch, and the Forward do not represent the opinions and beliefs of the entire membership of the Workmen's Circle but only a part of it, and,

Whereas, The Workers Party is a revolutionary working-class organization aiming to unify under its banner the workers for the struggle in behalf of the social revolution and the establishment of a workers republic in the United States, and,

Whereas, The Workers Party takes in all the revolutionary elements among the workers and its Jewish Federation unifies in its midst all the Jewish Workers, and,

Whereas, The Freiheit, the organ of the Jewish Federation of the Workers Party, is a revolutionary labor paper and holds aloft the banner of the class struggle and of socialism and which stands on guard for the Jewish workers and the social revolution.

Be it therefore resolved, That this convention endorses the Workers Party and its whole press, the Jewish Federation of the Workers Party and its organ The Freiheit and pledges to aid it with all its power in all its struggles and activities for a better and a nobler labor movement for the true principles of the class struggle and socialism.

The special convention and the stand taken by it is the more remarkable in view of the facts that only about four weeks have elapsed since the Toronto convention, that the expenses of the convention had to be borne by the locals and that no delegates were seated unless they had been elected by a clear majority in their locals.

Delegates came from as far south as Florida and as far west as Colorado.

The two-day session has done more than any one thing to clarify the issues in the Jewish labor and revolutionary movement in the United States. The business elements of the Workmen's Circle are now clearly aligned with similar groups of other nationalities. The working-class elements stand solidly on the basis of the necessity for a revolutionary movement in America.

As an aftermath of the convention and as an indication of earnestness of those taking part in it a campaign has already been launched and is being carried on successfully to raise $25,000 for the Freiheit.

Abe Epstein, who has either opened or presided over Workmen's Circle conventions for the last twenty years was unanimously chosen for chairmen. He, M. J. Olgin, and J. B. Salutsky were the principal speakers.

An appeal for the release of the remaining political prisoners was sent to the president by 2000 workers at an open air rally in Boston Common. John F. Nason, of the Bricklayers' union, presided, and Frank Mack, Rev. Charles E. Dole, and Rev. Henry Pinkham, two prominent liberal ministers, were among the speakers.

[illegible] 25,000 NEW READERS' CAMPAIGN— AND GOING FULL BLAST

The most [illegible], most active, most unified plan of subscription increase THE WORKER has ever engaged in; a plan which will make THE WORKER the largest in circulation of any workers' paper in the country; a plan engaging the active participation of every reader, every Workers Party member, of every Workers Party sympathizer, of every Local and Branch—has been launched. You are earnestly requested to take part in it.

To make THE WORKER a greater force in the struggles of the workers of this country; to reach thousands of new readers with the message of the Workers Party, to exert a real and growing influence upon the trade union movement here, to become a mighty educational factor in the upbuilding of the class conscious efforts of the masses to make for themselves a world without exploitation—these are the reasons for this campaign.

The need for THE WORKER to become all this in the workers' struggle is apparent.

The labor movement of this country has reached its lowest level. The faint beginnings and stirrings of an about face movement of the organized workers is already being felt.

The fighting miners' strike is the best evidence of this ending of labor's retreat. We feel that labor will now begin a fight upon the lines of a united front, will face its enemy and will move upward to new victories and greater power.

THE WORKER must become a moving factor in this upward struggle. It must become a living issue wherever the workers give battle to their exploiters.

It must show the workers the way to fight and the way to victory. It must lead—not follow in this struggle.

The Worker must take part in every phase of the class war. It must stand back of every demand of the workers—whether "justified" by capitalist opinion, laws and courts or not.

It must back up the workers regardless of the issues involved—because THE WORKERS ARE ALWAYS RIGHT!

These are sufficient reasons for our determination to make this campaign for 25,000 new readers a tremendous success.

They are sufficient reasons for expecting the united and unqualified support of every reader and every Party member.

These reasons are sufficient for enlisting your enthusiastic efforts in accomplishing these self-evident and necessary tasks.

WE NEED YOUR HELP. WE WANT YOUR HELP—WE EXPECT YOUR HELP.

WE'LL GET THEM WITH 20 WEEK SUB. CARDS.

We have issued 25,000 SPECIAL 20 weeks—for 50 cents subscription cards. It will be the business of our readers, our sympathizers, the Workers Party membership, of every comrade who wishes THE WORKER to fulfill its mission in the education and organization of the worker—to sell these 25,000 subscription cards to the thousands of workers they come in contact with daily.

To help accomplish this work, to roll up the greatest subscription list THE WORKER has ever had, this is the job we offer each and every comrade who reads these lines.

We are going to be plain and straight-forward about this campaign. We say, this work must be done—and we want you do help do it. What is your answer? Will you help?

Before another week is past you will receive a personal letter from THE WORKER management. And in that letter a certain part of these 25,000 new subscriptions will be assigned to you to secure. Prepare to get them.

The progress of this campaign will be recorded weekly in the columns of THE WORKER. YOUR help, the subscriptions you get—will be shown there. Make YOUR record show in the total.

The national conflicts between the colonial powers of Europe and the peoples that are subjected to their rule or are threatened by them, are becoming more and more intense.

Soviet Russia was shut out from the world market and world economy by the blockade and by the wars the the only state in the world, in which the peasants and workers have succeeded in wresting political power from the hands of the bourgeoisie.

The creation of the national states on top of the ruins of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, and the building up of frontier states between western Europe and Soviet Russia have greatly increased the number of customs-walls hindering the free development of productive forces.

2—The military destruction of German imperialism and the economic and political enslavement of Germany by the Entente has temporarily freed England from its most dreaded prewar rival in the contest for the world market and world exploitation.

French imperialism seeks to lift France out of its economic decay and growing financial difficulties by bleeding Germany white.

The merciless pillage of the German nation together with other sequences of the world war (depreciation of the currency, inflation, etc.) lead to an impoverishment that destroys the buying power and the consumption capacity of the German nation for England's goods, which in turn is the vital factor of a healthy and thriving industry in Great Britain.

Tariff Barricades Ineffective

Under the given circumstances, the effect of the unbearable reparation burdens put upon Germany by Allied imperialism, is that the English and the world market are flooded with cheap German goods, against whose cut-throat competition no protective tariff barricades, be they ever so high, and no antidumping laws, be they ever so stringent, can offer any effective protection.

The economic and political weakening of Germany signifies no real strengthening of England, but rather its own weakening and a menace to its own position. So much the more so because it goes hand in hand with the great extension and strengthening of French imperialism.

3—As a result of the war, France's economic development was greatly accelerated.

France controls the most important iron mines of Europe, just as Germany is still in possession of most of the coal on the continent.

The union of the right of exploitation of the iron and coal fields, be it through conquest or by treaty, would be a fatal blow to England's economic and political position in Europe. But even without such a juncture of exploitation forces, aided by Germany's reparation coal deliveries France is quickly developing from a lending country into a nation with a growing heavy industry.

This it does under the domination of its capitalists who are seeking to secure productive investing oppor- [illegible]

[illegible] Soviet Russia and Asia Minor.

In the Bosphorus, in the Dardanelles, in North Africa, Northern and Central Asia, the economic and political conflicts between French and English imperialism are daily growing in sharpness.

France's position in Morocco and Syria, her Angora Treaty with Turkey and her growing influence in the Mohammedan world not only threaten England's position in old and new fields of exploitation, but what is more significant, menace her connections with India.

The Struggle to Dominate

The more persistent and violent India's national and social movements threatening the British colonial power are, the more important it becomes for England to secure these connections then its control of the Dardanelles and of the Suez Canal, thru an Arabian empire dependent upon and ruled by it, and thru powerful positions in Mesopotamia, Persia and Afghanistan.

Under pressure of these economic and political difficulties, England attempts to strengthen Italy and Greece at the cost of French imperialism, and drives Italy to military preparations intended to weaken France's position in the Mediterranean.

In the coming admission of Soviet Russia into capitalistic world economy, England and France are stubbornly contesting for a dominating position that might enable them better to exploit the natural treasures and labor power of the workers and peasants of the great republic.

4—England's domination of the world market passed to the United States during the four year wholesale imperialistic butchery.

The United States, formerly an exporter of raw-materials and food to Europe and an importer of the latter's industrial products, now became an exporter of manufactured articles.

In the markets of North and South America the United States displaced Europe, and in China and in the English colonial countries and even in Europe proper, it made conquest after conquest.

Industry Here Changes

The industries from the United States turned from quantity to quality production.

Aside from other factors, the high grade of development of the technical productive apparatus which the United States industries have at their disposal, secures for them a great advantage over English production.

At the same time the United States became Europe's creditor instead of being her debtor.

It also has the lion's share of the world's gold reserves in its possession.

England is barely capable of holding its own in the European mar- [illegible]

[illegible] Japan appeared as a competitor of the United States in South American markets and gained a foothold on the islands in the Pacific.

From China she seized the rich province of Shantung, seized from her base in Manchuria Korea, pushed her conquests in Eastern Siberia and stretched her imperialistic hand as far as Mongolia.

Japan Menaces U. S.

Japan's growing imperialism is pointed against the United States, whose positions it menaces in the Pacific, in the South Sea Islands and in her intentions for China's exploitation.

England was not disturbed by these developments because it saw in it a check upon American imperialism.

Her alliance with Japan was to secure for her the control and spoliation of Southern China, whereas the North and Center of the Celestial Empire were to be left to the Japanese robber.

In order to get the necessary financial and military support of its colonies and dominions during the war, England was compelled to grant to these the right of determination of its foreign policy.

In its relations with the United States and Japan, England was therefore greatly hampered.

Canada felt that its economic, political and cultural kinship to the Union was closer than the tie that bound it to the mother country.

The Australian Commonwealth is sharply opposed to the imperialistic expansion appetite of Japan, the former, and most probably, still the secret ally of England in her rivalry to the United States.

English South Africa, whose population is mostly peasant, has no interest whatever in supporting England in a war against the States.

Indeed the United States can thanks to its well developed industries, overcome Japan's economic competition, but reasons of a political nature and especially the thought of a "closed door" to China intensify the conflict between American and Japanese imperialism.

Uprisings in Colonies.

5—The four year devastation and pillage campaign of the capitalistic Great Powers, has given rise to violent revolutionary movements in the English colonies as well as in those regions whose subjugation and exploitation was intended.

These movements derive their encouragement and strength from the example set by the Russian Revolution and the creation of Soviet Russia.

They are strongly marked by a nationalistic and religious character, but they are also united with social revolutionary struggles. In spite of the fact that Ireland was declared a republic federatively united with Great Britain, bloody struggles are still going on in Ireland.

These struggles are caused by unbridgeable economic and social conflicts. Egypt is flying the flag of national indignation, with Zaghul Pasha as its standard bearer.

In India the most stringent measures as well as concessions seem powerless in the face of her national indignation against England's rule.

Rise of Class Struggles.

Strikes upon strikes break out which, together with the national conflicts, give rise to class struggles between exploiters and exploited.

From the Atlantic Ocean up to the Himalayas, indeed even up to China, the Mohammedans are worked up to a high degree of indignation and revolt.

United Against Russia.

6—Yet, notwithstanding the incurable conflict of interests between the great capitalistic states, they are none the less united in their readiness to overthrow Soviet Russia.

These imperialistic states are not satisfied with the concessions which Soviet Russia is compelled to make to foreign capitalists under pressure of historical events, and forsaken as it was by the proletarians of the rest of the world.

They are out for bleeding the gigantic empire white and for plundering its natural treasures and productive forces without the interference of Soviet laws.

But what they desire uppermost is the overthrow of the Soviet government. Soviet Russia is a constant reminder to the workers of all countries to seize political power, to set up their dictatorship and to tear up capitalism by the roots.

Mother Country of Revolution

Soviet Russia is the mainstay of the exploited and oppressed in all their struggles against their exploiters and oppressors, and is above all the mother country and source of the World Revolution.

French imperialism was until now the sword of the capitalists of all [illegible]

[illegible] French creditors. France will continue to waste the [illegible] of the working masses for the maintenance of militarism in the Little Entente and in the Border States but, above all to maintain militarism in Poland.

Her diplomats and her generals are preparing to launch new military attacks against Soviet Russia, using Finland and Roumania as bases.

Ammunition, army supplies and troops can be sent from France to aid her allies on the various fronts. Germany's "neutrality" is no obstacle in the way of transportation.

Germany Is Anti-Bolshevist

On the contrary, with the weakness the German bourgeoisie government (be it that of Wirth or any other) displays against the Allies, coupled with the hatred it professes against the proletarian and peasant state and its own fear of the proletarian revolution, this "neutrality" may turn into an encouragement of or even into a participation in a war against Soviet Russia.

Ludendorff and Company are only waiting for leave from French Imperialism, to lead the struggle against "Bolshevism."

Although Soviet Russia entertains no imperialistic designs, and must concentrate all its forces upon reconstruction, it must not disarm. It must be ready to fight in the interests of the proletarian revolution.

7. Only three years after the end of the wholesale imperialistic murder and two years after the conclusion of "peace," the world, the capitalistic world in particular, is saturated with combustible material that may go off at any moment, resulting in new imperialistic wars, more gigantic, more frightful and destructive and more cruel than the blood-reeking war of 1914—1918 suffered by shuddering humanity. Today the capitalist states are armed more heavily than before the war.

War Preparations Are Tremendous

The various war-ravaged countries are still too poor, their means are far insufficient to heal the horrible war wounds of the laboring masses, and to restore what the war destroyed, and already the bourgeois governments are again wasting the treasures of the working masses in tremendous preparations for new land, sea and air wars.

And these preparations in themselves augment and accelerate the danger of war from all sides.

The slow process of the development of the proletarian world revolution after its first rushing start, the Russian Revolution, permits the bourgeoisie of the great capitalistic countries to attempt to reconstruct collapsing industry and the tottering state upon a capitalistic basis.

But the restoration of the capitalistic profit system and of the bourgeois order carries with it the germ of all economic, political and social, national and international conflicts and contradictions which with the present stage of development, reached by capitalism, inevitably drive to world wars of gigantic compass, of the most frightful character and of hardly conceivable consequences.

Furthermore, these conflicts and contradictions have been intensified by the war and its effects as well as by the attempts made by the bourgeoisie to maintain and fortify the capitalist system by means of the barbaric exploitation and enslavement of the proletariat.

Titanic Play of Production Forces

The titanic play of productive forces and means of production created by capitalism can no longer be confined within the restricted boundaries of the national state.

It requires the whole world as its field, ownership of means of production and with it the lust for profits of the individual capitalists and capitalist groups as the driving power of production, resulting in the anarchy of capitalist economy.

With the domination of the great industrials and financiers in state and industry, the inevitable and typical features of expiring capitalism, are huge armaments, constant danger of war, and finally world wars, in which millions are slaughtered and crippled and blooming civilized regions are turned into deserts.

Against the driving forces of capitalistic imperialism [illegible]

[illegible] Far Eastern questions [illegible] for these Allied Powers may in the near future be [illegible] among themselves and against those nations upon whom they wish to confer the blessings of capitalist culture.

The decision to reduce naval armaments really mocks the disarmament idea.

We saw the complete rejection of the suggestion to reduce armaments for land and aerial wars, which will most probably become the triumph of the scientific and technical world and will assume the most appalling forms of destruction of human life and creation.

Hopes of Naive Blasted

The hopes of the naive and inexperienced who thought that the Washington Conference would insure peace and that its effects would be to promote the economic and political reconstruction of Europe have been blasted like a soap bubble.

9. The economic conference that is soon to take place in Genoa is intended to avoid the historical fate of capitalism — world war or the proletarian revolution.

The economic and political conflicts between the great capitalist states of Europe are to be bridged, their forces are to be united, systematically organized and internationally concentrated for economic reconstruction.

It is expected that a mutual agreement among the bourgeoisie of impoverished Europe and their helpless governments, will obtain the gigantic means needed for reconstruction, through the United States which are "overflowing with riches."

The calling of the conference is an admission that the Peace of Versailles and the other treaties of peace that are essentially similar to it are untenable, and that they do not lay the foundation for Europe's reconstruction but furnish means for its further ruin and impoverishment.

The calling of the conference is an admission that the ruling bourgeoisie of these countries is not able to bring order and stability into the existing economic chaos occasioned by the war, and to sow seeds of a new and higher life on top of the present ruins.

Must End Capitalist Misrule

It will be a proof that this titanic task is above the powers of the united bourgeoisie of Europe and America. This problem can be solved only after the revolutionary proletariat will have overthrown bourgeois rule. Thru its own liberation from the yoke of capitalism and thru the liberation of human labor-power from exploitation and enslavement, it will have liberated all the material forces of production from the limitations set by the capitalist profit system thus creating the prerequisite for complete social reconstruction.

The economic and political situation, as described in the theses of the Third World Congress of the Communist International, has in its essence undergone no change.

It is true that in the United States and in other countries, single industries show signs of economic prosperity.

But the situation as a whole shows that capitalistic economy is declining and is approaching its end.

Upon unsteady and shifting historical ground, the planned economic conference hopes to preserve, fortify and improve the capitalistic economy of Europe, whose structure has been shaken to its foundation.

Try to Square the Circle

It is to square the circle: it will attempt to satisfy the demands of French imperialism seeking to pillage German industry and at the same time trying to make Germany's industry efficient enough to offer a paying market for English goods in Germany and to protect English industries against German cut-throat competition.

The costs of the adjustment of interests between French and English capitalism will be paid by the German [illegible]

[illegible] all sharply project the irreconcilable conflicts of interests and contradictions that are undermining the capitalistic world.

In spite of the international bourgeoisie's united will to render Soviet Russia a colonial field for international capitalist exploitation, we nevertheless see more and more clearly the conflicts that arise among the capitalists of France, England, the United States and Germany in the proposed marauding scheme.

The struggle between the French and English government, as well as the attitude of the German government, are the unmistakable expression of these conflicts.

In her attitude towards Soviet Russia, Germany was nothing but the shadow of the Entente, and in the question of the reconstruction of Soviet Russia, she now plays the part of an English vassal. She does this in spite of the fact that even the capitalistic interests of Germany require an independent policy.

As uncertain as the outcome of the conference may be, it is nevertheless certain that Germany will be the object of the Entente imperialists' negotiations.

Russia's Powerful Position

Germany will not as much as dare to suggest the revision of the Versailles Treaty, in spite of the fact that a blind man could see that without such revision the reconstruction of European economy on a capitalistic basis is a sheer impossibility.

On the other hand, however, the Entente imperialists will have to negotiate with Soviet Russia.

This fact is an expression of the power which Soviet Russia wields in spite of its deplorable economic situation—a power which it owes to the proletarian revolution.

This revolution which the Red Army fought for the defence of the Soviet system, will also strengthen the Soviet Power when it meets the onslaught of international capitalism on the economic field.

The de facto if not the de jure recognition of the Soviet Government through its invitation to the economic conference will only intensify the conflicts among the capitalistic states. Altho it is very doubtful whether Genoa will effect an understanding among them on the question of Europe's reconstruction, it is nevertheless certain that the most that capitalism may expect of Genoa is a breathing space, but it cannot save its life.

The Big Question

World wars or the proletarian world-revolution?

Even after the deliberation and decisions of Genoa, this question will remain on the historical order of the day.

10—Bourgeois pacifism and anti-militarism in prewar times an uninfluential ideology of small circles, could in the present situation acquire practical significance.

If realized, these movements would constitute the last attempts to save capitalism, thru the international concentration and organization of social forces. But this last attempt would also finally result in disappointment and failure.

On a capitalist foundation, even the organization would prove too limited to afford sufficient play to the increased forces of production.

These forces would then jump their limited field, and the result would be a great crisis.

Every attempt to take even the first palpable steps towards the realization of pacifist aims will result in failure.

The conflicts that tear the capitalist groups of various countries, and the conflicts that divide the isolated victor-countries and the exhausted vanquished countries are unbridgeable.

The Last Illusion

Every attempt to put pacifist reconstruction into practice will only serve to show the great masses of the proletariat and of the petty and middle bourgeoisie that the last attempt to save the bourgeoisie was also their last illusion.

Imperialism is capitalist reality, but bourgeois pacifism is capitalist illusion.

Pacifism is just as powerless as bourgeois social reform in its attempt to smoothen over the contradictions, evils and crimes of capitalism.

But it will bring division and uncertainty into the ranks of the bourgeoisie, the petty and middle bourgeoisie and will thus weaken the class enemy of the proletariat. [illegible]

Prevent Paralysis of Fight

This realization will p [illegible] crippling and paralysis of [illegible] tariat's revolutionary fighti [illegible] a danger which is closely [illegible] with the propaganda of [illegible] pacifism.

For it would be very detr [illegible] the proletarian struggle for [illegible] if the working-class were [illegible] under the influence of suc [illegible] ganda instead of arming an [illegible] on with increasing energy.

The proletariat must acq [illegible] control of both of these if [illegible] free itself from exploitatio [illegible] serfdom.

FAR ROCKAWAY ACTIVE

There'll be no vacation for the members of the Workers Party at Far Rockaway, Long Island. They are planning to propagandize all vacationists.

The branch meets every Thursday night at 1709 Redfern Ave., and comrades planning to spend the summer at Far Rockaway are urged to transfer to this branch. There will be open air meetings every Saturday night and all comrades are urged to help make them a great success.

The branch of the Friends of Soviet Russia will meet every Monday night. Plans for a Tag Day, July 4, to reach all the vacationists on this day, are already under way. Union and other sympathetic organizations are urged to send their delegates to the regular F. S. R. meetings every Monday night to 1709 Redfern Ave.

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE!

The New York Division of the National Defense Committee, Workers Party urges friendly organizations not to arrange any affairs or meetings for Sunday, August 20.

Comrades and friends, hold this date open and get ready to spend a most enjoyable Sunday at our picnic at Elmhurst, L. I. It will be different from any other picnic ever held. You'll be surprised! Watch for further announcements.

HOW TO ROB

The United States hospital at Fox Hills, Staten Island, New York, recently abandoned as an institution for the treatment of ill or disabled soldiers and ex-soldiers, has been sold at auction for a total of $61,000. The institution, with its sewerage, light and water systems, cost the government $3,000,000.

Considerable time was spent by the last state convention of the Missouri Federation of Labor deciding that it favors a modification of the "drastic Volstead Act." In the meantime the fight against the bosses languished.

[illegible] Committees of the Y. W. L. [illegible] ways and means for [illegible] our organization [illegible] and developed.

In order to reach larger sections of the youth with the program of the League, it was decided to issue in pamphlet form, the Manifesto, Program, Constitution and important resolutions adopted by the first national convention of the Y. W. L.

Take Up Open Air Work.

Open-air work will become one of the main features of the work of the organization during the next few months. Leagues all over the country are already taking up this work. Two leaflets are now being prepared by the N. E. C. for national distribution. Additional ones will be issued hereafter, at least one every month.

The National Office of the Y. W. L. will be located in Chicago hereafter and preparations are now under way for making the change. Comrade Carlson will leave here the 15th of June, but will stop at Washington, Pittsburg, Cleveland, and Toledo for the Leagues on his way to Chicago. Arrangements are also being made to have Comrades Schulenberg and Abern stop at Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, Toronto, Erie and Detroit.

The forthcoming issue of the YOUNG WORKER will be 20 pages, instead of the usual 16, and will contain many interesting articles including one by Wm. Z. Foster on the Y. W. L. and its tasks. This issue will be made the June-July number. Everywhere the Leagues are increasing their orders for the magazine. It has taken its place in the press of the revolutionary movement of America.

Progress Slow But Steady.

Boston reports that the progress there is slow but steady. The League is working in close co-operation with the Workers Party there.

The Philadelphia organization is doing very good work. Comrade Ginsberg writes: "We are positive that the success of the Young Workers' Movement in our city is assured. Our meetings are well attended even during these warm evenings when youth usually answers the call of Nature. We are drawing the youth with whom we come in contact into our ranks. We are spreading the doctrine of young workers' solidarity.

San Francisco, Los Angeles, Maynard, Pittsburg, Monessen, Chicago, and many other places likewise send in encouraging reports.

The Y. W. L. of New York will hold a city convention on Saturday, June 24th, to ratify action of national convention, and to adopt local constitution and by-laws to conform with those of the national organization, as well as to outline work to be done for the summer and fall months and to elect a new City Executive Committee.

Officials Are Selected.

Comrade Martin Abern has been selected by the N. E. C. as the regular secretary for the Y. W. L. of A.

Comrade G. A. Schulenberg will be the treasurer. Comrade Oliver Carlson will be the editor of the YOUNG WORKER.

Industrial Meetings

Local Greater New York, Workers Party, changes dates of industrial meetings, to discuss the work of the left wing in the trade unions and the Trade Union Educational League. Meetings have been arranged as follows:

Borough Park Branches. June 16th, Finnish Home, 764 40th St., Brooklyn.

Manhattan and Bronx Branches. June 19th, Hungarian Home, 350 E. 61st St.

Williamsburg and Brownsville. June 20th, Empire Building, Lorimer and Ten Eyck Sts., Brooklyn.

These changes have been made in order to make it possible for a greater number of comrades to attend. Robert Minor will speak on "The Task of the Left Wing in the Trade Unions and the Trade Union Educational League."

The Cleveland Federationist, an alleged "labor" paper, carries an editorial on "Be Courteous." Does it refer to the West Virginia Cossack jamming a "gat" into the ribs of a coal miner? Let the Baldwin-Felts thugs listen to this plea, "Use courteous methods in the workings of your daily vocations." The same sheet applauds Henry Ford.

[illegible] "Free political prisoners—in Russia," they cried. Their beloved "democracy" has committed enough crimes in America to make the slogan of freeing political prisoners a popular one with the working masses in this country.

Fulfill Capitalism's Desires

In raising that cry these so-called "Socialists" hope to create a reaction in the sympathies of the masses of the workers of this country toward the Russian Revolution. That is what capitalism wants. And the Socialist Party has no reason whatever to wish for something different.

First it loves capitalism and wants to save it. And second, as long as the revolution in Russia is looked upon as an example of revolutionary working class action to be copied by the workers the world over, the treacherous role these "Socialists" are playing becomes too obvious to promise success. Therefore they cry: "Free political prisoners in Russia!"

Now let us see who the political prisoners are in Soviet Russia. Who are the persons whose release these "socialists" demand from the Soviet Republic of Russia? They are the Anarchists, Mensheviks and Socialist Revolutionaries, arrested by the Soviet authorities for counter-revolutionary activities.

Classifying These Prisoners

Why are they in prison? Have they been sent there for their beliefs or for their membership in their parties and groups, like the American democracy sent communists to prison for their beliefs?

Or have they been sent to prison like some anarchists were sent there by a socialist district attorney in Milwaukee, for having hung up pictures of Malatesta, Bakunin and Kropotkin in their rooms?

Or were they imprisoned like Debs because they expressed opinions and beliefs differing from the opinions or beliefs of those in power?

The writer of this article was in Russia for a considerable length of time at two different periods since the establishment of the Soviet Republic.

He made the acquaintance of a Socialist Revolutionary in high office in the commissariat of health.

Emma Goldman Unmolested

He saw Emma Goldman there, free, unmolested—the same Emma Goldman that the American democracy had deported. She was utterly opposed to the Soviet regime and never hesitated to say so.

He heard Mensheviks and Socialist Revolutionaries speak, and speak violently against the communists, in election meetings for the soviets and elsewhere.

He saw a sign of an anarchist club hang over the entrance of a soviet-owned and soviet-run house in Moscow. No prosecution resulted from all this.

So who are the "political prisoners" whose release the "S. P.ites" of the Workmen's Circle and the I. L. G. W. U. demand?

They are people who, in the name of anarchism, organized what they called expropriation expeditions, but what in reality were expeditions of banditry.

Whoever dared, to protect the property of the soviets from these bandits was killed mercilessly, was murdered.

Fixing the Crime

Whoever demands the release of such bandits and murderers identifies himself with them and their acts. We do not question the S. P. right to do that. But to do that in the name of unsuspecting workers is a crime.

These political prisoners whose release the "S. P.ites" demand are members of the bands of Machnow and Antonow, who pillaged, robbed and killed. While the workers of Moscow and Petrograd starved, these "politicals" held up, "expropriated" and burned trainloads of grain coming from the Ukraine or from Siberia and destined to feed the hungry workers in those cities.

They organized bands of the size of armies. With the help of them they took villages and cities. They shot all communists and communist suspects they could lay their hands on. And then, these friends of Anarchy or democracy set up a military dictatorship in place of the Soviets.

To demand the release of these "politicals" is to identify oneself with their crimes. We do not question the S. P.ites right to such honors. But we ask the members of the Workmen's Circle and the I. L. G. W. U. whether they want their organizations, whether they want themselves identified with these crimes against the first Workers Republic.

"But," the Gentlemen of the S. P. may say, "we do not mean these Anarchists, we mean the mensheviks and the socialist revolutionaries. They are socialists, like us."

Yes, indeed, Gentlemen from the S. P., they are Socialists like you are. You are just like them. You would do the same thing to a proletarian revolution in America what they did to it in Russia.

Aided Allied Bayonets

The mensheviks organized the counter revolutionary government in Archangel. With the aid of allied bayonets they gave the unhappy inhabitants a taste of their democracy. At their all-Russian conference in 1918 in Moscow they declared in favor of the counter-revolution and issued a call for insurrection against the Soviets.

They instigated and organized strikes in the ammunition factories of the soviets at a time when the life of the Workers Republic depended on a successful struggle against the Kolchaks, Denikins, Yudenitch, Semenow, Petlura and countless other whites. The mensheviks, these enemies of terror, organized the white terror the first days of the revolution.

They put out a helping hand to the bourgeoisie when that class was terror stricken and helpless by the taking of power of the proletariat.

They took up the fight for the bourgeoisie. They organized sabotage throughout the land. Destroyed houses, locomotives and thousands of other necessities throughout Russia still tell the tale of the deeds of those "politicals".

When Mensheviks Rejoice

The insurrection of Kaledin and of the Ukrainian Rada was supported by them. In the days when the whites waded through streams of blood of murdered communists in Samara and Kazan the mensheviks in those cities rejoiced over the victory of "order".

In their papers, which significantly were the only "socialist" papers that could appear under white rule, they declared for a continuance of the "punishment of traitors", meaning the killing of communists and sympathizers.

Peter Maslow, one of the best known leaders of the mensheviks declared it as the foremost duty of every party member to line up actively with the counter-revolution.

These staunch believers in democracy supported every military dictatorship set up by Kolchak, Denikin, Wrangel and others as against the Soviets.

The gentlemen of the S. P. sympathize with the mensheviks in prison. But not because of abstract love for democracy and liberty, but because of their sympathy with the activities of the mensheviks.

Let Them Have Courage

We do not dispute the right of the gentlemen from the S. P. to have such sympathies. On the contrary. We think them to be quite natural. But they should have courage enough to say what they mean.

Let them say: "We are for a counter-revolution in Russia and therefore demand the release of its leaders from Russian prisons." Let them say: "The mensheviks are our brothers and comrades. Therefore we hate their enemies."

Let them say: "We are enemies of the proletarian revolution. Therefore we are friends of the leaders of the counter revolution and demand their release from prison."

Let them say what they think: "How can the counter-revolution which we desire with all our heart, make progress as long as its most experienced and most active leaders and agents are in prison. Therefore we demand their release."

It is hypocrisy in the highest degree to exploit the slogan of "release of political prisoners" in connection [illegible]

ATTENTION!

THE WORKER will go to press one day earlier than heretofore. It will now reach a great many readers on Saturday instead of Monday, and all readers one day earlier. Changes of address should be sent in as early as possible.—Business Manager.

[illegible] With American money he started a counter-revolutionary news paper in Petrograd after February 1917. He was the friend of Kerenski and helped organize the insurrection of Korniloff and the plot of Krasnow.

Morosiew, of the left S. R., organized the Czecho-Slovaks as the first military force of the counter-revolution in Russia.

The left S. R. organized the attentat against Count Mirbach. This attentat was to be the signal for a general revolt against the Soviets, organized by the S. R. throughout Russia.

This uprising, together with a general advance of the military forces of Germany, provoked by the killing of Mirbach, was to bring about the downfall of the revolution and the victory of the counter-revolution.

These "politicals" did not succeed, it is true. But the local uprisings they kindled succeeded in prolonging the period of intensive civil war and weakened for a while the forces of the Workers Republic in their struggle against Kolchak and others. Until the final defeat of foreign intervention the S. R. called for and supported foreign intervention.

An Empty Battle Cry

Antonow, who fought the red army like Machnow, was a disciple of the S. R. The murder of Uritzki and Volodarsky in Petrograd was organized by the S. R. Lenin is yet suffering from the poisoned bullets in his body directed against him by the executive committee of the S. R. The ruins of the former headquarters of the Moscow committee of the Communist Party of Russia bear yet witness of wholesale destruction and murder wrought by a bomb of the S. R.

And the leaders of that party who were caught in the meshes of the Cheka as murderers and would-be murderers, as organizers of the counter-revolution, as agents of Petlura and Pilsudski, as tools of capitalism and the capitalist class, are to be released as "politicals" from Russian prisons.

Abe Cahn and his "Forward" (??), and the whole coterie of the Socialist Party may consider it a good battle cry against Soviet Russia and against the left wing of the labor movement in this country. But the working masses will not fall for it.

The membership of the I. L. G. W. U. and the Workmen's Circle and such other organizations that may be selected by the S. P.ites as promising hunting grounds must and will resent this attempt of their misleaders to line them up in the defense of the counter-revolution in Russia, to line them up with Savinkow and Semenow, to line them up with the would-be-murderers of Lenin, against the first proletarian revolution, against Soviet Russia.

The cry of the Socialists, "release of political prisoners in Russia", will raise a mass protest of the workers against these socialists, and the echo will thunder back into their faces the accusation: Traitors!

The union cigar workers of Tampa, Fla., forced out of employment recently by the open-shop campaign, founded a co-operative cigar factory which not only has furnished them employment but has made a net profit of 8 per cent on the funds invested by the workers.

As we go to press, the delegates were beginning to "arrive" at Cincinnati for the American Federation of Labor convention. This does not mean that labor in this country has "arrived" as a solidified, class-conscious unit.

Lenin Is Recovering

The first authentic news out of Soviet Russia concerning the recent illness of Nikolai Lenin comes from the Soviet Embassy at Riga, Latvia. It declares that his condition is now normal, that he is convalescing.

It is declared that Lenin suffered a severe attack of gastritis on May 28. Aggravated by previous overwork this attack affected his nerves and circulation.

It is hoped that Lenin's convalescence will lead to his complete recovery, only made possible by the recent extraction from his body of the bullet fired by a deluded would-be-assassin, who thought that Lenin's death would be followed by the death of the revolution.

Nevertheless, it is impossible to exaggerate the part Lenin has played in the overthrow of Czarism in Russia. His services are needed now, more than ever, during the important period of reconstruction and transition from Capitalism to Communism.

May Lenin soon be back in the full bloom of health so that he may aid in the new sledge-hammer blows that must be delivered at the latest capitalist-imperialist conference soon to meet at The Hague.

The work of transporting thousands of America's class-conscious workers to the great industrial and mining projects in the Kurbas Basin and Urals, in Soviet Russia, is proceeding in good shape in spite of the antagonistic propaganda of the New York Times.

Our Press Must Grow

THE WORKER has started a campaign to add 25,000 new readers to its subscription list.

You will say that this is a big task. It is. It is a herculean effort. But it must be accomplished.

These are not days when the workers readily subscribe to publications of any kind. They haven't the funds to do so.

The ten million jobless, who need education the most, can't afford to get it. Those employed hold on to their meager resources dreading the day when they, too, will be jobless.

This is the situation that must be met and overcome by THE WORKER, supported by its readers and sympathizers, in the drive for 25,000 new readers.

The plan of this campaign is outlined on another page. Study it carefully. Read it thru again and again. It will enthuse you. It will fire you with the necessity of putting it over.

THE WORKER contains material that every working man and woman should read. Those who toil must be persuaded that no sacrifice is too great to enable them to have THE WORKER come into their homes every week.

Our press has been hard hit. The Palmer raids, the paper trust with its exorbitant prices on white paper, and now the industrial depression, all have struck crushing blows against our press.

But we must, we are coming back stronger than ever. THE WORKER is growing in power and influence. We want it to grow faster.

Join the campaign: "25,000 NEW READERS!" Don't stand back. Get into this struggle. With your help we will win!

Senorita Graciala Mandujano, delegate from Chile to the Pan-American Conference of Women, at Washington, wants to know the names of the twelve greatest American women. We predict the decision will go to the twelve who have been able, in one way or another, to get the most space in the notoriety-seeking kept press.

A Matter of Life Or Death

Would you like to hear what the simple words: "Work harder for smaller wages" sound like when translated into the language of diplomacy?

If so, then read the following pronouncement by one Arthur Balfour, an eminent English lawmaker, upon whom the rulers look with great respect because of his sterling services in fooling the British workers:

> "There is only one way in which the world's debts and the reparation money can be paid and that is by vast and continuous efforts on the part of the people of the country who have to pay and a great increase in productive capacity per head of population.
> There must be more strenuous labor, aided by improved methods of production and organization. The only other alternative is a great reduction in the standard of living.
>
> In some countries the standard of living has reached a point where it contains so much of luxury that the only way in which it can be maintained is by a vastly greater production and vastly greater individual effort than we have seen in recent years.
> We shall have to look to the home lives of our various nations and the upbringing of our children, and endeavor to return to the more simple and fundamental methods of training if we are to produce citizens who will cope successfully with the years of anxiety still before us."

There are many workers who think that the horrors of war end with the coming of peace but the above frank and brutal—for a diplomat—expression should serve to convince them that the old saying should be paraphrased to read: "Peace has its miseries as well as war."

Only by forcing the workers down to a far lower standard of living than they have yet endured can the capitalist system pull itself out of the mire.

It is well to keep in mind that with capitalism facing this necessity the fight to preserve and raise the wages and living standard becomes a revolutionary struggle.

The open shop movement, the attempt to destroy all labor organization, is not inspired alone by the desire for larger profits.

It is a matter of life or death for the profit system.

The French investments are officially listed as follows:

	(Million francs)		(Million francs)
State loans	[illegible]	Credit Foncier [illegible] Bonds	[illegible]
Railway loans	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Railway Bonds	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Public Railway Bonds	[illegible]	Real and personal property, belonging to French citizens	7,0[illegible]
Banque de Credit, Provincial Bonds	[illegible]

At the pre-war rate of exchange this list amounts to more than three and one-half billion dollars—a tidy sum which the French bankers are loath to lose. The Belgium investments approximate one-half billion.

It is not hard to understand why France has a bankers' government; the finance-capitalists, when their foreign investments began to grow to such proportions took steps to secure a government that would protect those investments and to-day this is the dominant influence in shaping the policies of the French regime.

The Belgians, under the pressure from France, adopted the same attitude toward Russia and are risking all on the outside chance that the Soviet Government will fall.

We think it was one ~~Julius Caesar~~ who said: "It is easy to believe what we wish to believe" and certainly the antics of the French and Belgian diplomats are proof of the truth of this ancient maxim.

What Genoa demonstrated is what the Hague conference will corroborate: That Russia can get along without the rest of Europe but that Europe cannot get along without Russia.

Meanwhile the bankers' governments condemn the European peoples to unutterable miseries in the hope that they may yet recover the wealth wrung from them before the war.

The lives of the European workers have been thrown into the scales against the bankers credits for the last eight years.

Slowly but surely the human values begin to out-weigh the stolen wealth of which the francs, rubles, pounds and dollars are but symbols.

Human Life vs. Gold and Silver

American reaction has discovered a new propaganda weapon against Soviet Russia. It assumes to be horror stricken over the fact that Soviet Rule in Russia has found it necessary to use the treasures heaped up, in the form of gold, silver and jewels, in the churches for famine relief.

It were better, is the position of these reactionaries, that these dead treasures remained in the churches and that the people starved, that they died from hunger. Thus would the sanctity of religion be preserved. Soviet Russia takes an opposite viewpoint, that life is more sacred than these treasure hoards, and for this it is naturally condemned by these same reactionists.

On the same day that Bishop William T. Manning, in the Cathedral of St. John the Devine, on Fifth Ave., New York, was denouncing the Soviets for the arrest of the Patriarch Tikhon, for interfering with the requisitioning of this church wealth, we received a letter from a worker in Salem, Ohio, enclosing a copy of a local paper containing a rabid editorial under the heading "THE RED DOOM," that goes into hysterics over the bad manners of Russian Soviet Rule.

We find that the Patriarch Tikhon originally approved of the voluntary contribution of whatever gold and silver valuables the church possessed to aid in the purchase of food for the famine districts. It is easy to dodge anything that is voluntary.

As the famine situation grew worse the Soviet government decided to appropriate the treasures not used in any religious services and which had no religious value. It seems to have been here that Tikhon came to blows with Soviet rule. The hungry had a right to the superfluous church treasures. But the property hunger of the ecclesiastics hated so much to see the treasures go, that they were willing to use any means to retain its possession.

There will surely be a great falling away in the respect and reverence of the millions of starving in the Valley of the Volga for the church that values their lives less than its gold.

So, too, will the workers of this country discover the deceptions practiced upon them by kept press and subsidized pulpit.

Stately church edifices on New York's Fifth Avenue do not feed the hungry and starving in the city's slums. Neither does the printer's ink subsidized by rich advertisers provide clothing and shelter for the many jobless.

Soviet Russia's policy of taking the church treasures to feed the hungry has been endorsed and is being upheld by the Russian trade unions, the co-operatives and local councils, as well as large sections of the church itself.

The workers of Russia dare to provide for their great needs. They even demand the church help them in doing this.

Far be it from the ragged, hungry, jobless and homeless American worker to even entertain the thought that a great church structure even contains the possibility of a night's lodging. That would be wicked, an attempt to destroy the church, to wreck religion.

The Russian workers have no respect for property rights. In America labor still worships at its shrine, at the bidding of the bought press and pulpit.

But in America in time the awakening will also come.

Our best families are having a difficult time reconciling their matrimonial with their financial affairs. James Stillman was forced to quit as head of the National City Bank because of an Indian guide from the forests of Canada's backwoods, and now Harold F. McCormick steps out as president of the International Harvester Co., following the complications arising out of the engagement of his daughter to a Swiss horseman. And then they say that capitalism doesn't break up the home.

The Need for the United Front

We publish, in another column, portions of a letter from John Gatherum, secretary-treasurer of District No. 29, United Mine Workers of America.

This letter comes from the heart of the mine war in West Virginia. That is where the workers feel most the tremendous need for a united front.

Gatherum shows this in this letter. He responds enthusiastically to the program of the Workers Party for the United Front. He hopes it will meet with tremendous results.

In the mining camps of West Virginia, and elsewhere, nearly all the workers belong to one organization, the United Mine Workers. They are united in a solid mass in their class organization. It is difficult for them, therefore, to realize and understand the great divisions that exist among the various craft organizations in the large cities.

It must be rather bewildering to Lawrence Dwyer, executive board member of the United Mine Workers for West Virginia, to watch the efforts of organized labor in Greater New York seeking to provide aid for their struggling brothers in the coal fields.

Dwyer is here to get food for the miners and their families. The men, women and children are content to live in the open in the mountains, the women and children in tents, the men under the open skies, driven out of their company-owned shacks, BUT THEY MUST HAVE FOOD.

The committee of the Central Trades and Labor Council, however, instead of organizing a mighty conference of all New York's labor organizations, industrial and political, has decided to limit membership to the Central Trades, the United Hebrew Trades and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The Workers Party feels that this is a fatal mistake. This has been shown in the collection of relief funds to combat the Russian famine. It was the politically organized workers who had to take the lead in this effort. They are equipped, trained for such work.

It is to be hoped that the Central Trades and Labor Council will adopt and carry out the suggestion of the Workers Party for a united front of all labor organizations on behalf of our brothers of the coal mines. In the meantime the Workers Party will do all in its power to aid the miners in spite of the present divided front.

Henry Ford says he will run for president if the people want him. But he will spend no money to be nominated or elected. We ask him, "Does he expect an automobile to run without gasoline?" And a presidential boom needs a lot of gas.

Bakhmetieff Gone; Ughet Must Go!

When Boris Bakhmetieff, sent to the United States by the fallen Kerensky government in Russia, decided to quit the other day, he handed his resignation to Charles E. Hughes, secretary of State for the United States of America.

This is an honest confession that he has all along been the office boy of the present Harding administration and of the Wilson administration that preceded it, in its war on the Russian Soviet Republic.

It was, therefore, very kind of Harding and Hughes to allow Bakhmetieff to appoint his successor, "Serge Ughet, of New York City," financial attache of the Washington-controlled and financed Russian "embassy," and finance expert under the old czarist regime. It isn't often that the boss allows his office boy to "resign" and pick the one who is to continue on the job.

The whole situation would be laughable were it not so serious. This condition, where the capitalist "democracy" at Washington has maintained a puppet "embassy" for a fallen government, has been allowed to continue by a slumbering and self-satisfied working class.

It is questionable if the workers of any other nation on earth would tolerate such a joke. And the joke was perpetrated, and is still being perpetrated at the expense of the struggling Workers' Government of Soviet Russia.

The exposure of Bakhmetieff's record as a tool of Washington-Wall Street imperialism forced his resignation. But his successor is not one bit more desirable. Secretary of State Hughes calmly announces that the "firing" of Bakhmetieff has no bearing whatsoever on the question of the recognition of the Soviet Government of Russia.

We believe that. Politicians who occupy the places of power in a nation glutted with the world's gold supply and boasting ten million jobless and hungry working men and women, no doubt feel themselves privileged to hurl any insult at the working class, whether in this or any other country.

On another page we publish the most important declaration of the recent conference of the Enlarged Executive Committee of the Communist International. One of the slogans advanced by this conference, and it concerns most the workers of this country, was the following:

"Hands off Soviet Russia's independence and the resumption of normal political relations with her."

Let the workers raise that demand everywhere. Bakhmetieff is gone. Ughet must go. Soviet Russia must be recognized or Harding and Hughes must also go.

Flags Wave Everywhere as A. F. of L. Delegates Debate in Militia Armory

Dunne Sees 600,000 Striking Coal Miners and Oppressed Steel Workers as Spectres at Cincinnati Convention

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

Labor Editor, The Worker

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—At the Sinton Hotel, among the three best in this city, flies the headquarters banner of the American Federation of Labor Convention surrounded by American flags.

The convention sessions are held in the Ohio National Guard Armory and here again the sole decoration is the flag.

Flags draped from the beams, flags on the pillars, flags festooned over the doors and windows, flags enshrouding the platform.

This is the American Federation of Labor that is meeting here, you see, not some radical organization whose deliberations might embarrass the Chamber of Commerce that welcomes the American Federation of Labor Convention.

Near Scene of Big Steel Strike

Across the river is Newport, Kentucky, where the National Guard of that state recently came to the rescue of the gunmen of the steel trust.

The convention was welcomed to Cincinnati by Mayor Carrel, who said that this was an age conspicious for results obtained by conference, mediation and concessions.

Most of the delegates beamed with conscious virtue as this [illegible] because the employers will not even confer.

President Gompers also laid great stress on the lamb-like character of the American labor movement when he stated in his opening address that Labor wanted only to meet the employers around the conference board.

President Adolf Kummer, of the Central Labor Council here, likewise climbed aboard the peace special and proclaimed to all within earshot in his speech of welcome, that there was no radicalism in his fair city. "that element," he said, "that shouts the loudest and does the least, that is destructive rather than constructive that tears down rather than builds up, that element, I am happy to state, is not represented to any degree in union labor in Cincinnati."

Shows Cincinnati Poorly Organized

As Cincinnati is about the most poorly organized city of its size in the United States it is probable that Kummer is right.

The opening address was the usual fiery denunciation of the wicked employers who will not meet with the duly elected representatives of labor that has been the Gompers stock in trade for years.

It contained not a single suggestion that the policies of the past are now bearing the crop of evils that the radicals foresaw and not a single indication that the American Federation of Labor program—if it can be called such—will be changed one jot or tittle. It is just the usual mass of platitudinous verbiage and nothing more.

The claim that organized labor has scored a victory in combatting the open shop was made in the presence of delegates who knew that labor has been whipped because of its lack of unity and who know that every labor organization with the exception of the miners is having a hard struggle to preserve its identity.

It is estimated that about 500 delegates are present at this gathering which is always referred to by Gompers as the parliament of labor.

One Organization to Do Battle

At least one organization, the Railway and Steamship Clerks, will bring in and fight for resolutions on amalgamation of the unions in the railway industry, a real alliance with the miners and recognition of the Soviet government in Russia.

The resolutions of this organization on these subjects are clear cut and definite.

Unless debate is smothered by the machine this means that the whole Gompers policy will become the object of open attack on the floor of the convention.

There is a strong rebellious sentiment in evidence that would respond to a determined leadership but this is lacking.

Of recent development enough to excite comment is the great friendship between Lucy Robbins, of "no more political prisoners in America" fame, one of the agents of the Gompers secret service, and Lang, correspondent of the Jewish Daily Forward of New York City.

They are inseparable and it is quite evident that thru the Forward, Gompers is keeping in close touch with the Socialist—Abraham Cahan forces so that the foot of his new-

Big Struggle at Meeting of Furriers

By BEN GITLOW

The Furriers' Convention held in Philadelphia, June 5th to 10th, was marked by a bitter struggle between the delegates representing the New York Joint Board and the International officers of the union.

It was a bitter fight between left and right. The New York Joint Board delegates represented the left. The International President Morris Kaufman, represented the right.

The left advocated progressive trade union measures and heroically defended radical trade union principles.

The fight, supported by the Socialist Party, defended reactionary policies, abused and vilified the left on every occasion and used every means at its command to administer defeats upon the lefts.

Ervin's Advice for Others

Charles W. Ervin, Editor-Manager of the New York Call, opened his speech by stating that the workers have been fed up on writers and editors giving advice to labor organizations.

That remark did not prevent Ervin, an editor of a socialist paper, from proceeding to give advice to the Fur Workers gathered in convention.

He made veiled attacks upon the

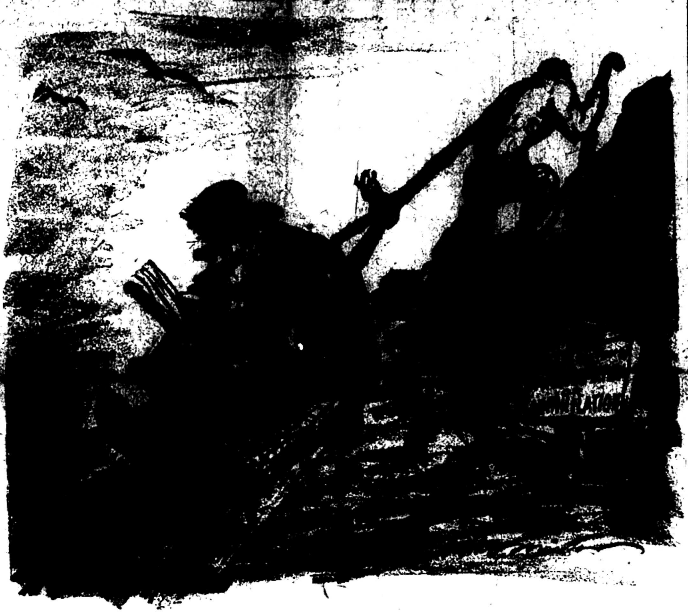
Labor's Upward Climb



How to Help Workers of Red Russia

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

"The workers of Russia cannot at all comprehend the backwardness of the workers in the United States. They cannot conceive of the stagnation that exists here, both politically and industrially. It is beyond them."

It is Attorney Charles Recht talking. Recht is attorney for Soviet Russia in the United States. He has just returned to this country after a four months' trip to Moscow. He stopped off at Paris and Berlin, and attended the Economic Conference at Genoa.

Should First Help Selves

I had one purpose in interviewing Attorney Recht. I wanted to present thru The Worker a summary of the things that the workers of this country could do in support of the workers in Soviet Russia.

Attorney Recht, who denies he is the "Red Ambassador" to the United States as some of the papers had it who only claims to be lawyer in this country for the workers, peasants and soldiers' government of Russia, smiled as I outlined my plan to him.

"I feel that the workers of this country ought to be doing something for themselves," he said, and then added. "But, I may say, that in

United Front Urged to Answer Supreme Court

Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party Calls Upon Workers to Take Independent Political Action to Meet Attack Upon Labor

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party of America has issued a powerful manifesto analysing the decision of the Supreme Court in the Coronado case and showing that the decision of the court is but another evidence that all the power of the existing government is behind the employers in their effort to destroy the workers organizations.

The committee points to this decision as emphasizing the need for a United Front and urges the workers to rally to the program for united stand against the open shop and unemployment, proposed by the Workers Party in a recent manifesto. The statement on the Supreme Court decision follows:—

THE CORONADO DECISION: A CHALLENGE TO LABOR!

The Supreme Court of the United States has brought new reinforcement to the support of the employers in their attack upon the organized workers of this country.

By its unanimous decision in the Coronado coal case it has placed a deadly weapon with which to beat down the organized workers in the hands of the employing class.

For nearly two years the capitalists of the United States have been engaged in an attack upon the unions which has as its purpose to destroy these organizations. All the forces which the employers have been able to mobilize have been used to break down the resistance of the workers. With wide spread unemployment as a condition creating a favorable opportunity for their attack the employers have marshalled for the struggle industrial courts,

New York Labor to Say "Good Bye!" to Bakhmetieff June 20

"Ambassador" Boris Bakhmetieff has announced that he will sail for London on June 20. On this day the Workers Party has arranged a "farewell" meeting at which Charles Recht, who has just returned from Russia and Genoa, and is attorney in this country of the Soviet Republic, will be one of the speakers.

The meeting will be held in the Central Opera House, and other speakers will include Paxton Hibben, M. J. Olgin, C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers Party, and Ludwig Lore, Editor of the Volkszeitung.

All workers of New York City should attend this meeting and give the "ambassador" a proper send-off.

The meeting will be held at the time when the Hague conference is in full swing and when Soviet Russia will again cover the front pages of the capitalist press.

The meeting will raise the issues of loan, recognition and trade with Soviet Russia and will fully expose the predatory policy of the capitalist administration at Washington.

Nelson Boyd, Department of Justice agent in charge at Albany, N. Y., did not order the arrest of any circulators of amnesty petitions on May 20, National Amnesty Day, he declares in a letter to the General Defense Committee here. The Albany Knickerbocker Press had stated that such arrests were ordered.

Moscow Bares Many Crimes of "S. R.s"

EDITOR'S NOTE:—The case against the counter-revolutionaries now on trial in a Communist Court in Moscow is presented in an appeal to the workers of the world just issued by the Communist International under the heading, "The Trial of the So-Called 'Social Revolutionaries'", who are also referred to as "S. R.". The trial started June 8, at Moscow, instead of June 1, as the manifesto states. We wonder if the "democracy" loving "Socialist" press of this country will publish the manifesto of the Communist International, which is as follows:

On the 1st of June, 1922, there begins in Moscow the trial of the Social Revolutionaries to which the class conscious world proletariat must pay attention. [illegible] members of the party which bears the proud name "Social Revolutionary" are on trial.

Many workers who know but little of the most important political parties in Russia will probably think that they are real Socialists and real revolutionaries.

Not Real Revolutionaries.

As a matter of fact, however, they are "Social Revolutionaries" like the "Radical Socialists" or the "Independent Socialists" in France.

This bourgeois party which calls itself "Democratic" or even "Socialist" has in fact carried on for years an armed struggle against the Russian proletariat.

The late Plekhanoff, when he was still a Marxist, named this party "Social Reactionaries."

The Social Revolutionaries have perpetrated countless crimes against the Russian revolution.

Perpetrate Countless Crimes.

In the first days of the March revolution of 1917 the leaders of the S. R. together with the Menshevik leaders surrendered the power seized by the workers and soldiers to the bands of open imperialists led by Gutchkoff, Milioukoff, Prince Lvoff and other flunkeys of the Entente.

The Social Revolutionaries and the Mensheviks exerted all their influence upon the soldiers, the peasants and that portion of the working class that still had confidence in them, to use them to augment the power of the bourgeoisie and prosecute the war begun by the Czar Nicholas II in the name of Russia.

In June 1917, Kerensky, a former minister, a member of the Central Committee of the Social Revolutionary Party, began—with the full support of all the leaders of his party—the offensive which cost the lives of thousands upon thousands of Russian soldiers and workers. This he did at the instance of the English and French imperialists.

Tried to "Frame" Bolsheviks.

In July 1917, the S. R. and the Mensheviks, who at that time belonged to the so-called Bourgeois Coalition Government, attempted to work up a sort of Dreyfus Affair against the leaders of the Bolsheviks.

The Social Revolutionary and Menshevik minister stooped to the vilest hypocrisy and accused Lenin, Trotzky, Zinoviev, Lunatcharsky and a number of other old revolutionists of being agents of the German Kaiser, from whom it was alleged they had obtained funds for their anti-war agitation.

This was a conscious attempt at judicial murder, a deliberate cold-blooded plan to deliver the leaders of the Russian revolutionary proletariat found ally may not slip before election.

Left Wingers Organize

A little leftwing group is already meeting but it is too early to predict what the strength of the opposition will be if any of the contentious matter gets to the floor.

From what I have seen of this convention and from talks I have had with various delegates I believe that if the convention does anything it will be a departure from previous policies but it will not do anything.

The old machine dare not let matters pertaining to its delinquencies come on the floor. There is just enough opposition here to make it dangerous; in all probability during this hour of its greatest need American labor will be administered the negative treatment.

Sees Signs of Progress

The first sign of progressive sentiment manifested by the convention was the applause given Ernest Robinson, Secretary of the Winnipeg Central Labor Council, fraternal delegate from the trades congress of the Dominion of Canada.

He was loudly applauded when he urged independent political action, the furtherance and support of the Rochdale co-operative movement for its value in relief work during strikes and international affiliation that would give American and Canadian labor a broader outlook and tend to bind workers of all lands into a world-wide organization resisting the attacks of capitalism.

His definite recommendations were in striking contrast to the carefully worded and more or less meaningless expressions of good will and peace on earth voiced by the fraternal delegates from the British Trades Union Congress who preceded him.

No Flattery from Gompers

Gompers made no flattering remarks concerning his speech as he had done with those of the ancient pensioners of the British Trades Union Congress.

Andrew Furuseth, of the seamen, spoke for more than a half hour in denunciation of the ship subsidy bill now pending. He drew a terrible picture of the conditions of the seafarers before the passage of the seamen's law and since its nullification without mentioning that in California he has assisted the authorities of that state to enforce the criminal syndicalism law against his own members.

Almost all the aims of the radicals are represented by one or more resolutions, and the task of the committee is to so re-frame them that a fight cannot come on the floor.

Sillinsky of the Journeymen Tailors has introduced a resolution calling upon the Executive Council to invite the Hat and Cap Makers and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers to affiliate. A resolution for support of the Sacco-Vanzetti defense has been introduced by Luigi Antonini, of the Ladies' Garment Workers.

Would Throttle Debate

There is enough dynamite in these things to seriously jar if not to upset the Gompers regime, and all of its efforts will be devoted to throttling the debate on these vital questions.

It is sad but true that the radicals and progressive elements are unorganized. Most of them are afraid to enter a caucus because the fact might be used against them if the fight gets hot.

Every organization represented here is fighting for its life, and the brutal truth is that many delegates feel that they cannot antagonize the Gompers element at a time when each organization needs the support of all the rest.

These are realities that many of the radicals have failed to acknowledge. For instance, here is the Maintenance of Way Union expelled from the A. F. of L. because it would not relinquish members over which the Carpenters claimed jurisdiction. They are cut off from the rest of the labor movement and their officials cannot even come here to present their plea for reinstatement because an Ohio employer has brought suit against the organization.

To come to the convention means that the funds of the union would be attached.

Unless the other railway unions get solidly behind the Maintenance of Way Men the Carpenters will continue to make their claim.

The Carpenters themselves are out of the Building Trades Department because the installing of metal trim was awarded to the Sheet Metal Workers. The Carpenters' Union is anti-Gompers.

The Maintenance of Way Men are anti-Gompers, but it is Gompers alone that seems to be solid. It is all a fine mess that gives the employers much joy, the radicals much concern, and that can only be untangled by a disciplined organization of the rank and file which is not yet in evidence here.

vicious injunctions, gunmen, soldiers—every weapon in their grasp.

So long as the workers retained the right to strike, so long as they could halt production and thus cut off the source of the capitalist employers' profits they held a weapon which made it impossible for the employers to completely destroy their organizations. It is this weapon, the right to strike, which the Supreme Court endeavors to wrench from the hands of the workers in the Coronado decision.

The History of the Coronado Case

The Coronado case grew out of a strike in Sebastian County, Arkansas, against several coal companies operating there, including the Coronado Co. These companies had endeavored to establish the open shop in the Arkansas coal fields. During the strike the companies brought in scabs and gunmen and as is usual when these tools of the capitalists appear upon the scenes in a strike, some destruction of property took place.

The Coronado Co. charged that the Mine Workers' Union was responsible for the destruction and brought suit against the United Mine Workers under the Sherman anti-trust law. The District Court in which the case was tried awarded damages of $200,000 to the Coronado Co., which under the Sherman law was trebled and the unions ordered to pay, including costs, $800,000.

The United Mine Workers appealed the case to the United States Supreme Court and was compelled to deposit $1,100,000 with the court as security in this and another case while the case was pending, to cover the damages awarded, attorneys fees and other charges, in case of an adverse decision.

The Sherman anti-trust law was ostensibly directed against the trusts which sought unlawfully to stifle competition. After the Danbury Hatters' case, in which the union was mulcted of $214,911 by final decision of the Supreme Court in 1915, the A. F. of L. secured the passage of the Clayton law declaring that "labor was not a commodity or article of commerce" and therefore could not come within the scope of the Sherman law. The passage of this law was hailed as a great victory by the Gompers machine.

The Supreme Court Decision

The unanimous decision of the Supreme Court in the Coronado case makes so much waste paper of the Clayton law. While the immediate effect of the decision is a reversal of the decision of the lower court and the release of the $1,100,000 deposited by the United Mine Workers the interpretation of the Sherman law in the decision is the most deadly blow directed against the unions by the courts of this country.

The Supreme Court declares that the Sherman anti-trust law does apply to labor unions. It declares that the unions calling a strike are financially responsible for the loss suffered by the employers. It declares that if the International Union endorses and supports the strike of a local union its officials are responsible for violence in the strike and it can be sued and compelled to pay damages from its treasury.

In the Coronado case the decision levying damages against the national organization of the United Mine Workers is reversed and the fund deposited released because there was no evidence to show that the national organization had called or endorsed the strike in Sebastian County.

This immediate victory for the national organization of the United Mine Workers is turned into a defeat for the miners' district organizations in Arkansas and labor generally by the opinion rendered that a union calling and supporting a strike is responsible for the damage suffered by the employers. The Coronado case is sent back to the District Court for proceedings against the District Organization of the United Mine Workers which is responsible for damages under the court decision.

The Meaning of the Decision

In all the recent struggles of the workers they have found that the whole machinery of the government was arrayed against them in addition to the industrial power of the employers. Usually the government hides behind some high sounding phrases such as "law and order" in the attacks made against the workers. In the Coronado decision the Supreme Court has openly exposed the existing government as a tool of the capitalist class to help beat and keep the workers in submission.

At a time when six hundred thousand mine workers are on strike, fighting a life-and-death struggle against the attempt of the bosses to establish the open shop in that industry when a hundred thousand textile workers are making a desperate struggle to maintain wages which will give them a decent standard of living, the Supreme Court steps in to strike labor the most smashing blow in the history of the class struggle in this country.

Hereafter all that the profit-greedy bosses need to do when a strike is called is to hire a few gunmen and scabs to destroy some of their property and then to go into the courts and tie up the union treasury by a suit for damages. Furthermore, as in the Danbury Hatters' case, if the money cannot be collected from the union each individual member of the union can be held responsible and if necessary their hard-won homes, if they have such, can be sold over their heads to pay the claim of the capitalists for damages.

The Coronado decision openly establishes as the fundamental law of this country what has been the case in fact. It places behind the capitalist the whole machinery of the government of the United States. Each time a strike is called the employers will see to it that their property is damaged, they will go into the courts, and under the Coronado decision the courts, the police, the army, the whole organization of force of the government will stand behind them in their effort to destroy the workers' organizations.

Challenge to the Workers

The decision of the Supreme Court is a challenge to the workers of the United States.

In 1901 a similar decision was directed against the English workers when the Taff Vale Co. was awarded damages against the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants by the British court. The answer of the workers of England was to engage in independent political action. They compelled the British Parliament to nullify the decision of the court.

How will the workers of the United States answer the new weapon forged by the employers to destroy their organizations?

Will they continue to follow the reactionary leadership which now divides them. Will they continue to support the Gompers' policy of "rewarding our friends and punishing our enemies," which wins for them such empty victories as the Clayton law called by Gompers "labor's charter of liberty" and Supreme Court decisions such as that in the Coronado case?

The Workers Party of America calls upon the workers of the United States to meet the challenge of the Supreme Court by building a United Front to fight the bosses and their government.

The workers must mobilize their whole political and industrial power against the bosses just as the bosses are mobilizing all their power against the workers.

They must engage in the political struggles thru a class party of the workers. They must use their political power not only thru the election, but thru mass demands upon the government, backed when necessary by a general strike.

They must close their ranks upon the industrial field by knitting together their unions, by the unions standing together and supporting each other in every struggle.

Let us be done with supporting the political parties of the bosses. Let us be done with the silly "reward our friends and punish our enemies" policy. Let us be done with fighting in single companies or divisions to be beaten by a united capitalist class.

Let us unite against the bosses as they have united against us. Let us build a United Front of Labor, a United Front on the political field thru a working class political party and a United Front on the industrial field thru great industrial unions standing united against the attack of the bosses.

Let us build the UNITED FRONT.

Let us use the power that a UNITED FRONT will give us to nullify the decision of the Supreme Court.

Let us use the power to wrench beter wages and working conditions from the employers.

Let us go forward to the day when the workers will rule, when they will establish their own workers government and reorganize industry under the control and for the benefit of labor.

Miners Like "The Worker"

Wickham, W. Va., June 7, 1922.

Editor, The Worker: I have just read some articles in The Worker, and am glad to know that there is one news paper that will print the truth for miners of W. Va.

I have shown men of this vicinity The Worker and they certainly do appreciate it.

Trusting you will keep on printing good news for the unions while we have a man in New York like Lawrence Dwyer working for us.

I am,

Yours very truly,

The pearly wisdom of Ervin was expressed in his closing remarks when he flung his arms into the air and declared:

"I am with the majority, right or wrong."

Translated into plain language, Ervin is with every labor fakir and betrayer if he is in the majority. Ervin is with the capitalist class because that class is supported by the majority of the people.

Amalgamation Is Urged

Kosslovsky, General Manager of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, greeted the convention on behalf of his organization.

He urged it to accept the plan of amalgamation of all unions in the needle trades. He said:

"The time is very short when all workers in the needle trades will get together in one organization to fight against the manufacturers and combat the open shop."

D. Braginsky, General Secretary of the United Hebrew Trades of Philadelphia, a reactionary Socialist Party union official, while addressing the convention said:

"Be good fighters in time of strike and good dues-payers in time of peace."

"Even those who among us once preached the breaking and smashing of labor unions now preach the united front. The Third International campaign for the United Front is necessary now in the United States."

All Delegates Seated

The next day a credential committee was elected.

It was pointed out that the administration had prepared a slate for the credential committee.

Slips of paper with the names of its candidates typewritten upon it were handed out to the delegates that were controlled by the administration machine.

Brownstein, the left candidate for the credential committee, was defeated. He received twenty votes. The rights hailed this as their initial victory. Following the election of the credential committee a rules committee was elected upon which committee not one left delegate was elected.

The credential committee reported that fifty delegates were present at the convention representing eleven cities. In the interest of harmony and unity in the organization they decided that all the delegates present be seated.

When the committee on rules and regulations governing the convention reported a discussion arose over the recommendation of the committee that only those visitors be permitted to attend the convention who were members in good standing in the Fur Workers' Union, who represented accredited labor organizations or who had credentials from newspapers or organizations friendly to labor.

Tactics of the Right

The left opposed this recommendation because they wanted the activities of the convention to be open to all as were other labor union conventions and because they did not want a newspaper that criticized the doings of the convention to be barred.

The rights in defending the recommendation used the occasion to attack and villify the lefts as defenders of capitalist labor-hating newspapers, the department of justice and stool pigeons.

This abusive, insinuating attack upon the left was done purposely in order to discredit them in the eyes of the delegates who were not familiar with the New York situation.

The recommendation of the committee upon the exclusion of visitors was accepted by a vote of 29 against 7. The provision however, was never strictly enforced during the convention.

Has His Report Read

A motion was made not to read the voluminous report of the president. The motion was passed by a vote of 18 to 17. The president felt that the convention, in abandoning its custom of always having the president's report read, had slurred him. He immediately showed his disapproval of this action. Upon a motion by his lieutenant, Stetsky, the former action of not reading the report was reversed by a vote of 28 to 20.

While the president's report was being read, Max Pine, head of the United Hebrew Trades, made his appearance. When the reading of the president's report was finished the president introduced him to the delegates of the convention.

Max Pine showed plainly that the developments in the Jewish unions in the past few years, the fight going on against the old officialdom that stands in the way of the membership and trade union progress, was greatly distressing him.

Max Pine's Worries

Max Pine said: "We are with you when a great many of you furriers are against yourselves. You will have to solve the problem of peace and harmony in your organization.

"If the convention will not solve the situation in New York the convention will not be complete. I was not successful in bringing the factions together in New York before this convention.

Calls Self "Street Fakir"

"Both parties look upon me as a street fakir who wants to bring about something unreasonable.

"This peace is required not only for the furriers but for the millions of workers in the United States. To be fair to both parties in New York is to say that both parties are unjust. My heart is petrified.

"The time to bring unity is now opportune. I will stay if necessary to the end of this convention to bring harmony. This convention must force the harmonization of the New York Joint Board. There is no principle involved in the fight of the two factions."

Brownstein, of the New York Joint Board delegation, assured Pine that his wish will come true and thanked Brother Pine for his efforts.

A committee of five was nominated to serve as a committee to bring the two factions in New York together in order to achieve harmony.

Gitlow Declines Nomination

I was nominated to serve on the committee but declined to do so.

The committee consisted for the administration of Morris Kaufman, president, and Wenneis, general secretary; for the New York Joint Board, Brownstein, general manager New York Joint Board, and Rosenthal, financial secretary of the New York Joint Board. Max Pine was the chairman.

Kaufman made a speech on unity in which he said: "For the information of the convention I want to say that three weeks ago I came to the conclusion that we must, under all circumstances, come together, even if we have to meet people whom we don't like in private life.

"We cannot let this situation go on. Two weeks ago I called a conference of some members with whom I had not been on speaking terms for a long time.

"I felt it was my duty as president of the union that we cannot afford to let this thing go on.

"I agreed on this conference for a committee of five from each side to undertake the question of bringing harmony in the organization. This was not a political move.

Charges Kaufman Insincere

"This movement is not for personal gains and benefits. It is a question where all the work we have accomplished in a number of years is in danger. As long as we have the spirit that expressed itself in the 30-weeks' strike it would be a crime to destroy it."

Motion to appoint the committee of five as nominated was passed by a vote of 46, five members of the left wing delegation refraining from voting.

After the vote Rosenthal of the New York Joint Board delegation exploded a bombshell in the camp of the "rights" when he pointed out that the president was not sincere in his desire for peace.

He said: "The president was not for peace all the time. If he would be for peace there would be peace long ago.

"In 1921, at Chicago, when the situation was very serious in New York and was threatening to disrupt the organization I requested Kaufman to come to New York to make peace.

"Kaufman did not find it necessary to come to New York for that purpose."

"Lefts" Control in New York

The situation here referred to was explained two weeks ago in an article that appeared in THE WORKER. It is briefly this. The "lefts" have control of the New York Joint Board. Control of the New York Joint Board gives them control over the New York members of Locals 1, 5, 10 and 15 that comprise about 75 per cent of the entire membership of the Fur workers' international union.

In order to discredit the left the reactionary and socialist officialdom organized a welfare club for the express purpose of sabotaging the activities of the New York Joint Board and disrupting their union work.

The activities of the welfare club have aroused the indignation of the New York Joint Board and the membership of the locals whose confidence the Joint Board has

The International and particularly the president has supported the welfare club against the membership and the New York Joint Board. It is this situation that must be remedied if peace is to be brought into the Fur workers' union.

You can reach some workers no one else can. You have your circle of associates, you have your union, your society, your club.

It must be your business to reach these workers with THE WORKER and to get their subscriptions. We know you are wishing THE WORKER all success in this campaign.

You want THE WORKER to become a daily.

But this campaign will not be successful on wishes—but on the work of subscription getting done by you and others.

We say, that when the well wishes of the thousands of Workers Party members and WORKER readers are converted into the work of hustling WORKER subs—the campaign will move on to its logical and successful conclusion.

Keep on wishing—but do the work necessary for success. Join the number of workers.

Labor Film Service Showing the Jungle

Upton Sinclair is in New York to supervise the initial showing of a moving picture based upon his book "The Jungle."

Many labor unions have pledged themselves to make this first venture of labor into the movie field a success and under the auspices of the Labor Film Service, Inc. It is planned to produce a series of pictures with the labor point of view and to establish a regular service for theatres desiring to show these films.

The first showing will be at the National Winter Garden, Houston St. and 2nd Ave., this Monday.

Gail Kane and George Nash take the leading roles in the screen version of "The Jungle" and Augustus Thomas supervised its production. The artistic values have not been subordinated to the propaganda side and the picture is exactly what the book was—the greatest presentation ever written of the misery of the workers in the great industrial establishments of America.

Following the showing of "The Jungle" will be exhibited a drama dealing with the struggles of the miners of West Virginia now being screened by the Labor Film Service.

"Zanesville on the map" is written across the top of a copy of the Times Recorder, of Zanesville, Ohio, by a local comrade. And, sure enough, the biggest story on the page tells of a suit filed by the Star Ice and Storage Co. against the Engineers' Union and the Central Labor Council charging conspiracy to unionize the place. The story indicates that the suit was inspired by the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court holding labor unions suable for damages.

Decisions of the Red Labor International

EDITOR'S NOTE:—This week we conclude the publication of the decisions of the second conference of the Executive Committee of Red Trade Union International. This is the resolution on the report of the executive committee. The Second Congress of the Red International, or, as it is called, the Profintern, is set for Oct. 25th, at Moscow, coincident with the holding of the Fourth Congress of the Comintern, the Communist International. The concluding installment of the Profintern's executive committee's decisions is as follows:

Resolution on the Report of the Executive Bureau of the Red Trade International

1. The second conference of the Executive Committee of the Red Trade Union International approves of the activities of the Executive Bureau. The Executive Committee expresses its satisfaction that in spite of all difficulties success has crowned the efforts to accelerate the process of revolutionizing the trade-unions thruout the world and to make the Red Trade Union International the center of vitality in the revolutionary class struggle of the proletariat.

2. The Executive Committee endorses all measures adopted by the Executive Bureau for establishing the united front and also all proposals made in this respect to the Amsterdam Trade Union International, especially those re the White Terror in Spain and in Jugoslavia and the prevention of the split in the French trade-union movement.

3. The Executive Committee approves the tactics of the Executive Bureau which aim at the affiliation of the various revolutionary trade-unions to the respective Craft and Industrial Secretariats.

4. The Executive Committee enjoins upon the national sections to work more intensively than hitherto for the Red Trade Union International wherever occasion offers itself—shop and trade-union meetings, trade-union and party congresses etc., and for this purpose keep in close contact with the Executive Bureau.

5. In consideration of the fact that regular publication both of the central organ of the Red Trade Union International and of other important matter in the major languages is essential the Executive Committee decided to instruct the Executive Bureau to have the organs printed in Western Europe.

6. There being a decided shortage of suitable trade-union literature the Executive Committee instructs the Executive Bureau to take all necessary steps to augment the library of the Red Trade Union International and thus provide its followers with the necessary mental weapons. For this purpose collaborators are to be invited from the various countries. The literature must be distributed thru the organizational channels of the revolutionary trade-unions and minorities; care must be taken that, if possible the whole of the expenses incurred be covered by the literature returns.

7. The Executive Committee deems it essential that all possibilities for providing the party and trade-union press rapidly and regularly with the latest material on the activities of both the Profintern and the revolutionary trade-union movement be utilized to the utmost (Internationale Telegraphenagentur).

8. The Executive Bureau must devote serious attention to the danger of national splits and the reformist-imperialist vacillations of the trade-unions in the Asiatic colonies and semi-colonial countries which have been caused in part by the immigration of skilled European labor. Such tendencies must be opposed by all possible means.

9. In recognizing the ever growing importance of the labor movement in the Orient which is being industrialized and the necessity for close contact and unity between that movement and the Red Trade Union International, the Executive Committee realizes the necessity for the establishment of a special bureau in the Far East to conduct and supervise agitation among the workers of the Orient.

10. In conclusion the Executive Committee approves of the circular of the Executive Bureau regarding juvenile labor and also all steps taken with a view of establishing close cooperation between the Red Trade Union International and the Young Communist International. The Executive Bureau must do everything within its power for the interests of juvenile labor in order to induce organized adult labor to fight effectively for the economic interests of the young workers whose representatives must be enrolled into the unions on an equal footing with their adult fellow workers.

Donlin Suits The Times

The New York Times, the golden mouthpiece of Wall Street plunder and reaction, has discovered another labor leader it is able to endorse.

The honors this time have been bestowed upon John Donlin, president of the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor.

The Times also endorses some of Donlin's ideas, chief among which is a plan to establish a labor oligarchy in the building trades with dictatorial power over the calling of strikes.

This might be a good thing for the building contractors' rings. They wouldn't be compelled to buy up so many corrupt labor officials in their open shop war against the mass of the workers.

Donlin claims there are too many strikes. The wage worker might reply that he has to eat too often, that the rent man comes around too frequently, that his clothes wear out too soon.

The strike is one of the few weapons and the most effective weapon of the man on the job. He uses it to better his position in the warfare against his boss. He always strikes at a great sacrifice to himself and his family. He doesn't strike because he likes it, but because he must. The trades union official is merely an instrument for carrying out his wishes in this respect.

Placing the strike calling power in the hands of a small clique of conservative international officials means that half the time the workers will not know what they are striking about. This usually results in a loss of a morale that means the loss of the strike.

The New York Times isn't so blind but that it sees how this pet scheme of Mr. Donlin will work out. It is the thing that Simon O'Donnell, formerly president of the Chicago Building Trades Council, pledged himself to the bosses to put over several years ago. The logical outcome was the Landis Award, with its anti-labor union clauses, that was the forerunner of the present "open shop" war in that city.

The Times favors Donlin and his plan. That is sufficient reason for the workers to oppose it with all the power at their command.

The minority labor members of the U. S. Railroad Labor Board, in opposing the second wholesale reductions in the wage scale of railroad workers, declared, "The wage structure for the transportation industry, which is being built up in this series of decisions, rests upon no consideration of the human needs of the employes affected." Perhaps these "labor members," among them "Socialists," will some day learn that capitalism never troubles itself about the needs of humanity.

When Labor Really Wins

There are those blind enough to proclaim with great joy that the alleged popularity of the Harding Administration at Washington is on the wane.

They ask us to look at the victory of Beveridge, in Indiana, of Pinchot, in Pennsylvania, and more recently of Brookhart, in Iowa, who sought the "farmer and labor vote," all on the republican ticket.

It is pointed out that Harding is getting to be just about as unpopular as William Howard Taft was when his four years in the White House drew toward their close.

It will be remembered that Taft won the electoral votes of only two states, Vermont and Utah, when he came up for re-election in 1912.

But what was Taft's reward? Capitalism takes care of its servants. It elevated the rotund Taft to the chief justiceship of the United States Supreme Court, a position of infinitely more power than the presidency under the American form of government.

In all of his election speeches the presidential candidate may proclaim himself the friend of labor, but it is the supreme court, as in Taft's Coronado decision, that makes it possible for the exploiters to wreck labor union treasuries with damage suits for alleged injuries received during struggles with their wage slaves.

Old party political platforms, built for presidential candidates to ride in on, may shout loudly against child labor, but it is the supreme court, under Taft's guidance that declares anti-child labor legislation "unconstitutional."

The Supreme Court under Taft's guidance was united in a unanimous decision on these class issues.

These are merely incidents of the class struggle during the past few days showing how the newspaper-inspired electorate grows ecstatic over its "democratic" voting privilege while capitalism slams it over the head with Taft's judicial decisions. Taft who has a life-job, far removed from the "pee-pul."

There is no serious move on to abolish the Supreme Court. There will be none. The Supreme Court is a part of the American capitalist form of government. It will endure as long as capitalism controls.

The workers do not win in the alleged swing of sentiment away from the Harding reaction in Indiana, Pennsylvania and Iowa.

The votes cast for Beveridge, Pinchot and Brookhart constitute a miserable display of ignorant protest for the most part by misled workers.

The labor attack is not against Harding, or even his administration. The war is against the capitalist system that places Harding in power as president, when he serves its purpose, and that elevates Taft to the Supreme Court as a reward for valuable services rendered.

The working class only wins as the men and women of labor are awakened to the necessity of class action against their exploiters.

The workers win when their spirit of protest, intelligently directed, forces them to knock for admission to the Communist movement as preliminary to becoming a part of it.

The men and women of labor march forward when they join ranks for the complete abolition of capitalism with all of its Hardings, Tafts, Morgans and Rockefellers and then proceed to the emancipation of all labor thru the creation of a Communist Society.

If the fighting goes on in the U. S. Senate, the French Chamber of Deputies and the German Reichstag, interest will certainly lag in the proposed second battle between Dempsey and Carpentier. Tickets will be sold for that great display of wordy and sometimes fistic combat sometimes known as "parliamentarism." The latest bulletin from Paris is: "POINCARE UPHELD IN RIOTOUS SESSION."

It is reported that President Harding is very angry over the attacks on his administration. Well, who wouldn't be. It isn't pleasant to have Washington's dirty linen laundered right before the eyes of the whole nation. Harding thinks it ought to be done out of sight in the basement of the White House. But the newspapers must have something to print besides divorce scandals in order to sell out their numerous editions.

[illegible] Victor Kingisepp

EDITOR'S NOTE.—[illegible] proclamation of the Communist International on the murder of Victor Kingisepp, shot by the Esthonian White Guard government. It is noticeable that the so-called "Socialists" have no word of protest to utter against this murder of a Communist. On the other hand, the proclamation points out that the "Socialists" of the Esthonian government of 1920 were themselves directly responsible for the death by shooting of 26 Communists. The proclamation is as follows:

In Esthonia one of the most prominent fighters for working-class emancipation, Comrade Victor Kingisepp, has been shot. The "democratic" government followed the example of the Social Democrats of the earlier government who in the year 1920 caused 26 Communists to be shot.

Comrade Kingisepp when a mere youth already shared in the revolutionary movement in 1905 in his native home on the island of Oesel, in the illegal revolutionary groups among the students and later on in the workers' organizations of Petrograd and Reval. He carried on an unrelenting struggle at a time when over the whole of Russia the dull heavy clouds of reaction, the gallows and rifles proclaimed the victory of Czarism over the revolution.

Works Under Difficult Conditions.

A fearless fighter he never allowed the flag of revolution to fall from his hand, even at the last moment. He worked underground in his native Esthonia, in Russia and in the distant Caucasus. He organized the workers, peasants and soldiers, and in the year 1912 published the newspaper Lutch (The Beam) giving it a Bolshevik tendency. He experienced the victory and the triumph of the Revolution in Russia, but did not remain in the revolutionary country. Instead, he hastened to his native Esthonia where the working-class groaned under the yoke of the notorious Constituent Assembly. Enriched by his former experiences he carried on illegal work there for three years under the most difficult conditions as leader of the revolutionary labor movement. He refused even for a minute to forsake his dangerous position. Unweariedly he continued to publish pamphlets and newspapers. Every need and requirement of the labor movement met with a response from him.

Following the example of other capitalist countries facing the abyss, little Esthonia also sought to suppress all concerted action by the working-class. When preparations for the 1st of May were in progress arrests began in this connection on the 28th April. Even then Kingisepp regarded it as impossible to leave Esthonia; from his hidden retreat he maintained the direction of the preparations for carrying out this year's May Day demonstration which was to be of great importance.

He was arrested. The Government which had gotten a devoted fighter into its hands, was consumed with the desire to settle its accounts with him. It did so quickly and basely. The Soviet Russian Legation, which received information of Comrade Kingisepp's arrest at once inquired the reason for this from the Esthonian Government. They reassured the Legation with the statement that Comrade Kingisepp was in no danger. A few hours later, however, he was summarily shot.

Comrades! Proletarians of all countries!

The martyr's death of Comrade Victor Kingisepp is an outstanding example of how the bourgeoisie is fighting the working-class. Comrade Kingisepp was accused of but one "crime"—fighting for the emancipation of the working-class. This was sufficient to condemn him to death.

Will this murder disturb the consciences of Vandervelde, Martov and Adler, who were so greatly alarmed over the judicial proceedings against the murderers of the leaders of the working-class in Russia?

Comrades! The capitalist world seeks to save itself from the inevitable overthrow, by means of shooting the revolutionary leaders, it forgets, however, that tho these leaders perish, their ideas are growing and spreading among the masses. The death of this fighter does not check the fight. On the contrary, it will but go on the more vigorously.

Nor will the death of Comrade Kingisepp be without consequences. The workers of Esthonia and of the whole world will cherish the name of this fighter in their memory and will brand the Esthonian executioners and their masters with everlasting shame.

The answer to this criminal and shameful murder must be the joining of the proletariat in the united front for a restless struggle to the end.

Honor, fame and reverence to the fallen fighter!

On to the common fight, you, the survivors!

Death to Capitalism!

Gompers at Bay

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

Mr. Gompers, in continuing his vitriolic attacks on Soviet Russia, seems to have bitten off a little more than his ancient teeth can chew.

Leaping on to the anti-Soviet bandwagon in his role of a trusty retainer of the late Woodrow Wilson, Gompers now finds himself engulfed in a rising tide of angry protest at the spectacle of the nominal head of the American Labor movement pulling the chestnuts out of the fire for the same capitalist politicians who are attempting the destruction of the labor movement he is supposed to represent.

While the open-shop fight rages, while some five million wage-earners are without jobs or the prospect of getting them, while the supreme court, without a dissenting voice, hands down a decision which delivers labor unions into the power of the most reactionary courts in the world, while more than a million and a half members of the Federation are either on strike or facing the necessity of one, Mr. Gompers is devoting a large part of his time to aiding the work in which Boris Bahkmetieff was engaged up to the time of his departure for parts unknown.

The conscience of American labor has begun to waken; the logic of events has convinced many members of the self-satisfied trade-union officialdom that allowing Gompers to indulge his whims is now a very real danger to the labor movement.

Railroaders Speak Up.

The most striking indication of this change of opinion is found in a recent number of the Locomotive Engineers Journal, official organ of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. It says, editorially:

> We are not concerned with Mr. Gompers' private opinion about the Russian government. That is his own affair. . . . Neither is it our business when Mr. Gompers takes time from his important official duties to write a rather unreliable book about the Russian republic and the peasants and workers who support it. We are amused by his inconsistancy when he preaches disarmament and good will among the nations, and in the next calls for the isolation and extinction of the government of the largest country in Europe.
> Like gold-braided generals of France, he wants peace, but first he wants his bucket of Bolshevik blood. But we are rightly concerned when Mr Gompers, claiming to speak for American labor, officially urges our government to adopt a policy toward Russia that will take bread and butter out of the mouths of American workers and sow the seeds of chaos in Europe.
> Mr Gompers may not know much about conditions in Russia, but he ought to know and care about the situation of labor in the United States. Between four and five million American workers are walking our streets searching for jobs. Miners are starving in West Virginia and dodging bayonets in Colorado. The supreme court tears up labor's safeguards built up by years of struggle. Millions of unorganized workers are ruthlessly exploited by the steel trust and its allies. Groups of organized workers are rent asunder by jurisdictional disputes. The open shop campaign and the drive to smash wages are in full tilt. While American labor is being crucified, Mr. Gompers takes time to stick pins into the hide of the Russian bear.

When it is remembered that the above comment is taken from the organ of what is perhaps the most conservative union in America it takes on added significance.

Sammy Gets Desperate.

Sensing the bitter antagonism he has aroused, Mr. Gompers is driven to new depths of depravity; his latest move is not only astounding in its baseness, but enlightening as proving the desperate situation in which he now finds himself.

He has sent out to various international presidents, choosing for the purpose those suspected of semi-radical tendencies, the following letter:

> Dear Sir and Brother:
> I have received about 121 copies of the printed pamphlet prepared by the Foreign delegation of the Social-Revolutionary Party (Zensinoff, Rubanovitch, Suchomlin, Chernoff). The pamphlet is a memorandum of the Foreign Delegation of the Russian Social-Revolutionary Party to the conference of the three international federations of socialist and communist parties held at Berlin on April 2nd, 1922.
> Because of the information contained in these pamphlets, I am forwarding one to you and to some others for perusal and information. It is a most damnable indictment of the whole Bolshevist Soviet autocracy of Russia.
> Fraternally yours,
> (Signed:) Samuel Gompers
> President American Federation of Labor

In using the data contained in the pamphlet mentioned, Mr. Gompers endorses plots and acts of a group of irresponsibles whose plots and acts have resulted in the wounding and death of several officials of the Soviet government and of its supporters—the workers and peasants of Russia, this group plotted the death of Lenin and his present illness is the result of bullets fired into his body by Fanny Kaplan, a member of the Social-Revolutionary party, the organization whose opinions concerning the only workers' government in the world are endorsed by the president of the American Federation of Labor.

He Likes the White Terror.

Gompers is bitter in his denunciation of the use of terror as a defensive measure by the workers. He has never condemned the white terror in Finland, Hungary, Poland or the wholesale murders of Denikin, Semenoff, Koltchak; he has remained silent while the U. S. marines butcher the natives of Haiti and Santo Domingo; his voice has never been raised in defense of the murdered Irish and Hindu workers, but he springs to the defense of a gang of maniacs who seem to believe that doing the work of imperialism is the way to freedom.

There was a time when Gompers could have retired from the labor movement with some remnants of honor left. Now, whether his future tenure of office be long or short, he will leave, hated and despised, for an oblivion darker than that which now enshrouds he whom he apes—Woodrow Wilson.

Retribution may be long in coming but his own acts have made it certain.

Comrade A. R. Gold has been designated by the Literature Committee of the Local to organize a group of comrades to place THE WORKER on the newsstands.

These comrades will also take care of covering unions, and outdoor meetings, and also will constitute the BOOST THE WORKER SQUAD, of the Local.

All comrades ready to engage in this work should communicate with Comrade Gold at the Local Office, 208 E. 12th St., N. Y. City.

The Worker,

New York City

Dear Comrades:—I was indeed pleased when I read your announcement of the special subscription offer of 20 weeks for 50 cents, and I immediately got busy among my shopmates and acquaintances.

I really was surprised how easy it was to get the enclosed 31 subscriptions, and feel certain that when these subscribers have read "The Worker" for 20 weeks they will have a better understanding of the class struggle than they had before, and will be glad to renew their subscriptions.

If each class conscious reader of "The Worker" will tell his or her shopmates and acquaintances of this special offer, I am sure they can do as well as I did, and many of them can do much better.

This will do more to get "The Worker" in the hands of the workers and have it read and appreciated by them than any other plan you may have offered.

Please find enclosed subscription list for above and my check for $15.50 to cover the same.

With very good wishes for the success of "The Worker",

Fraternally yours,

The Record Shows—

The actual number of subscriptions received during the first week of the "TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND NEW READERS" campaign was 175.

While this is not a huge sum in total, the record also shows a feature of this first week's results which must be considered a vital factor of importance. That is, that of the comrades sending in subscriptions all averaged a very high percentage each.

This simply means that when more comrades catch the "sub getting" fever they will make the total what it ought to be—hundreds, yes, even thousands of new readers added to the list every week.

This is the goal we aim at. A huge army of comrades seing every opportunity to secure 20 week subscriptions for THE WORKER. This army we must have in order to be successful in this biggest campaign of our history. Such an army can do the job. Such an army of comrades can actually raise our subscription list to 25,000 new readers within a few weeks even in these financially hard times.

There will be no let-up in this campaign until success crowns our efforts. Indications are that next week we will be able to show a larger number of comrades who helped make the total.

WE WANT YOU TO HELP. You can do so by getting the worker nearest you to subscribe, and then the next one and the next. Order some 20 week subscription cards to have on hand. They will sell. Send for $5.00 worth and we will be glad to send you free a copy of "Bars and Shadows". But get on the job—your job. Help make the total grow.

[illegible]

Acting under the instruction of the United Front resolution adopted by the enlarged session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International at its February meeting the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party of America has adopted a thesis applying the United Front principles to the United States.

The theses declare that "A United Front of Labor, a solid phalanx of the working class drawn up in battle line against the forces of the capitalist class and the capitalist state is the prerequisite of a victory of the proletariat. The creation of this phalanx is the task of the hour."

The introductory statement showing the need of the United Front in the struggle against the capitalists is followed by a statement of the conditions fundamental to the achievement of this United Front.

On this point the thesis declares, "The working class as a whole is not conscious of having class interests in irreconcilable conflict with the interests of the capitalists. They are conscious, however, of immediate problems that demand a solution as a condition for their existence, questions of wages, working conditions, etc. These questions must form the basis for a United Front of Labor, for united action."

Two Aspects of Question Studied.

After discussion of the general basis of the United Front the question is taken up as it presents itself on the industrial and political field.

The keynote of the work for the United Front on the industrial field is contained in the declaration that: "In creating a united front of the working class for their economic struggles the existing labor unions must remain the instruments of these struggles while the members of the Workers Party must be the instruments to unify these economic organizations."

To achieve this unification it is proposed that the members of the Workers Party make use of the existing struggles of the workers which develop the weaknesses of the craft form of organization, to bring about amalgamation of the craft unions into industrial unions. In place of theoretical criticism of craft unionism it is proposed that the actual experiences of the struggle shall be the basis of bringing about the united front upon the economic field.

This section of the theses also points to the necessity of broadening the struggles of each group of workers so as to bring into these struggles other workers than those immediately concerned and thus developing class consciousness in place of group or class consciousness.

Labor Party Forecast.

What is probably the most vital part of the theses appears in the section devoted to the political united Front. "The creation of a United Front of Labor on the political field in the United States is the problem of the development of independent political action of the working class," the theses declare." This independent political action will come through the development of a labor party, is the opinion of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party.

On the basis of this estimate of the developments in the United States the future policy of the Workers Party is formulated. Its members and all units of the party are directed to do all within their power to hasten the time when the working masses will engage in independent political action. Since in the judgment of the Workers Party Executive this independent political action will take the form of the organization of a Labor Party it is the task of the Workers Party to so manoeuver that it will be able to secure a position within that Labor Party as its left wing and the most active element.

This proposal does not mean, according to the theses, that the Workers Party will give up its organizational identity and its members become members of the Labor Party when organized. On the contrary, the theses declare "The United Front tactics cannot be interpreted to mean organization unity with any other organization. The Workers Party must exist as a distinct organization with a displined educated membership acting upon a revolutionary program to give leadership to the struggles of the workers."

The means thru which the Workers Party will achieve a strong position in the Labor Party are outlined in the theses. It is proposed that the Workers Party take the lead in establishing the United Front in local political campaigns "on the basis of political issues growing out of the intense economic struggles of the workers." This work should take the form of creating delegated conferences of labor unions for the purpose of independent political action in such localities as are ripe for such action, and by becoming the most active section of such conferences.

"These tactics," the theses declare, "will make us a force that will have to be considered in the event of the formation of a labor party and we will be able to influence its character and its activities and win leadership in it."

Program for Coming Election Outlined.

The theses close with a declaration of policy for the coming elections. The outstanding feature of this declaration is the statement that "To enter into a political federation with existing political organizations, none of which have the support of the masses of the workers, would be to negate the possibility of creating a real United Front of the workers politically." The Workers Party will therefore, as a rule, nominate its own candidates in the coming elections and carry on its own campaign.

This declaration effectively disposes of the interpretation which has gained ground in some places that the United Front policy meant federation with such existing parties as the Socialist Party or the Farmer-Labor Party.

Exception is made to the general rule laid down for the coming election where central labor bodies declare for independent political action or where the fact that the movement for independent political action by the workers has mass support is otherwise indicated.

Theses Mark New Development.

The thesis is noteworthy, as probably one of the first attempts on the part of a political party in this country to gauge the development politically in the labor movement for some years in advance and to formulate a policy in harmony with those developments.

In adopting the theses the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party has laid down the policy of the party for a considerable period and designated those tactics which win for the party a position of power and leadership in the labor movement of this country.

[illegible] 1. A United Front of Labor [illegible] of the capitalist state is the prerequisite of a victory of the proletariat. The creation of this phalanx is the task of the hour. Groups of workers organized in various organizations as well as groups of hitherto unorganized workers must be united in support of a common aim and in common action. Many organizations of labor tho ostensibly formed to fight the battles of labor are tied up by their treacherous leaders to the interests of the capitalists thus breaking the united front of labor and strengthening the front of capital. The problem is to break these groups of workers away from the army of capital and line them up with the army of labor, thus establishing a united front of labor against the capital.

2. The working class as a whole is not conscious of having class interests in irreconcilable conflict with the interests of the capitalists. They are conscious, however, of immediate problems that demand a solution as a condition for their existence, questions of wages, working conditions, etc. These questions must form the basis for a United Front of the workers, for united action. It is thru these struggles and only thru them that the workers can learn the political character of their struggle. It is in these struggles that the betrayers of the workers in the position of leadership must be exposed in their true character as enemies of the proletariat and the tools of the capitalists. It is in these struggles and only in them that the communists can establish their leadership in the class struggle and develop this struggle into a revolutionary battle for the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of the proletarian dictatorship as an instrument of communist reconstruction.

3. In pursuing the policy of uniting larger and larger masses of the workers on the basis of a common struggle the existing organizations of the workers must be made more and more effective instruments of these struggles. The experience the workers will gain in these struggles will help us to gradually eliminate all dualism in the field of economic organizations of the workers. Trade lines must be gradually eliminated and step by step the organizations of the workers must be welded together into industrial unions closely united in one great body.

4. While the creation of the United Front can be accomplished on the field of economic organization thru amalgamation of existing bodies, it must be accomplished on the field of political organizations of the workers by elimination of the influence of such parties and groups [illegible] rather to give leadership to the workers' political struggles. Those parties misleading the workers must be eliminated from such leadership. On the basis of immediate issues the workers must be led into political struggles in which the communists prove the superiority of their tactics, their slogans, their aims and their leadership as compared with the tactics, slogans, the aims and leadership of other political groups or parties claiming the support of the workers. Thus the Workers Party will gradually win away the masses of politically active workers from the political organizations that betray the workers. It will discredit and destroy them and win complete leadership in the political struggles of the workers.

The Industrial United Front.

5. In creating a united front of the working class for their economic struggles the existing labor unions must remain the instrument of these struggles while the members of the Workers Party must be the instruments to unify these economic organizations.

(The plans for the general campaign are formulated after consideration of recommendations by party members in the unions. The C. E. C. of the party formulates the slogans and sends its corresponding instructions thru the industrial department to the membership. At the same time all means of publicity are used by the party for propagation of the action contemplated. The unity of action must be established on a basis that can be realized immediately and the action must then be developed and led on step by step to the climax. In the process of the struggle the weakness of the existing craft union form of organization will become apparent. The experience of such struggles developing these weaknesses must be utilized to drive home the criticism of the present form of organization and advantage must be taken of the situation to advance constructive proposals seeking to eliminate these weaknesses. Thus the amalgamation of craft into industrial unions becomes an issue dictated by the necessities of the struggles and ceases to be an abstract, theoretical bone of contention. The main criticism of treacherous or inefficient leaders and the fight against them must be based on their shortcomings in the actual struggles. Thus the abstract and invariably ineffective criticism on the basis of differences in the theoretical conceptions of the class struggles or the state will give way to concrete issues on the basis of which an alignment of the workers can be effected.

6. In cases where dual industrial [illegible] But in all such cases such [illegible] is not the sole object of the application of the tactics of the United Front of Labor, but only one of its purposes.

7. Not only those workers who have [illegible] in a struggle should compose the United Front. All issues of importance must be made class issues and the working masses rallied to the support of the workers immediately concerned. Only by thus broadening the struggle will the working masses become class conscious.

8. Separate delegated bodies, councils, etc. for the organization and direction of the united working class action on the economic field must be organized only if there is no danger of serious conflict with existing bodies of the same character. In all cases where such directive bodies are created they should be formed, if at all possible, on the initiative and by action of the unions involved. Our party organization will supply the initiative where the forming of such bodies becomes necessary. No basis for even a shade of suspicion of dualistic intention must be given.

The Political United Front

9. The creation of a United Front of Labor on the political field in the United States is the problem of the development of independent political action of the working class. The working class of Europe has for a long time participated independently in political activities. Not so in the United States. Here the problem is not to unite existing political groups and organizations for common action, but to awaken political class consciousness among the workers. The class struggle has reached such a degree of intensity here that every battle of the workers reveals the political character of the struggles that is teaching the proletarian masses the necessity for class conscious political action. The numerous efforts of all kinds of labor organizations to form a labor party in the United States is evidence of this fact. These efforts indicate a step forward in the progress of the class struggle toward revolutionary working class action. To oppose this tendency toward the formation of a labor party would be folly.

10. The capitalists realize the potentialities of even a tame and not in the least revolutionary independent labor party for the development of the class consciousness of the worker. Their tools in the labor movement have, therefore, consist- [illegible] the Workers Party [illegible] cannot oppose the coming [illegible] of this power because it has not yet the standing and influence among the masses to set it at work in the name of and for the purpose of Communism.

11. To promote the development of the political action of the working class into revolutionary action the communists must become a factor in the Labor Party that may be formed. We can achieve this end only if we anticipate the formation of such a party and now adopt a policy thru which we will become established as a force in the political struggle of the workers and thus an important factor in the labor party. The participation in a United Front in local political struggles will give us a strong position in relation to the labor party.

12. Attempts to misuse the name of Labor Party in the formation of some sort of a "workers non-partisan league" must be guarded against. Such a body would merely exploit the growing desire for independent working class political action to get endorsements for some misleaders of labor on capitalist party tickets, on the principle of Gompers: "reward our friends and punish our enemies." It is the work of the Communists to also guard against the formation of such a labor party as is forecast in the work of the Conference for Progressive Political Action. This conference includes not only representatives of labor, but progressives and liberals of every shade. A party such as forecast by this conference would not mobilize the political power of the workers for the immediate struggles against the capitalists but would dissipate that power in election campaigns fought on the basis of petty ameliorative reforms and of schemes for minor changes in the form of the capitalist government. Such a party would be merely a larger but weaker edition of the Socialist Party, which has for two decades misdirected the political energies of the workers supporting it thru its program of reforms and limitation of the political struggles of the workers to mere participation in election campaigns. The Communists must fight to make the labor party a real instrument of the class struggle, fighting the immediate battles of the workers upon the political field and engaging in political action, from election campaigns to [illegible] of the United Front on the basis of political issues growing out of the [illegible] struggles of the workers. The party must use its influence and strength in the trade unions to form delegated conferences of labor organizations. Such conferences decide on a general political campaign including all forms of political action. Thru these tactics the Communists help to awaken the political consciousness of the proletarian masses, broaden the conception of these masses as to the meaning of political action and establish themselves as a force in the political activities of the workers. The party must be the most ardent champion of all such action and must identify itself with all its phases. Our members should initiate such action thru the unions. The position which we will thus gain for our party will attract the revolutionary forces of the workers of the United States and they will rally around our banner. These tactics will make us a force which will have to be considered in the event of the formation of a labor party and we will be able to influence its character and its activities and win leadership in it.

15. The United Front tactics cannot be interpreted to mean organization unity with any other organization. The Workers Party must exist as a distinct organization with a disciplined, educated membership acting upon a revolutionary program to give leadership to the struggles of the workers. In all its activities the party retains its full independence, its right of criticism and its freedom of action. The Workers Party must be the left and the most active section of the labor movement on both the economic and political field. By its unceasing activities, by its correct interpretation of problems and situations and by its qualities of a fighting advance guard of the workers it must gradually eliminate all other parties and groups claiming the support of the workers, as a factor in leadership. It will win leadership in all the phases of the struggle of the working class and lead the solid phalanx of the proletariat into the last decisive battle against the capitalist class, the capitalist state and the capitalist system.

Program for Coming Election

1. The United Political Front embraces political action from election campaigns, mass demonstrations to mass strikes with political objectives and their logical development in revolutionary struggles. The basis for a United Political Front which will embrace the working masses has not yet been created in the United States. To enter into a political federation [illegible] the support of the [illegible] a United Front of the [illegible] politically. The Workers Party will therefore, as a rule, nominate its own candidates in the coming elections and carry on its campaign independently.

2. However, wherever the Central Labor body of a city votes for independent political action by the organized workers, thus indicating that the movement has the support of the organized workers or the fact that the movement for independent political action has the support of the masses is otherwise indicated, the Workers Party will support this action by joining, as an autonomous body, into a federation to carry on the struggle. It will take the initiative in those cases where it considers conditions ripe for such action. The conditions for such participation are the following:

(a) All working class organizations ready to participate in the United Front campaign must be accepted as part of the federation.

(b) The platform must raise as the issues of the campaign immediate questions of the class struggle such as unemployment relief, the open shop, the use of the injunction against the workers, opposition to industrial courts, etc.

(c) The United Front federation should adopt as the name under which the candidates are placed on the ballot and the campaign conducted, a name other than that of an existing political party, if the name "Workers Party" and its candidates are not endorsed.

Permission to place candidates on the ballot under the name of an existing working class political organization may be granted by the C. E. C. when technical conditions make that necessary; in such instance, however, the campaign must be conducted under the name of the United Front Federation.

3. In such political divisions where it develops that a candidate of another party claiming to be a working class party will be defeated thru votes cast for the Workers Party candidate and a capitalist party candidate elected, the Workers Party will follow a policy appropriate to the situation. The unsound principles and tactics of reform parties can best be demonstrated in action. Also, the Workers Party can best gain the confidence of the masses of the workers who support candidates of these parties in districts where there is prospect of their success by not causing their defeat and the election of capitalist candidates, but advocating their election and proving thru their election the futility of their party program in action. The Workers Party in such instances may withdraw its candidates prior to the election, at the same time issuing a manifesto making its criticism of the candidates in whose favor it withdraws and stating the ground for its action.

No clemency will be granted by President Harding to Ricardo Flores Magon, Mexican political prisoner now going blind in Leavenworth penitentiary. This word has come to Magon's counsel, Harry Weinberger, from Attorney General Daugherty.

Y. W. L. TO CHICAGO

The Young Workers' League of America continues to progress steadily. Branches are being organized right along. The western states, especially, are wide awake to the necessity of building up a revolutionary movement of the youth. The latest to enter into the Y. W. L. ranks is Denver, Col., where a branch of 15 members was organized thru the efforts of some itinerant YOWLS on the road to California. Comrade Dietrich has taken charge of the Denver League and we feel certain of rapid growth under his leadership.

Chicago reports the formation of another branch there and the likelihood of a branch in South Bend, Indiana. The live-wire Windy City Leaguers will hold their City Convention on July 2nd.

From the far-away little town of Hall, Washington, comes an inquiry how to organize a League Branch. Shortly Hall, Wash., will have its League. Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and the other Coast towns still remain in the front ranks of the Y. W. L. The Eastern Leagues will have to step along rapidly if they wish to keep pace with the comrades of the West.

In the East, Philadelphia is right on the job, holding meetings continually and penetrating the youthful workers with revolutionary education.

The National Headquarters of the Young Workers League will be moved to Chicago in a few days. O. Carlson, editing the Young Worker, left June 15 for Chicago. On the way he is stopping off for meetings at Washington, Cleveland, Pittsburg. Comrade Abern will start for Chicago on June 23, and will hold meetings on his course at Toronto, Syracuse, Buffalo, Erie and Conneaut. Comrade Shuleberg will follow a few days later and will stop over for a few meetings also.

After June 24, mail should be sent to the following address: Young Workers' League, Room 307, 166 West Washington St., Chicago, Ill. This may be the permanent address. USE until notified otherwise.

The Manifesto, Program, Constitution, etc., will be off the press very soon. The official organ of the League, the Young Worker, will be out by the time this news is printed. A leaflet will be out also in a couple of days.

The Branches of the League will not vacation during the summer. Plenty of work will be given them. Outdoor meetings are being arranged in many cities under the auspices of the League. Opportunities for activity among the young workers are being thrown open everywhere and the League will not be caught sleeping.

Organizer Edward Lindgren reports that he will very soon make a contest for the right of the Workers Party to hold meetings on the streets in Stamford and Norwalk, Conn., where the Marshall meetings were stopped. He intends to go the limit in this fight. The Marshall meetings elsewhere are meeting with great success.

THE F. S. R. OUTING.

The Local Office of the Friends of Soviet Russia issued the following statement for the benefit of those who bought tickets for the excursion for the RELIEF OF THE MILLIONS OF STARVING IN SOVIET RUSSIA, on Sunday, June 11, but were unable to use them.

"Return your ticket to the person whom you paid, if you possibly can. Return your tickets to the organization from which you got it if you can. You can exchange your tickets for tickets for the Freiheit excursion at 47 Chrystie Street without extra charge. Those who cannot return their tickets in this way, should come to the Local Office, 208 East 12th Street, within a week or so, so that we may get a chance to recall unpaid tickets."

Use 20-Week "Sub" Cards at Open Air Meetings

In the campaign to add 25,000 new names to our readers' list the open air meetings conducted by the Workers Party locals can render an immense assistance thru the sale of the Special 20 week Worker sub cards at 50 cents each.

These cards should be ordered by the Locals and at once placed in the hands of all speakers' committees. No meeting, in hall, street or picnic should be without them. Have a bundle of Workers at each meeting. Introduce the cards thru the sale of the paper.

In these times of financial straights for the workers, the 50 cent cards will prove the most successful means of forming new contacts with the workers for our Party and our literature. Every Local should order a supply. This is part of your work—attend to it. Build The Worker readers' list.

Discuss United Front.

The Local Executive Committee of New York at its last meeting discussed the question of a United Front with the Farmer Labor Party and the Socialist Party in the coming elections.

It decided to call a special meeting of the City Central Committee to formulate its position. This meeting will be held Wednesday, June 21, at the Hungarian Home, 350 E. 81st St. 8 p. m. All editors and organizers are invited to this meeting.

Theodor Liebknecht, aiding Vandervelde in the defense of the counter-revolutionists at Moscow, may have been a brother of Karl Liebknecht. But we cannot blame Karl for that.

The Cowardly Klan

In our opinion those workers who believe that the Ku Klux Klan and similar organizations can be ridiculed out of existence are making a serious mistake.

The Klan is here to stay and we may as well recognize that it represents a strong group in our social organization. It caters to the sadistic lust of perverts and at the same time has an economic background that assures its permanence. It can only be combatted by recognizing it as a danger.

Its real functions are disclosed by a number of incidents similar in character the latest of which is the beating into insensibility, in the environs of Port Arthur, Texas, of John Aron, an organizer for the Marine Transport Workers.

He was arrested but no charge was laid against him. The police delivered him into the hands of members of the Klan. He was taken into a grove and beaten into an unconscious condition with a leather strap which twelve men took turns in wielding. His clothes were torn from him and his handbag rifled of its contents.

This collusion between the authorities and the terroristic clique is proof enough that in many districts the Klan has considerable power. It also proves the utter cowardice of the membership of this body. They must have their victims unarmed and helpless as a guarantee that no injury will be inflicted upon themselves.

This is the key to the correct method of fighting this embryonic white guard organization.

Enormous increases in the prices of the necessaries of life in Vienna, Austria, has resulted in "Socialist" papers threatening serious outbreaks. No danger. It will take more than that to get a rise out of the "Socialists."

Free Speech, Here and Elsewhere

Edward Lindgren, organizer of the Workers Party for New York and vicinity, announces that a fight will have to be made for the privilege of holding meetings in Stamford and Norwalk, Conn.

The "law and order" forces recently throttled the efforts of the party organizer, John W. Marshall, to bring the Communist message to oppressed labor in these two communities.

The New York Times has not published an attack on the officials of Stamford and Norwalk, perhaps because its columns are too full of anti-Communist propaganda to permit of anything else.

Only recently The Times was very much chagrined because the prefect of the district of Avignon, France, a Communist, sat idly by while the populace showed their hostility to General Mangin, a relic of the late war, by refusing him permission to speak. Perhaps the General and The Times expected the Communist prefect to straight jacket the workers of Avignon and force them to listen.

All that the Communists ask of the "100 per centers" in this country is the same chance the French Communists are giving the "100 per centers" of that country in those cities where they have power.

We guarantee that if given an opportunity to hear the emancipating message of Communism in America, the workers will listen to it and cheer it instead of hoot it, and that they will finally embrace the Communist cause as their only salvation.

Speech was free for General Mangin at Avignon, France. But the workers would have none of Mangin or his jingo talk even at that price.

We dare the officials in power to make it just as free for Communists at Stamford and Norwalk, Conn.

The National Civic Federation has adopted resolutions supporting the Harding administration's policy of bitter hatred against Soviet Russia. Next thing Harding will be saying something nice about the N. C. F.

Light from The Times

According to a special cable to the New York Times, the French government is very much upset because Communists have gained control of several municipalities.

In Marseilles and Brest, Communists have been elected as mayors and councillors, and in Avignon General Mangin was prevented from speaking while, as the Times states indignantly, "the prefect of the district, himself a Communist, sat by and did nothing to check the disturbance."

It is evident from the above that the militarist policy of the French government is not receiving the whole-hearted support of the French workers.

The offices in these municipalities have been gained by purely parliamentary processes which, we are told, form the groundwork of the two great republics—France and America.

The Times, quoting un-named French officials, charges that there is a widespread plot to secure control of the civil administration. The French Communists would be the last to deny this. They go farther and state that when they capture it they will wipe it out of existence and establish in its place a workers' republic—preceded by a dictatorship of the workers which will last as long as may be necessary to rid themselves of the last vestiges of the profit system.

This is the goal of the Communists the world over. They make known this intention in all their published documents, and it takes a Times correspondent to believe that it is any longer of news value.

One thing of interest can be gleaned from the special story in The Times. It is that with the almost insurmountable difficulties for the workers contained in the French election laws, the election of Communists shows the existence of a strong sentiment among workers against the present government and its backers in banking and military circles.

It Gave Us W[illegible]

Warren Gamaliel Harding, president of these United States, took a run over to Princeton, New Jersey, the other day, made a speech, and received the degree of Doctor of Laws from Princeton University.

Andrew Fleming West, dean of Princeton's Graduate School, bestowed the honors and notified Harding in a speech that he had won his degree because of his "courage" shown in voting for the labor crushing anti-strike section of the Cummins-Esch Railroad Bill. That was while Harding was a senator from Ohio.

Dean West also announced that Harding had shown his "courage" in his opposition to the bonus for soldiers in the late war, and that these and other services in behalf of capitalism had won for him "the gratitude of the whole world."

Thus does Princeton University more firmly establish itself among the seats of reaction in this country.

It sets itself up as a breeding place for hatred against the great mass of the people of this country, the working class.

Princeton University is a "rich man's college," just like Harvard, Yale and other corporation endowed and controlled educational institutions.

Its official recognition of the anti-labor record of Harding's administration is therefore logical. Princeton doesn't turn out thinkers. It produces stockbrokers and bankers for Wall Street, sex and sob writers for the yellow press, corporation lawyers and oily pulpiteers.

But then, we remember that it was Princeton University that gave us Woodrow Wilson. That's enough of an explanation.

But then, we also read that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen has voted to declare Harding an enemy of labor. The forces are lining up.

Cause and Effect

We notice a revival of interest in the fate of the Christians who are at present living under Moslem rule. Tales of atrocities are again related with a wealth of detail and mass meetings are being held to protest in the name of the suffering peoples whom the defilers of the sepulcher hold in slavery.

We have always noticed that when one or more of the great Christian nations arranges some particularly devilish piece of business for the benefit of subjugated nationalities, a great wave of sympathy for the followers of the Nazarene in other sections sweeps over Anglo-Saxon countries.

So it is in this case. Great Britain is civilizing the Hindu with renewed earnestness and much against the wishes of the civilisee. From a Federated Press dispatch we gather that > Forty thousand of the leading spirits of the non-co-operative movement in India are held by the British under revolting and inhuman conditions, and multitudes more have been arrested without any real cause, according to Pandit K. Santanam, the new leader of the Nationalist movement in the Punjab and the representative of most of its 70,000,000 Moslems as well as the Hindu followers of Gandhi. Santanam's speech before the Punjab Provincial Conference, just received here, shows that only highly censored dispatches have been received here since the British, following the departure of the Prince of Wales, undertook to stifle the non-co-operative movement by the imprisonment of Gandhi and the repressive measures which accompany it.

> The non-co-operators, he declared, are treated in the harshest and most brutal manner. Many have been dragged by their legs with the heads trailing on the ground. In the Ambala jail the prisoners are not permitted to say their prayers, and in all the jails, he declared, almost incredible cruelties are resorted to—even to exposing the bodies of the prisoners to be eaten by mosquitoes.

Altho the soldiers of every country who met the Turks on the field of battle are practically a unit in describing them as the most humane of enemies, we are willing to take it for granted that the Turk is neither better nor worse than any other nationality and that he has probably emulated the example set by the enlightened Christians who have been determining the fate of Turkey for many years.

We think, however, that it is about time for the few people that remain sane to arrive at what seems to us a logical conclusion-to-wit:

That the alleged atrocities of nations which, like Russia and Turkey, are in bad standing in the union of murderers are used to divert attention from piratical expeditions in which the gentle rulers of other countries engage from time to time in the name of democracy, Christianity, for the honor of the white race or some similar high sounding reason.

The A. F. of L. Convention

The American Federation of Labor Convention is in session at Cincinnati, Ohio. Two policies are clashing there, those advanced by Gompers and those linked with the name of William Z. Foster, secretary of the Trade Union Educational League and editor of "The Labor Herald."

Gompers' policies spell reaction; Foster's program stands for progress. In this struggle every delegate must find his place. There is no "No Man's Land" of aloofness and indecision.

The "Socialist" attitude in this A. F. of L. Convention may best be typified in the manner of handling its news by the New York Call, the Socialist daily.

If the Call had a tinge of radicalism left it would sponsor the Foster policies that are advanced under the slogan "Amalgamation or Annihilation."

But all radicalism is carefully eliminated from The Call's A. F. of L. Convention news this year. Even Gompers could not wish for a more favorable attitude toward himself and his ideas.

The Call has found itself. One is not compelled to go far to discover the reason for this editorial policy.

It is found in the fact that The Call has gone more and more to the most conservative labor unions in its hunt for aid and support. An attack on Gompers, disagreement with the reactionary policies of the A. F. of L., by championing the Foster position, would immediately endanger that support.

So The Call "plays up" Gompers and keeps its hand out to the forces of reaction.

It finds space for the prayer of the anti-Socialist Catholic, Rev. Peter Dietz, opening the convention, with these words, "Give us peace, remove the rumors of civic and industrial strife," which, if we remember correctly, was the same harmonious spirit that prevailed at the recent National Socialist Convention at Cleveland, Ohio.

The Call also quotes Gompers as giving birth to this brilliant philosophy, "I always like to look back. That's why I always carry my retrospect along."

But the labor movement of America is in sad need these days of spokesmen and publications that look forward, not backward, that are ready for war, not peace, with capitalism.

It is developing able spokesmen and powerful publications to meet that need.

The Carnegie Peace Palace was the scene of the opening of the Hague Conference, successor of the Genoa Conference, on the 15th. Perhaps it is hoped this will develop more harmony between the conflicting delegations than was apparent in the Italian city recently.

[illegible]

"The unions are as strong to-day as they ever were," says the New York Sun, in advising the A. F. of L. Convention to go slow at Cincinnati. Wonder if that editorial writer studied the figures, 4,078,740 members in 1920, and 3,165,635 in 1922, a loss of nearly one million members in two years. That's what Harding calls "getting back to normalcy." And still the New York Sun urges, "It would be a great pity if the convention took any extreme, impassioned view of the situation and prospects." But why should labor's troubles excite the owner of The Sun, Mr. Munsey, a big stockholder in the steel corporation?

Conceptions of Justice

The trial of the counter-revolutionaries has started at Moscow. The first day's proceedings brought a clash between conflicting conceptions of justice.

Emil Vandervelde, former Minister of justice to the Belgian King, while president of the Second International, among the defenders of the would-be assassins of Lenin, Trotsky and others, and on their behalf challenged the Communist judges with the declaration that:

"It is evident that Belgium and Russia have different conceptions of justice."

Vandervelde did not have to wait long in getting his reply. He got it from both Ensign Krylenko, chief of the prosecution, and from the presiding judge, M. Tiatakoff.

Krylenko said: "No wonder we have different conceptions of justice. Such justice will Belgium have only when her ministers are placed on trial. This case is being tried under the system of justice we fought for."

Tiatakoff said: "Of course we are not impartial, but our partiality is in the interests of the revolution."

How refreshing it would be to hear Supreme Court Justice Taft admit, when declaring anti-child labor legislation is "unconstitutional," or Kenesaw Mountain Landis proclaim while handing out 20-year sentences, or Judge Weeks confess in sending Communist prisoners to Sing Sing, that

"Of course we are not impartial, but our partiality is in the interests of the capitalist class, in defense of capitalism."

But the capitalist justice of Belgium, and of the United States and of all other capitalist nations, depends upon the ignorance of the workers to make its sham and its hypocrisy seem impressive and "fair" judicial procedure.

The trial of the would-be slayers of the Russian revolution will reveal in clear terms to the world's workers the struggle between capital and labor.

The betrayers of labor in the Second and Two-and-a-half Internationals have again taken their stand on the side of capital against labor. Their conception of justice is the capitalist conception. Vandervelde opposes a Communist court. And there is only one other kind—a capitalist court.

Above the stage where sits the judge in this Communist court in Moscow, there floats a red banner with an inscription in gold that says:

"The proletariat court is the safeguard of the people's revolution."

Vandervelde, in that proletarian court of justice, is as much the servant of capitalism as he was when minister of justice to the Belgian King during the great war, or when he helped sign the Peace Treaty of Versailles.

Before the Moscow trial comes to an end new masses of awakened and aroused workers will have seen the light and aligned themselves with the growing world struggle for Communism.

The Reparations Board that is trying to liquidate the late war has turned over to J. Pierpont Morgan, of Wall Street, and Sir Robt. Kindersley, of the Bank of England, the job of raising a loan for Germany. Morgan and Sir Robert expect the public will subscribe. And later on, if Germany can't pay, they will also expect this same "public" to provide the cannon fodder to wage war on Germany and carry on a forcible collection. Germany thus will get another lesson on the necessity of establishing Soviet Rule and repudiating all debts. If the dear public gets stung on Morgan's new loan, it should only kick itself, and kick hard.

Confidential Dope on Revolution Basis of Plea for Dollars

By STANLEY BOONE

DETROIT.—"Please treat the contents of this bulletin as confidential. We do not wish by a single word to permit the enemy to know that we are even anxious over the situation."

Thus ends Bulletin No. 39 of the Coalition Committee for the State of Michigan. The office of the secretary of the committee, F. A. Perry, is suite 1303 Real Estate Exchange Bldg., Detroit. The chairman of the executive and finance committee of the organization is Henry M. Leland, president of the late Lincoln Motor Car Co.

After speaking of "the humiliation" suffered by "the property owners and cultured classes of Russia, Bulletin No. 39 continues: "It is a wellknown fact that there are more radicals in America than there are in Russia, that they are better financed and under better leadership. When their organization, which is going rapidly forward, is completed, the chances of the success of a revolutionary movement are better here than they were in Russia. Have you heard their resounding battle cry: Down With Capitalism! On to Industrial Freedom!'"

Following closely this spirited statement the bulletin reaches the point of greatest interest to Perry and adds: "The question before the American people to-day is what are we going to do about it? * * * The Coalition Committee for the State of Michigan knows how to effectively combat radicalism. That has been demonstrated by several years of effective work, but we must have money if this work is to be continued * * * If you are not already a subscriber fill out the enclosed subscription blank for as large an amount as your circumstances will permit and return at once. Your dollars are needed now!"

Other members of the executive and finance committee are John L. Lovett, secretary and general manager of the Michigan Manufacturers Assn.; Chester M. Culver, secretary of the Employers Assn. of Detroit; F. W. Blair, an executive of the Union Trust Co., and P. W. A. Fitzsimmons, of the Michigan Mutua Casualty Insurance Co.

"The letterheads used by the I. W. W. carry across the top th three following significant word: Educate, Organize, Emancipate," says Bulletin No. 40. "Radical agitators have learned by experience that American labor cannot be stampeded into revolution, hence the le spectacular but more effective method, indicated by the above word has been adopted."

Bulletin No. 40 explains that th coalition committee carries on, i work by means of motion pictures, leaflets, posters, addresses, and, fact, by every available means. What the committee means "every available means" was mad quite plain at Bisbee, Everett, an more recently in West Virginia.

Perry then definitely draws th lines of the class struggle. "M Manufacturer, Employer, Banker," continues Bulletin No. 40, "it is to you to help put across our program of real Education, Organization and Emancipation."

But apparently the money is n coming in quite fast enough to s Perry. For the secrecy urged Bulletin No. 39 is carelessly throw aside in Bulletin No. 40, which end with the tag-line, "Read, then pa this bulletin on to some one else."

It was passed on once too often o this story would not have bee written.

Howatt, in Prison, Storm Center in Attack on Gompers' A. F. of L. Machine

Illinois Delegate Smokes Out Heads of United Mine Workers; Shows Courageous Kansas Official Deserted in Big Fight

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE,
Labor Editor, The Worker.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—Joseph Lynel, member of the United Mine Workers representing the Central Labor Council of Peoria, Illinois, big and determined with a voice that shook the Convention Hall, forced the machine from under cover for the first time. He forced John L. Lewis and the rest of the international officers to publicly abandon Alex Howatt and August Dorchy.

The fight came on a resolution congratulating Howatt and Dorchy on the courageous fight against the Kansas industrial court law and cited the fact that numerous other pending measures of similar character had been defeated because of their example.

The Resolution's Committee brazenly declared that the subject matter dealt with the internal affairs of the United Mine Workers and referred it to the executive council of that organization.

Lynel secured the floor and urged that it was a matter of concern to organized labor as a whole. John L. Lewis spoke in favor of the committee report and Lynel rose with a question. "I want to know if the A. F. of L. is going to double cross Alex Howatt as John Lewis did," he said. A voice from the floor said to Lynel, "He'll take away your card." "I don't care if he takes away all my cards, I am here to defend Howatt and the Kansas Miners."

Holding up the roll-call list of the Convention Lynel said: "Here is the [illegible] to this Convention but he is in jail and cannot come. He is in jail for fighting your battles and mine and Lewis is keeping him there."

Draws Lewis' Fire

Lewis called Lynel a liar and Lyne returned the compliment with interest. Gompers rapped for order and admonished the delegates to refrain from personalities.

Christian M. Madsen, painters delegate Chicago Federation of Labor, and Max Silinsky, of the Tailors spoke for the resolution maintaining that it was of vital importance to Labor.

Madsen appealed to the delegate in the name of honesty and decency to vote down the Committee Report.

The international officers recovered from their momentary panic, rallied to Lewis and the committee report carried without even a roll-call.

This was one of the incidents that show what the membership is really thinking and how little able officialdom is to fight on a straight issue.

A dozen uncompromising speakers like Lynel would send this bunch of at boys scurrying for cover.

Machinist Stirs Convention

The peace of the Convention was also slightly marred when Curly Grow, of the Machinists differed with the committee report on the establishment of Labor Banks.

The recommendation of the committee placed full power in the hands of the executive council to act upon this matter and Grow in assailing it was called to order by Gompers.

Resolutions on political prisoners were dealt with by the committee by endorsing the executive council report on the subject compiled by Lucy Robbins.

The Ladies' Garment Workers effectively betrayed the political prisoners, as I predicted they would, by remaining silent while this infamous document was endorsed.

When Benjamin Schlesinger appears as delegate to the British Trades Union Congress the political Prisoners will have the satisfaction of knowing that their continued incarceration is the price of a pleasure trip for the head of the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

The resolution of the Boston Central Labor Council demanding a new trial for Sacco-Vanzetti was passed without objection.

It's a Happy Gang

While these two resolutions were being read the voice of the secretary of the committee was almost drowned by the noise from the groups of chatting, laughing international officers.

This is the manner in which they display their keen interest in the fate of victims of capitalist justice.

The committee on the report of the executive council with much solemn-

Altho six long years have passed since the inception of the frame-up against the two trade union champions Mooney and Billings, the demand for justice for these two innocent men grows ever stronger as the months roll on.

At Last! The Supreme Test on Railroads

By WILLIAM Z. FOSTER.

At last the supreme test is coming for the railroad men. The employers are tearing into them right and left.

Not content with taking away the national agreement of the Shopmen, the eight hour day from the Maintenance of Way, the Signal men, the Clerks, Stationary firemen and others, re-establishing piece work in the shops, setting up company unions, farming out repair work to all kinds of dummy companies so as to evade the Transportation Act doing away with Sunday overtime rates and otherwise re-establishing pre-war slave conditions, they are now cutting and slashing wages to the bone.

In the past ten days, both the Maintenance of Way workers and the Shopmen have had their wages reduced again.

War Declared on Unions

The companies have declared open war on the Unions, and it is quite [illegible]

Not only that, but the railroads show their contempt for the organizations by making these wage cuts right in the face of the A. F. of L. Convention.

They have no fear that the conservative labor leaders will do anything serious about it.

According to statistics submitted by Mr. Jewell, President of the Railway Employees Department in the hearings before the Railroad Labor Board on May 22nd, the mechanics on the railroads are getting only 64 per cent of the meats, fish, milk and eggs, 77 per cent of the cereal foods, 91 per cent of the vegetables and 71 per cent of fats and oils necessary to maintain their actual families at the lowest level of safety.

Forget About Unemployment

The family budget of the Department of labor calls for an expenditure of $2,303.99 per year, whereas the full time wages of shop mechanics last year amounted to only $1,884.90.

This figure is based on assumption of steady work.

It disregards the fact that unemployment amounted to 40 per cent at least.

Now comes the Railway Labor Board and cuts even these skinflint wages again more than 10 per cent on the average, bringing the Shopmen down to a condition of semi-starvation.

But bad off as the shop mechanics are, the unskilled laborers are inconceivably worse situated.

Under the recent decision of the Railroad Labor Board for the Maintenance of Way, large groups of laborers will be paid but 23c. per hour.

This means that a man at this class of work working eight hours per day, 300 days per year will earn only $552.00.

Compare this disgraceful figure with the minimum, bare living estimate of the Department of Labor, calling for $2,303.99 and you will get an idea of just about what the recent wage cuts mean to a large section of railroad workers.

They Just Watched.

In this terrific onslaught of the companies, which is being made thru the lick spittle Labor Board, the railroad men are only harvesting the crop which they have been sowing for many years.

It's because they do not practice the principles of solidarity. When the steel workers were on strike, the railroaders, not being attacked themselves, did nothing about it.

They stood around and watched Gary and his minions demolish the steel organizations and violate every law in the statute books in doing it.

The railroad men could not see where they were interested.

Workers Party Backs Amalgamated Plan to Aid Russian Industry

Enthusiastically endorsing the Russian-American Industrial Corporation launched by the recent Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Convention, the Workers Party has issued a proclamation calling for a United Front in behalf of this project to raise $1,000,000 to rehabilitate the clothing industry in Moscow and Petrograd.

It is pointed out that this is only the beginning. The proclamation declares this "is a workers' question," not a Russian question, and urges the workers of Amerca to make as proud a record in this direction as they already have done in providing famine relief.

The proclamation in full follows:

PROCLAMATION OF THE WORKERS PARTY OF AMERICA ON THE RUSSIAN-AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL CORPORATION

Workers of America—The struggle of our class against exploitation has developed to greater lengths in the past five years than had ever been known before. New developments have brought new understanding, new hopes and new calls upon our loyalty.

This struggle has resulted in a great labor upheaval in Russia. The working class of that country have attempted finally to free themselves from exploitation by capitalists. The initial stage of this fight has been won; the capitalist class has been cast out of power and the working class is in complete control. This is the furthest advancement that the working class has ever attained in one hundred years of struggle thru the World.

Face New Responsibilities.

But this advanced position has brought new and vast responsibilities to the workers. Having won possession of all of the factories, workshops, mines, railroads and land of a vast country, it has become the duty of the workers and peasants to operate these possessions so as to feed, clothe and shelter the newly freed people.

The Russian workers have taken over an industrial system in a condition of indescribable chaos. The industries and transport were already broken down by the World War. Then, in the struggle of the War With England?

War by the United States and France against England is only one of the many startling conclusions, supported by many facts, advanced by J. T. Walton Newbold, the British Communist, in the accompanying article which he has himself entitled, "From Genoa to the Hague."

Newbold shows the close alliance between American and French financial interests, especially the war conducted by the Standard Oil Co. and the Bank of Paris, against the British Royal Dutch Shell Oil interests.

He accounts for the close resemblance of the policies of the United States and France towards Soviet Russia.

He outlines the driving motives that will dictate the policies of the representatives of the Russian Soviet Republic at The Hague.

The article in full is as follows:

From Genoa to the Hague

By J. T. WALTON NEWBOLD

On the 29th of December last, the great Italian financial house, at whose head was Senator Marconi, the Banca Italiana di Sconto, went bankrupt.

On the 6th of January ensuing, Mr. Lloyd George, speaking in the meeting of the Supreme Council at Cannes, "moved that a Five Power Conference should be summoned to go into the whole question (of the economic reconstruction of Europe).

The Conference adopted the suggestion, and on the invitation of Italy it was decided that the Conference should be held at Genoa in March, Russia, as well as Germany, being invited to attend."

"Marconi"

On the 29th of December had failed what we may, justly, call the Marconi Bank.

On the 6th of January, Mr. Lloyd George (friend of Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of the Marconi wireless Company) proposed the holding of the Conference which has now ended (like the Marconi Bank), in proposals for a new incorporation.

The Banca di Sconto failed because it had invested enormous funds in the greatest metallurgical and ship building concern in Italy—Gio Ansaldo and Co., of Genoa.

This mushroom of the war and the armistice period came upon evil days and the Bank, finding its assets "frozen" (like those of the City Equitable Insurance Company and certain British shipbuilding syndicates whose crash is impending) came to grief.

Genoa was the scene of the catastrophe.

Genoa was chosen as the scene of the Conference. The British Premier, anxious to prevent the fate that had overtaken the industrialists of Genoa swallowing up his own friends and

Red T. U. International Urges World Labor Aid Striking U. S. Miners

The Red Trade Union International has issued a proclamation to the miners, transport workers, seamen and railroad men of the world urging support of the striking coal miners in this country.

The appeal for international solidarity in aid of the American miners is called to the particular attention of the workers of England, France, Belgium and Germany. It is as follows:

The drama of last year's miners' strike in England is repeating itself in the great American coal strike. The British coal strike was broken because the bourgeoisie exercised international solidarity and the miners did not support their class comrades standing in the midst of a bitter defensive struggle by preventing the transportation and delivery of strikebreaker coal.

The strike of the British coal miners was turned into a defeat with the aid of German reparations coal, with coal from France, Belgium and the Saar.

Now the world bourgeoisie is organizing the transport of British, French, Belgian and German coal to America in order to subject the American coal miners just as the English miners were subjected in 1921.

Miners of the world! How long will you allow this? One after another you are being defeated in your difficult struggle for existence, for your bit of bread. The International Federation of Miners and Transport Workers is doing nothing to prevent the defeat of the American miners. Just as in the English coal strike, they are passively looking on while the fight of the American miners is being turned into a defeat by the [illegible] of British strikebreaking coal.

ity reaffirmed the Declaration of the Convention of 1901 on Policy.

This ancient document is the Bible of A. F. of L. officialdom, and contains the revelations by which they justify every failure to do anything.

There has not been the slightest change for 21 years, and it is here that is to be found an important contributing cause for the outworn policies and childish remedies favored by the American Federation of Labor. Representatives of the miners and railway men are meeting to arrange a closer alliance, however, as evidence of the fact that economic pressure does far more for industrial unionism than all the reasoned arguments on the subject.

Pleads for Steel Workers

The glaring inconsistencies of the Federation policy are forced to the notice of the delegates in spite of the vigilance of the machine.

Mike Tighe, president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, mounted the flag draped rostrum in the National Guard Armory where the convention meets, and told the delegates of the reign of terror under martial law in Newport, Kentucky, just across the river.

He told how the militia in that little city ruled with the bayonet and the machine gun, and how they shot at women for the fun of seeing them run.

He announced a meeting in Newport, and promised to take the delegates and show them the bullet riddled houses of the striking workers. The convention adopted a motion obligating all delegates to attend. There was no debate.

It was a dangerous subject, and so Gompers did not even put the motion, but declared it carried without objection.

"Savior" Makes Truthful Statement

Lucy Robbins, self-styled savior of political prisoners, reported for the amnesty committee. Lucy was clad in something that looked like an open work Spanish shawl—if there is such a thing. And coyly informed the convention that it was her intention to be brief as it was the most earnest desire of her heart to be liked.

This was about the only truthful statement made by her, and it was self-evident.

Words were not needed to convey the impression that every ounce of Lucy's 189 pounds quivers with a desire to be loved by the brawny sons of labor.

She made the monstrous misstatement that all political prisoners have been freed when something like one hundred are still in jail for crimes of opinion.

Her job as one of the adopted daughters of the official family has been, not to free political prisoners, but to convince the masses that officially the A. F. of L., was doing something for amnesty.

There is noticeable here a gradual crystallization of the progressive and radical sentiment, and it is now certain that a stiff fight will be made to defeat the administration resolution denouncing Soviet Russia.

Hear Voice of Bakhmetieff

It is possible that some of the fraternal delegates will take the floor against this infamous measure which is nothing more or less than the voice of the departed Bakhmetieff speaking thru the executive council of the A. F. of L.

The first result of the conspiracy against the radical labor press is apparent here in that the New York Call is suppressing the Federated press reports of the convention on obedience to the Gompers mandate. Schlessinger, president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, with the fraternal delegateship to the British trades congress as his reward is largely instrumental in causing distrust of known radicals.

He is to-day soliciting the votes and support of reactionaries, who a year ago would have spit in his face.

EUREKA, Calif.—Arthur Ward, local secretary for the I. W. W., is held in jail for lack of $3,000 in bonds. He was arrested and charged with criminal syndicalism because he testified in the trial of Omar Eaton, organizer of lumber workers. Eaton's trial resulted in a hung jury. He is held pending a second trial.

United Front or Political Trading

The Communist and "Socialist" attitude toward the "united front" is brought sharply to the fore by the action of the Wisconsin Socialist Party Convention in refusing to run a candidate against Robert M. La Follette for U. S. senator.

Victor Berger, who has been conducting a propaganda in his paper, The Leader, favorable to La Follette, led the fight to prevent the naming of a Socialist candidate.

We find that this important news is strangely lacking from the columns of the Sunday Call, so that Socialist readers on Sunday morning had to go to The Times for this information.

This action of the Berger-inspired Wisconsin Socialists stamps the Socialist Party "united front" as merely a scheme for political trading, as we have all along contended. Berger will get the La Follette support in Milwaukee and go back to Washington as a "Socialist" congressman with republican votes.

Altho La Follette has shown himself to be friendly at times to certain popular labor measures in congress, he has always been and still is a republican politician.

When Roosevelt split the party, La Follette remained loyal to the Wall Street support that stood back of Taft for the presidency.

Threats to oust him from the senate for his St. Paul speech, silenced him during the progress of the great war.

When ex-Socialists urged La Follette as the presidential candidate of the Farmer-Labor Party in 1920, La Follette rejected the nomination because he did not want to ally himself with this expression of labor liberalism, because he felt it was a class party.

It will be interesting to watch what action, if any, the National Socialist Party will take regarding this trade between Berger and La Follette.

In New York City we have another expression of the Socialist united front. There the Socialist Party invites the Single Taxers, an aggregation of capitalist reformers with a nostrum for the solution of the land problem, to unite with them for the capture of political office.

Yet this is but a logical development of "Socialist" policies during the last three years, a continuous drifting away from Socialist fundamentals.

Against this job-hunger program stands the united front tactic of the Communist movement, seeking to unite all labor in the struggle against capitalism, politically and industrially. The Communist United Front is a struggle to bring all labor together in support of fundamental working-class principles; not to array it in a chaotic, ignorant mass at the ballot box for the purpose of giving some one a job.

Berger is doing the Communist movement a service by clarifying this issue as between the united front of Communism and the political trading of the Socialist Party.

We thank him for it.

Bakhmetieff Beats It

Boris Bakhmetieff, so-called "ambassador extraordinary" of the ghost of the long gone Kerensky regime in Russia, escaped to London and Paris on June 20th.

We say "escaped" since his services as "ambassador" were to cease on June 30th, which also ended any immunity from prosecution his job carried.

So he slipped out of the country on the 20th, his going made cheerful by luncheons, dinners and banquets extended to him by "business men" who would profit by the return of czarism in Russia.

Comfortably snuggled in among the guests at a luncheon given by the Russian-American Chamber of Commerce at the Lawyers' Club we find none other than the renegade "Socialist," John Spargo, chief adviser on Russian affairs to Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor.

With him on the one hand was Franklin Remington, the Connecticut arms manufacturer, and on the other C. P. Coleman, the Delaware powder magnate. We publish the Times' list of the friends of the departed czarist Russia as follows:

> S. R. Bertron presided at the luncheon, with Ambassador Bakhmetieff on his right and ex-Secretary of State Frank Polk on his left. Among others present were Norman H. Davies, former Assistant Secretary of State; Oscar S. Strauss, former Ambassador to Turkey; Frederic R. Coudert, H. H. Westinghouse, William H. Woodin, President of the American Car and Foundry Company; Roland H. Morris, former Ambassador in Japan; R. Fellowes Morgan, Serge Ughet, Financial Attaché of the Russian Embassy, who will now be in charge of Russian affairs in this country; Henry W. Taft, Charles H. Boynton, E. R. Thomas of the United States Steel Corporation; Charles H. Muchnic, Vice President of the American Locomotive Company; Franklin Remington, John Spargo, C. P. Coleman, Jerome Landfield and C. F. Ahlstrom.

Spargo no doubt earned his invitation to the luncheon by a letter on "Bakhmetieff's Services" that appeared in the New York Times, June 8th, reading in part as follows:

> "Pre-eminent among all the foes of Bolshevism, courageous in his championship of the cause of the Russian democracy, brilliant in diplomacy, this great Russian patriot has stood steadfastly against the extremes of monarchist reaction and Bolshevism."

He has done this by getting away with $187,000,000 that belong to Soviet Russia, until in some quarters he has become known as "Get Rich Quick" Bakhmetieff.

If Gompers had not been busy at the Cincinnati A. F. of L. Convention urging his anti-Soviet resolution he would, no doubt, also have been present.

The wonder is that America's workers passively consent to a Russian policy framed by the A. F. of L. officialdom in consort with the worst exploiters of labor, the most labor-hating "open shoppers" in the land.

American labor can only redeem itself by sending Gompers and others of his ilk in quick pursuit of Bakhmetieff.

Otherwise the passing of the Russian czarist "ambassador" means but very little to the oppressed workers of the United States.

[illegible] Fur Workers' [illegible]

By [illegible]

The sharp divergence between the viewpoints of the Right and the Left factions at the Fur Workers Convention was perhaps most clearly revealed during the discussion of the resolutions committee report, the Right consistently upholding every reactionary and opposing every progressive project that was put forward.

Sam Cohn, a member of the Socialist Party, introduced a resolution calling for the immediate release and impartial trial of all political prisoners in Soviet Russia.

It was supported by Morris Kaufman, president of the union, and all the other Socialist delegates.

Expose Counter-Revolutionists

The Left opposed the resolution bitterly, asking why a like demand had not been made for the release of the thousands of Communists held as political prisoners in other countries, and pointing out that the "Socialist" prisoners in Russia were counter-revolutionaries who were responsible for the slaughter of thousands of Russian workers, and immeasurable damage to the Workers' Republic.

They showed, moreover, that to pass the resolution would mean serving the interests of the capitalists who were seeking to destroy the Workers' Republic. Despite this protest the resolution was passed.

The Convention, it appears, was so deeply interested in the fate of political prisoners in Russia that it could not bother with political prisoners in the United States.

The Shame of the Convention

The convention of the Fur Workers' Union, representing 10,000 workers, found that the utmost it could spare for the hundreds of men and women held in the prisons of America for fighting the battles of the American workers was $20. The Left Wing Delegation, deeply shamed by the union's action, promised me, in my capacity of representative of the National Defense Committee, that as soon as they reached New York they would donate $50 out of their own pockets for the relief and defense of political prisoners in America.

The reactionary character of the right wing delegation was again demonstrated by their response to the plea for unity in the Needle Trades made by Sidney Hillman, President of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and also to his request that the Fur Workers cooperate in the industrial reconstruction of Soviet Russia.

In answer to the call for unity the Left Wing New York delegation submitted a resolution on amalgamation. This resolution was not even voted upon, but was substituted by a resolution asking for an alliance of all Needle Trades.

Crush Amalgamation Move

Altho this scheme had already been tried and found to be worthless, the President and his supporters of the right crushed the movement for amalgamation by moving the acceptance of the alliance plan. The Left made a brilliant defense of amalgamation, ably demonstrating wherein it would aid and strengthen the Union, but the alliance resolution was passed by a vote of 28 to 12, a large number of delegates abstaining.

Regarding the second matter brought forward by Hillman, the question of aiding in the reconstruction of Soviet Russia, the New York Joint Board introduced a resolution to the effect that the union purchase stock to the amount of $5,000 in the Amalgamated's Russian-American Industrial Company and give full cooperation in the project. The administration substituted this resolution by another which actually meant rejection of the plan.

Decide Not to Aid Russia

The Convention decided to endorse the plan in principle but not to take any action on it until it had been studied by the Executive Board.

The Left's resolutions for the recognition and support of political parties of the working class based upon the class struggle, and having for their object the wresting of political power from the capitalist class and the abolition of capitalism, were defeated. The Rights maintained that the convention could take no action on the resolution because the convention had officially endorsed the Socialist Party.

The specific resolution for supporting the Workers Party was defeated also.

On the question of taxing the membership $2 each year for two years in order to establish a fund for the International, the president opposed the demand of the Lefts that the membership be permitted to decide upon the tax. The Left promised to do everything in their power to make the collection of the tax speedy and effective. The president, however, in spite of this assurance, took the occasion to administer another defeat to the Lefts when it would have been to his advantage to support them.

Meyer London, "Socialist" Congressman, addressed the convention and delivered some sarcastic flings against the Left and called for the unity of labor's forces upon the economic field. In part London said:

"If I were asked to give up the political or economic organizations of the workers I would say the political. It requires no sacrifice to be a Socialist or a Communist."

"There seems to be an insistent effort to smash the organization. The workers will throw out both sides. The workers will not permit the city of Moscow to disrupt their organization."

This is the kind of inspiring dope that a Socialist Congressman has to offer the convention of a labor organization.

Shapiro of New York, one of the left wing delegates, bitterly attacked the general secretary's report. For almost three-quarters of an hour he successfully met and answered all questions and insinuations hurled against him.

Shapiro Exposes Socialist

He proved thru the secretary's report that Stetsky, the leader of the attacks upon the Lefts in the convention, was receiving pay at the rate of $75 per week during the 30-weeks' strike of 1920 when it was generally understood that officers of the union and officials were to receive no pay whatsoever. He plainly demonstrated that the ardent Socialist Party member, Setsky, was in the union for the pay he would get out of it.

The question of granting a charter to the retail workers of New York was the most important controversy before the convention. The question was bitterly fought out between the Lefts and the Rights, the Lefts, representing the N. Y. Joint Board, opposing the immediate issuance of a charter, the Right with Morris Kaufman favoring it. The Right only obtained 25 votes for the issuance of a charter; the Left obtained 14 votes against it. Eight delegates however refrained from voting and three left the hall in order not to be recorded.

Lefts Make Brave Fight

The Lefts, tho but 11 in number (thruout the convention), put up one splendid fight after another. By the last two days their blows were beginning to tell upon the administration. They bravely bore all the abuse that was hurled upon them from the very moment the convention opened.

When the election of officers took place the administration, in order to present some semblance of unity, placed two men of the N. Y. Joint Board delegation, Brownstein and Saroff, upon the General Executive Board. The Lefts accepted the positions even tho the convention had refused to accept a single proposition that came from their side.

By his rulings thruout the convention Kaufman proved himself to be a factionalist. He adopted the narrow policy of defeating everything the Left proposed.

Acknowledgement is made of the gift of Brooklyn bakers to the striking West Virginia coal miners in the following letter:

Dear Sir and Brother—I am in receipt of the freight bill you sent me in which two bags of flour and seven bags of beans had been shipped.

We certainly appreciate the action of Brooklyn Bakers' Union, Local No. 3, in guaranteeing the payment of this amount of foodstuff.

Please extend our thanks to this Local Union as it would be impossible for me to even begin to write what I feel, when notified that our brother unionists awake to the fact of our great need, and respond so handsomely to the call.

Trusting you will do everything in person that I cannot do on paper in thanking theses brothers, I remain, with every good wish,

With the coal barons shutting off the water supply, the coal strike around Beckley, West Va., is beginning to resemble a state of siege, according to a letter just received here as follows:

Dear Comrade:—Mr. J. E. Kershner has just brought me the news from Mabscott that on Saturday the New River Co. put up notices at Mabscott saying that the mines would be open on Monday.

Not a man responded to the Company's call to go to work there yesterday, and this morning the water was cut off from the town controlled by the Coal Company. Rather like a state of siege in war, with the enemy in control of the water supply."

brothers of the coal pits, but are actually busy hauling scab coal all over the country. This is aiding the operators directly to break the strike of the miners.

And when the railroad men helped the steel magnates to break the steel workers' strike and the coal operators to break the coal miners' strike, they have been helping their o masters to lay shackles on them.

Likewise, in their own struggles, they have refused to help each other. The various sections or groups of unions have stood aside and watched the others go before the executioners, which are the Railroad Labor Board; with the consequence that all of them have been defeated one after the other.

Now they are paying the penalty for their shortsightedness. The chickens of the craft division are coming home to roost.

What must be done in this crisis? Strike, of course, if the Railroad Labor Board tries to make its recent infamous decisions stand up. But not a strike of a few crafts.

Make it a strike of every railroad man in the United States. Anything short of this would be a crime.

The Railroad employers of the country are united. They are determined to crush the unions and to wipe them off the railroads.

The railroad men, therefore, must stand together in one solid body. If in this critical time the Four Brotherhoods hold aloof from the rest of the trades, as sure as fate they will pay for their treason shortly afterwards.

The companies have a rod in pickle for them, awaiting a favorable opportunity to apply it.

But far more important than eve the strike in showing that the railroad workers are determined not t allow themselves to be enslaved would be a movement for the variou organizations to join forces an merge together.

It Is Time to Act

If such a movement had bee launched by the recent Convention o the Railway Department it is ques tionable indeed if the recent ou rageous decisions regarding th Maintenance of Way and the Sho men would have been handed dow

But when the Convention refuse to adopt a single measure tending t develop the solidarity and strengt of the organizations it was th much encouragement for the emplo ers to go on with their attacks.

It showed that the railroad wor ers are not yet ready to take th fight seriously. But better late tha never.

As one reply to the open sho drive of the companies, the railroa men should and must combine al their forces into one gigantic army.

The situation demands this heroic measure. To do less means to walk into the shambles.

It is time for the railroad men o America to act, and to act unitedly.

Gompers' War on Federated Press Bared

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor has entered into a conspiracy with the capitalist press to destroy the Federated Press and all labor papers that do not servilely support the Gompers' administration.

To this conspiracy, the delegates from the Ladies' Garment Workers, with the exception of Luigi Antonini, are parties.

It is the intention to throttle every organ of publicity except the capitalist press and reactionary "labor" papers.

Gather in Kentucky Road House

For the purpose of launching this conspiracy the executive committee of the A. F. of L., correspondents of the capitalist press and delegates from the Ladies' Garment Workers attended a meeting held last Monday night in a well-known roadhouse on the Kentucky side of the river.

All arrangements for the meeting were made by a representative of the New York World. Robert Buck of the New Majority, official organ of the Chicago Federation of Labor, Laurence Todd of the Federated Press and the representative of Labor, the official organ of the railway organizations, were not invited.

The meeting was in the nature of a love-feast. Gompers eulogised the reporters of the capitalist press and they returned the compliment.

Not to be outdone in the matter of prostitution by the reporter of the capitalist sheets, Yanofsky of the Ladies Garment Workers, an anarchist by the way, mounted the mourners bench and told amidst tears how Gompers had converted him to the gospel of pure and simple trade-unionism.

He publicly repented of his former misdeeds committed under the influence of the horrible reds, and to the sound of tumultuous applause was admitted into the fold in company with Benjamin Schlesinger and other erring brothers.

Resolution Before Convention

Now as to the results of this meeting to date. Like his tutor, Woodrow Wilson, Gompers forces the converts to prove their sincerity.

They must abase themselves before the shrine, foreswear their former friends and immediately perform some act of loyalty to the new god.

So it is that Matthew Woll and a few more trusties have introduced a resolution aimed at the Federated Press.

The delegation from the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union are now committed to this resolution. It may be that they will be allowed to refrain from voting or even to vote against it, but when they do not fight it with all their power, they betray their membership and the labor movement.

Here is another proof of the close relationship between Gompers, Schlesinger, the capitalist press, the reactionary officialdom of the New York Labor Movement and the New York Call.

Schlesinger complained to Gompers that the Federated Press was doing what he called "the right thing."

In other words, the Federated Press is sending out a truthful report of his trafficking with the Gompers machine.

Call Under Gompers' Thumb

Gompers had the New York Times correspondent call up the secretary of the New York Central Labor Council and tell him to have the New York Call send a correspondent to Cincinnati. The secretary of the central labor council ordered The Call to send a correspondent and that correspondent is now here. Gompers has the Call under his thumb as this incident shows conclusively.

Furthermore, the delegation of the Ladies' Garment Workers, with the exception of Antonini, are preparing to betray the political prisoners still in the jails of this nation, by endorsing the report of Lucy Robbins which declared that there are no political prisoners in the United States.

If they do not do so it will be because this article arouses their membership to protest.

The suspicion aroused by the appearance of Gompers on behalf of Schlesinger at the Cleveland convention of the Ladies' Garment Workers is now a certainty.

This abject support and whining eulogy of Gompers does not mean merely that the Garment Workers are to take a passive instead of an active part in the deliberations of the A. F. of L. as they have in the past.

It means instead that they have lined up with the Gompers machine against the railwaymen, the miners and all other progressive elements.

Forced to Fight

It is not an inspiring picture that the railroad workers present as they are being kicked into a fight by the railroad barons and their tools on the railroad labor board.

In the words of John L. Lewis, president of the coal miners, "The railroad workers have no alternative but to fight." And the strike is set for July 1st.

Thus joint strike-action may be secured between the coal miners and the railroad workers, not because these organizations are finally listening to the advice of the more advanced elements in these two organizations, but because, and again in the words of Lewis, the workers in the mining and rail industries were "being driven by force of circumstances to a more frank recognition of their mutual interests and to a realization that they must exert their collective strength."

The miners and railroaders have refused to recognize the intellectual appeal for united action. They are being stirred to action, however, by the cry of their loved ones, for bread, for the right to live.

The great economic forces at work in compelling these workers to get together are revealed in a letter sent to the railroad board by the officials of the railroad unions.

This letter reveals that the rail workers have been brought face to face with pauperism before they are ready to unite forces to fight back. Important paragraphs from this letter follow:

> "The right to at least live is fundamental, but your decisions deprive a large number of railroad workers of even this elementary right. Men in America cannot be expected to work for public utilities only to see their children undernourished and doomed to a premature death, or if they do survive the almost intolerable conditions imposed by your decisions, to be destined to go thru life without an education or the opportunity to realize a healthy and decent existence.
> "Neither can they be expected to accept as the fruits of their labor poverty or a life cycle for themselves and their families which embraces the constant apprehension of passing from a bare subsistence to actual pauperism, with the stigma of the potters' field as the ultimate goal. And yet your decisions sentence thousands—even hundreds of thousands of railway workers—to these conditions, altho representatives from among them, together with their wives and little children, appeared before you and in their simple and straightforward way gave indisputable testimony of these pitiable conditions, which was later buttressed and rendered impregnable by documentary testimony based on the results of the studies of authoritative economists, public health officials and public agencies such as the Children's Bureau of the Federal Government.
> "Your further statement that you will give consideration to the living wage principle when the railroad properties are financially rehabilitated is not reassuring. You thus give further confirmation of the fact that your entire attitude is one of subordination of human rights and standards to property rights."

Let the workers in these two great basic industries watch their leaders who now confess that lack of solidarity has failed, that unity of all labor's forces is the demand of the hour.

Let the workers force their officials to translate their words into deeds. Forward to a real United Front of the coal miners and railroaders.

All Legitimate Business

The National City Bank of New York, that "Jim" Stillman made famous thru his matrimonial troubles, celebrated its 110th anniversary on June 16th.

The self-adulation of this great financial institution prompted it to put page advertisements in all the great capitalist dailies, proclaiming that:

"The National City Bank of New York has been here with its doors open to all LEGITIMATE business every busines day of these 110 years."

It further went on to say that:

"It began in 1812 with $800,000 of capital. Its capital assets today, together with those of the National City Company, aggregate $125,000,000, with total resources of more than $800,000,000. It has 72 offices in 22 foreign countries."

It points out that the record it has made in the past qualifies it for service in the future. We do not doubt that, service in the interests of the capitalist class.

The National City Bank is a Harriman Bank therefore interested in railroads, and prosperous because railroad workers are having their wages slashed to the starvation point. That is "legitimate" business.

This bank is happy because it has 72 offices in 22 foreign countries. That means it has followed the flag with a vengeance in the exploitation of other peoples. It has probably made loans, or been instrumental in having loans made to other nations; loans that must be collected thru new wars, thru the shedding of blood and the destruction of wealth the workers have produced. But that is "legitimate" business.

At the behest of the profit-hungry apetite of this bank, the government at Washington has entered upon those imperialistic policies that are crushing the aspirations of the peoples of Haiti, Porto Rico, Santa Domingo, the Central American states, the Philippines and other nations too helpless to keep out of the clutches of United States politicians and profiteers. But that is "legitimate" business.

The National City Bank has been able to amass resources of nearly a billion dollars only because the great masses of the workers are becoming, more and more, penniless paupers, unable to meet even their daily needs because this great Moloch of wealth must have its profits.

Robbery is the "legitimate" business of the great financial institutions of the United States. They get their "interest" and it is legal for them to get it.

Some day the workers will consider it just as "legitimate" to take it all back again. On that day we will be hurrying on the way to the new social order where the few will be unable to take great pride in the fact that they have prospered at the expense and thru the suffering of the many.

JOIN THE THRONG OF "SUB" HUSTLERS
Help Boost the 25,000 Readers Campaign

Every passing day brings new supporters, new subscription workers in the 25,000 new readers campaign which THE WORKER is carrying on.

From all points, North, South, East and West arrive letters, lists of subscriptions and inquiries showing that comrades everywhere are taking up the work of getting their share of these 25,000 new WORKER readers. They're gleaning in their own fields and getting results.

And, after all, isn't that the WORKER readers' job—getting these 25,000 new readers. We think it is. We think that every reader who endorsed THE WORKER has a direct obligation to THE WORKER. OUR work is to make THE WORKER a worth-while paper, to improve it, to make of it an instrument the workers can use in their struggle with the enemy. Then YOUR job begins—the circulation, the use made of this weapon—that is largely up to our readers.

It's a co-operative job, we have our part, you have yours. If we both do our best, if we work together to the best interests of our common cause, success will surely follow.

We know, it is being proved to us every day, that it IS easy to get 20 week subscriptions at the price we have made—50 cents. A growing number of comrades in cities, towns and villages are proving this to any body's satisfaction. IT IS BEING DONE. IT CAN BE DONE IN YOUR CITY, TOWN OR VILLAGE.

It's up to you, you who read these lines. We hope you accept the responsibility for getting YOUR share of these new WORKER readers in your locality, your union, your club, among your associates. And your share is just as many as you can get!

YOU be the one to get them!

Launch Trade Union Educational League in New York, June 26

What promises to be one of the most important events in the history of the local radical labor movement will take place when the New York section of the Trade Union Educational League is officially launched Monday evening, June 26, at Beethoven Hall, 210 East Fifth St.

The progressive trade's-unionists have been looking forward for a long time for this opportunity to become active in spreading the message of militant unionism amongst the A. F. of L. and other unions in this city.

At this meeting the program of the League will be fully explained and plans will be brought forward for pushing the work and making it popular amongst the wide awake trades-unionists. In addition elections for officers and Executive Board will take place.

The Provisional Organizational Committee which is calling the meeting wishes to announce that the local organization will adhere strictly to the policies of the National League, which is purely an educational and propaganda body devoted to the spread of militant industrial unionism, for the purpose of building the existing unions. The League is financed entirely by the voluntary contributions of its sympathizers. All forward-looking trades-unionists, regardless of party affiliation who are in accord with the objects of the League should attend this meeting and thus lay the cornerstone for a radical labor movement in this city.

Progressive Workers Form Industrial Unity League

Seeing the necessity of more unity of purpose and action within the ranks of the independent unions, a number of progressive workers in New York have formed the League for Industrial Unity.

The purpose of the new league is to unite all progressive elements in the independent unions into industrial committees for the purpose of working for the amalgamation of all independent unions in each industry into one industrial union, and carrying on an active propaganda for Industrial Unionism and unity of action.

Industrial meetings have been held at which the following officers and organizers were elected: M. E. Emerson, recording secretary; Patrick J. McClellan, General Chairman; Obermeier, organizer of the Food Workers Committee; Jos. E. Kucher, organizer of the Metal Workers Comittee; McClellan, organizer of the Public Service committee; and Sam Levine, organizer of the Shoe Workers committee.

The headquarters of the League is at 81 E. 10th St., top floor, New York City, and office hours are from 12 noon to 7 P. M.

Next General Meeting Friday June 30, 8 P. M., 81 E. 10. St.

BACK TO NORMALCY.

MASON CITY, IOWA.—One evening a week ago, the following ad appeared in the "Globe-Gazette," daily capitalist newspaper here:

WANTED—Truck driver, steady work. Northern Lbr. Co.

What was the astonishment of the manager of the Northern Lumber Co., to find before his office door next morning two long lines of men, 175 in number, a bystander said.

"Good Lord! What does this mean?" ejaculated the manager.

"We're looking for that job you advertised last night," was shouted at him.

Sorry that he could do nothing for the men, the manager had to report that the job had been filled the same evening the "ad" appeared.

Regardless of the fact that many seasonal jobs for the summer only have opened up, unemployment here is very serious. All indications point to a hard and bitter winter for the large numbers of workers who are now employed at odd jobs during the summer months.

DON'T BE FOOLISH—

And hold street meetings without copies of THE WORKER on sale.

And let your listeners go away without a chance to buy a pamphlet telling more about your subject than you have been able to get across.

And hold picnics with hundreds of "new" workers present and have no WORKERS, no literature, no Workers Party membership application cards and no subscription cards on hand.

BE PRACTICAL

Order a bundle of WORKERS sufficient to cover every meeting you will hold during the week.

Order 20-week sub cards to sell at these meetings and upon every occasion to new subscribers.

The Workers Party Literature Department has thousands of copies of various books and pamphlets that should be sold at your meetings, picnics, etc.

Order a quantity. Tighten up the loose screws in your organization machinery. Make it function 100 per cent.

Labor's War on Supreme Court Raises [illegible] Problem

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The utter blindness and black reaction of the little group of financial and industrial oligarchs who reign unchecked in America to-day creates some peculiar problems for the revolutionary movement to solve.

There is a liberal sentiment in the United States represented by such men as La Follette, Borah, in the senate, Oscar Garrison Villard, the New Republic group, the more radical Freeman, the supporters of the Civil Liberties Union; a number of ministers of the various interpretations of gospel, and a considerable number of lawyers and men and women of other professions.

There is the American Federation of Labor which is neither liberal nor radical, officially, but which quite often, as for instance on the question of the recognition of the Soviet government, is more reactionary than the state department.

All these groups from time to time make proposals which they believe will make for increased happiness and security of livelihood for the masses of the people.

Never do the revolutionary working-class organizations see eye to eye with these groups in the matter of methods and measures.

Generally speaking, it is enough to secure condemnation for ameliorative measures from the revolutionary organizations for them to be what they are or for them to emanate from liberal or backward labor groups.

Reactions Clever Propaganda

Consequently, it has often happened in the past, that the capitalist press and the revolutionary press gave voice to the same bitter opposition to proposals for immediate relief from some crying evil altho for different motives.

Nevertheless, the conservative labor officialdom of this country has found in this phenomenon a weapon ready to their hand.

The propaganda against the revolutionary movement they have found most effective is the pointing out of concrete instances where revolutionists have been dividing labor on issues which labor was willing and ready to fight.

Fight for Existence

This brings me to an immediate question which the convention of the American Federation of Labor now in session possesses for the revolutionists of the United States.

The Supreme Court, by its decision in the Coronado case, places all labor organizations and even the co-operative organizations of the farmers at the mercy of the organized exploiting interests who have shown only too plainly their intention to eliminate all organizations of the toilers no matter how conservative they may be.

By its decision on the child-labor law the Supreme Court re-affirms its position as the foremost agency of Capitalist government.

These are two facts that not even the most guileless and optimistic liberal or standpat labor leader will dispute and on this one issue, if on nothing else, the American Federation of Labor, the international officers and the affiliated membership will fight. It is a fight for existence.

Hope for Plan of Action

Senator La Follette, the best-hated man in the legislative halls of this nation, was brought to the convention by the executive council of the A. F. of L. for the purposes of arousing the delegates to the danger their organizations faced, indicating plainly that this opponent of the war was once more persona grata with the Gompers group, and to outline a plan of action.

La Follette delivered a denunciation of the Supreme Court and its successful attempts to override the expressed will of Congress that inflamed the delegates to a high pitch of resentment, that created a bitter hatred for the employers and their instrument—the Supreme Court. His speech was a phillipic, bulwarked by cunning logic—if we accept the premise, as the delegates did, that democracy can exist in a class society—that will rank with the classics of invective.

But what remedy did he advocate? Did he say that the Supreme Court, having usurped its authority, had forfeited its right to exact obedience to its mandates? No, indeed.

What he proposed was something that actually recognizes that stolen authority by enacting a measure to regulate it.

Peculiar La Follette Remedy

He suggested a constitutional amendment giving Congress the right to re-pass a law declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court and thereby put it into effect.

To this the delegates agreed with delirious enthusiasm which left no doubt in the mind of an observer that they believed La Follette had hit upon a scheme for circumventing the cunning employers.

In practice this proposal simply means that the real rulers would devote a little more attention to Congress and that seats in that body might become as valuable as those on the Supreme bench.

In a nation where the ability to give or deny employment is vested in a few individuals and where all educational and publicity channels are well controlled this is a harmless scheme so far as curbing the power of the capitalist class is concerned.

Most revolutionists will dismiss it with a shrug of the shoulders and it has already been ridiculed in the radical press.

Capitalist Sheet Frantic

Let us see what the big capitalists think of this typical reform that is to be brought about by reformistic methods for which there is adequate constitutional precedent.

The Cincinnati Enquirer is an organ of what La Follette calls "big business." It is owned by the McLaine family who also own the Washington Post. Both are organs of the black reaction mentioned in the beginning of this article.

Ned McLaine, of the Washington Post, is the personal friend and adviser of President Harding. There is no more uncompromising hater of labor in the United States.

The views expressed by these papers are the views of the gigantic plunderbund which decides the destinies of the workers of this nation.

On the day following LaFollette's speech the Enquirer carried an editorial entitled "Crush This Infamous Thing!" I quote the most important paragraphs:

> "Aimed at the very heart of the American form of representative government is the shaft of United States Senator Robert M. La Follette, loosed in the presence of the delegates to the convention of the American Federation of Labor. Not Lenine nor yet Trotsky could have devised a more perfect engine of destruction than he proposed.
> "What he advocates is the overturning of the work of the Fathers who wrote that greatest of all instruments—greater even than the Magna Charta—the Federal Constitution, which has stood, Gibraltar-like, against insidious nullifications, armed treason and demagogic attack for a century and a half and today serves as a model for the breed of young republics just born of travail and the war against kings.
>
> "Today there is rising a protest against the merging of the legislative and executive departments and President Harding sits in the White House largely on that account.
>
> "The Wisconsin senator now proposes that all three departments shall be forcibly united and power given to Congress to hold sway over life and property, that the Judges shall sit at the feet of the majority in legislative halls and that the congressional roll-call shall take the place of substantive justice while the chained executive enforces its decrees.
> "Were it not from the lips of LaFollette the proposal would be set down as refined folly, and were it not rebellious it would be regarded as ridiculous. As for him who advocates this anarchy and for those who applauded his detestable act, here is a couplet that well fits the situation, a situation, it may be said that horrifies the true lover of good government. It is this:
> "No rogue e'er felt the halter draw
> "'With good opinion of the law.'"

Thus speaketh the dictatorship of American capital. And now, fellow-revolutionists, I ask you: What are we going to do about it?

Can we, dare we, while calling for a united front against American capitalism, afford to give only lip-service to the struggle to which the trade-union movement has pledged itself?

It seems to me that we should not only join in, but lead, the fight. If we cannot do this and at the same time keep the issue clear we are not what we claim to be—the vanguard of the workers of the United States.

MEETINGS FOR MINERS.

There will be a meeting for the coal miners' relief this Saturday night, at Rockaway Beach, Beach 84th St. Speakers: J. Louis Engdahl, Fannie Jacobs, Marcell Sherer and Jeanette D. Pearl. Comrades living in Rockaway are urged to help make the meeting a big success.

World Labor Plans War to Fight Famine

An international conference of the workers' famine relief organizations of more than 20 countries met in Berlin on June 21. The Friends of Soviet Russia is represented by three delegates, one being from the Canadian section.

This is one of the most important conferences that have taken place in recent years.

Encouraging Reports from the Volga

"Reports from the Volga region indicate that the deathlike grip that the famine had on the life of the people is relaxing somewhat.

On the other hand, the famine is spreading in the Ukraine. The food in the "granary" of Soviet Russia has been eaten up—it has been used to help the other provinces—and starvation will face the population till the next harvest.

Machinery Great Need

The great need is for machinery of every character. The safety of Soviet Russia depends on whether she can procure machinery of every type and form. But above all she needs farming machinery, in order that the largest crops possible may be obtained.

It will be the big problem at the Berlin Famine Relief Conference to devise ways and means of procuring this machinery, despite the prohibition of the capitalist governments. Soviet Russia's offer of concessions to the capitalist governments and capitalist concerns is an offer to the whole world—an offer that the Berlin Conference will weigh.

The building up of Russian industries depends on the co-operation of the workers of America, in particular, since America is best equipped with machinery and American workers are best able economically to help Soviet Russia.

DETROIT F. S. R. PICNIC.

Detroit Branch of the F. S. R. will hold a real international picnic July 4th, at the South Slavic Picnic Grounds.

FARM UNIT SAILS.

The remaining members of the First Agricultural Commune of the New York branch Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia, have sailed from this port for Russia.

They will join the first contingent of this unit which arrived in Russia early in April and settled on a large estate in the province of Tambov. The tract embraces 3,000 acres of land with buildings, a large fruit orchard, some live stock, and an apiary. Still another group will sail early in July, the Society announces.

The Society for Technical Aid also is planning to send a group to the Lettish Co-operatives in Petrograd composed of textile, shoemaking, metalurgical, shipbuilding, construction and agricultural workers. Full information will be given on application to the Lettish Co-operatives, Central Bureau, Room 603, No. 110 West 40th Street, New York City.

Unlimited admission of organized groups into Russia, provided they are equipped with tools, provisions, etc., is provided by a resolution of the Russian Council of Labor and Defense.

Activities of S. T. A. S. R.

Comr. Allen Broms is delivering a series of lectures at the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia, 240 East 23rd St. The lectures are well attended by the English speaking groups of the society. The next series will take place on Wednesdays every week, at 8 P. M.

Thursday, June 29, at 8 P. M., Comrade Ben Gitlow will deliver a lecture at the Technical Aid on "The New Economic Policy of Soviet Russia" and the help which American workers are requested to give to Russia. All invited.

La Follette Shadow Blots out Wisconsin Socialism, 59 to 47

By THURBER F. LEWIS

(Special to The Worker)

MILWAUKEE, Wisc.—La Follette is a big man in his way. Any "socialist" would be proud of his record in the Senate. His stand on the war is now looked back on with admiration. He's made it a bit hot for the profiteers. He talks in terms of public ownership of industry. For all this, the workers and farmers of Wisconsin idolize him. A great many of them know he is a politician, a very ambitious one, but "he's done things" they will tell you. From even Victor Berger's annual German electorate come songs of praise. On all this the Socialist Party of Wisconsin looks with much misgiving.

Climb on La Follette Band Wagon.

This case of La Follette has been stirring the party for many months. It came to a head at the State Convention of the Socialist Party of Wisconsin held in Milwaukee, June 17th.

Briefly put: La Folette's re-elecion is due at the November polls. That's a dead certainty, and every one knows it. The question for the "S. P." was whether or not to run against him.

The "Big Fellows" Berger, Hoan, Seidel, et al. decided it unwise to put up a candidate against him. Of course that settled the matter; but there was sport watching them put it over. You see there are still left a lot of "Hard Shelled" Socialists who can't see this compromise business.

It had been the hope of the "big fellows" to pass the thing quietly and quickly at the convention. As Seidel explained, it was a bit embarrassing to have this thing get around. Bad for party prestige and all that, you know. But it had to be done—publicity or none.

Obey Chicago Conference.

The principle discusion was on a resolution, which asked for a blank ballot against La Folette. A rider trying to explain it away expressed appreciation for La Follette's war and labor legislation record, pointed out the action was in keeping with the Chicago Conference on coalition, and by way of amends panned La Follette for staying with the G. O. P.

When you go about Milwaukee you see on the billboards Milwaukee is the center of Socialism in America. It isn't hard to believe that, and it's still easier to find what a sorry center it makes. This convention then of 114 delegates you might say was the convention of the "center of Socialism in America." Hence it is fair to look upon the emanations of that gathering as a more or less true echo of the Socialism of the country. For truth to tell even the socialists will grant it their last stronghold.

Work Doesn't Like La Follette

It was with a heavy heart that John M. Work opened the evening session by reading a Federated Press dispatch from Cincinnati. It told how La Follette was greeted with a thunderous ovation and how he stirred emotions of gratitude seldom witnessed among labor gatherings. It had been previously pointed out that the seamen and rail road workers would hear of none but La Follette, and how the Farmers fell on his every word.

I don't like La Follette, continues John. I think him a very selfish man and a very ambitious politician. But what are we to do? They worship him, how are we to expect the support of the farmers and trade unionists at the coming Chicago Conference if we buck La Follette here.

That was the key note. Every move, every word is shadowed by the soon-to-be grand coalition with the liberal and labor elements that alone can save the skin of what is left of the S. P.

But the "Hard Shells" would hear of nothing of the sort. It was naked and unmitigated compromise and that's all there was to it. If La Follette is a scoundrel we must do all we can to make it miserable for him

Must Play the Game

"But don't you see," from Seidel. "He's got the election anyway, and we've got to learn to 'play the game a little'." As if they hadn't been playing it for years.

Compromise? Why, Comrade Weber knows all about that. We're all compromises. I'm a compromise. Didn't my father and mother compromise to bring me here? And then he tells how it was only a compromise back in 1909 or so when he and some other socialist legislators were in the state house, that succeeded in passing the historic workmen's compensation act.

Another showed how it was a coalition between the Catholics and Socialists of Germany that brought peace to the world. The great British Labor Movement is built on compromise.

Then they looked for precedents. Lots of them. Didn't we run a blank ballot against so and so in such and such a year. Pshaw, and as for playing the game how many tymes haven't we put a convenient pole or a handy half dozen Germans on the ballot to catch the uncertain votes.

Seidel Is Irrepressible

The irrepressible Seidel again: What do we care about the senatorial elections anyway, doesn't our constitution demand the abolition of the Senate.

But here was the argument that was to lay low even the most stubborn opposition. La Follette has built up a big following in Wisconsin. A great deal of it is good material. La Follette is an old man, he can't last for ever. The Socialist Party is the natural inheritor of the La Follette camp. Which is to say, if the Socialist Party of Wisconsin outlives La Follette it may amount to something yet.

It was an outsider, asked to speak who sprung the forbidden subject of a "deal" between La Follette and Berger whereby Berger would get La Follette support in the Fifth Congressional district if the "S. P." refrained from running for the Senate.

"Capitalist Newspapers", shouted Berger. Whereupon one wondered, glancing at the excellent sport page and capacious advertising of his "Leader" just what a capitalist newspaper is.

"Compromise!" the Watchword

And so it went. Compromise is the watch word of the Socialist Party. But it must be. They are too weak to stand on their own legs. Here in Wisconsin especially do they know their rope is about at the end. The next Milwaukee municipals are going to sweep the social democrats from the city hall. There is no hope of getting back except thru compromise. They are willing it seems, and their opportunism urges them to choose any political bedfellows that can accomplish the restoration.

As for the convention, it was another of a long series of socialist, I had almost said bedroom, farces. A grand sight it was indeed to see these erstwhile followers of the Liebknechts (the convention was ninety percent German), crying for compromise and political trading.

But even in the staid old social democracy of Wisconsin, the Custer's last stand of the S. P. of A., there is trouble. At the convention one heard threats of withdrawal. The voting was dangerously close, fifty-nine in favor of La Follette, forty-seven against.

Prospects for Berger

There is another left wing in the S. P. It is a left wing composed of the 1910 type of socialist. They are not "left" because they are moving in that direction, but because the rest of the Party is moving so far to the right.

One must admit the S. P. to be still something of a power in Wisconsin. But the end is not far off. The next time Berger gets to the door (he has got no farther for years), of the House it will probably be as a member of the United Federation of Political Trading and Compromise Leagues.

The attempt to open six big cotton mills at Manchester, N. H., closed by the textile strike since Feb. 13, so far has been practically a complete failure. When the whistle blew to call the 25,000 workers into the mills there were thousands of striking workers gathered in the vicinity of the mills, but only a few scores responded. The rest remained quietly outside.

patrons, pocketed his pride and with it the pride of his patrons.

In their interest and at their behest he consented to grasp "murder" (Soviet Russia) by the hand.

Poincare

The French Premier, M. Briand, having acquiesced in that which he saw no immediate way to prevent, returned to Paris and there fell a victim to the equally intelligible and intelligent policy of the French industrialists.

Millerand (sometime attorney to the Comite des Forges), President of the Republic, thereupon called on Poincare (sometime attorney to the Comite des Forges, the Comite des Houilleres [Coal Owners' Council] and the Association of Chemical Industries to form an alternative Ministry.

Poincare, the willing tool of the Schneider Bank, the instrument of the Banque de l'Union Parisienne and the Banque de Paris, became Premier of France.

Poincare did not approve of the manner of the holding of the Conference, much less of some of the participants.

He did not himself attend. He did not permit to his delegates a free hand. The spokesman of France, like the spokesman of Russia, had to refer matters to those from whom they had their mandate.

Capitalism vs. Communism.

The one party had to consult the agent of the Banks. The other had to have resort to the agent of the toiling masses.

It was not merely Barthou vs. Tchitcherin nor even Poincaré vs. Lenin. It was Capitalism vs. Communism.

Whenever there was a possibility of an understanding between Britain and Italy on one hand and Russia and Germany upon the other, Poincare (over the wire from Paris) [illegible] some difficulty.

If he erred from his labors in the service of plutocracy, his colleague, Theunis, Premier of Belgium, put in a spoke.

Between them—these creatures of the allied banking houses of Paris and Brussels, the political office boys of the Banque de l'Union Parisienne and its participating partner, the Societe Generale de Belgique, found a way, upon every available occasion, to prevent Russia and Britain coming to an economic and political accord.

The Sorrows of David

The British Premier's troubles are exceedingly complex.

He is the leader of a coalition of parties, representing the divergent viewpoints of different sections of the capitalist class in an empire which is no longer possessed of the economic and armed might which has been traditionally theirs, and by means of which alone their prestige and power can be maintained.

Within British capitalism goes on an intense struggle: creditors who have come to the assistance of industrialists endeavouring to expand the productive capacity of their undertakings, mortgage-burdened industrialists striving to dodge foreclosure and surrender.

Simultaneously goes on an equally intense struggle between the creditors of the British Treasury and the British Government, in which the latter is endeavouring to keep intact the resources of its masters (the British Imperialists) and the former are endeavouring to exploit the opportunity to blackmail the Empire—for concessions, and for an abandonment of its habit of putting up all over the planet that most characteristic emblem of England—"Trespassers will be Prosecuted."

[illegible]

"The industrialists are [illegible] committed to a policy of [illegible] self-assertion. They must [illegible] markets. They must have adequate reserves of raw material. They cannot afford to become dependent on the goodwill of the United States.

The merchants and the investing classes would prefer, no doubt, to possess unlimited political power. It is not, however—so highly impersonal is the organization of credit facilities and investment services—absolutely indispensable. They have acquired the habit of drawing their income from transactions in the innumerable commodities of all the lands subject to capitalist exploitation. For fifty years they have received their dividends from the United States, even as, for twenty years, they and their French and Belgian counterparts have derived profits from mining, railway and ranching properties in South and Central Africa.

Between the British autocracy and "the Upper Four Hundred" of New York "Society" there exists a very intimate relationship—of consanguinity, culture and property. This should never be forgotten.

Material Basis of Pro-French Politics

The English middle-class on the other hand—whose members have adequate incomes, but do not operate business on the grand scale—find in the French type of company opportunities to invest their savings here, there and everywhere, in profitable ventures imposing neither responsibilities nor personal association with the property. Hence there are, in the shareholding classes of this country, tendencies pre-disposing them to sympathy with the ideas which the Daily Mail ennunciates.

[illegible] The Morning Post went so far in its [illegible] of Marxian theory as to make allusion to "Oil [illegible]." Wickham Steed, of the Times, had also nasty remarks to make about the odor of [illegible] which pervaded the assemblage.

Rumors came thick and fast of negotiations in hand or of agreements arrived at between the "Royal-Dutch-Shell" and the Soviet Government. Whence they emanated no one seems to be willing to disclose. Both the "Royal Dutch" and the Soviet delegates were emphatic in their denial that an agreement had been arrived at. The American Ambassador at Rome, the American Government and the whole entourage of the Standard Oil Company and the Standard Franco-American present in Europe were loud in their denunciation of any such concession as was alleged.

Swelling the chorus of protest rose, also, the strident voices of the Belgian oil interests.

What was all the noise about, and what is the significance of the attempt to adjourn to the Hague?

Why The Hague?

"The Royal Dutch Company for the Exploitation of Petroleum Wells in the Netherlands Indies"—to give the "Royal Dutch" its full title in an intelligible rendering—has its head office at 30 Carel van Bylandtlaan, The Hague, Holland.

It has an enormous capital and interests all over the world. It has [illegible] persistently alleged and as [illegible] denied that the Dutch Company and its British associate and subsidiaries, the "Shell" Transport and Trading Co., Ltd., and the Anglo-Saxon Petroleum Company, are under the control of the British Foreign Office. The "Shell" has had for a decade, and has recently renewed for five years, an agreement whereunder it markets the production of the Anglo-Persian Oil Company, a concern which is, definitely, under the control of the British Admiralty.

These two groups are, therefore, in close alliance. The one has its headquarters in Holland, the other in London.

Dutch Jews rule the Royal Dutch Company, Samuels and Rothschilds reign in the "Shell." With them are the Lazards—who made their fortunes in the Californian gold fields—and the Pearsons—who took pay for Mexican railways in Mexican oil wells.

Into the services of the Pearsons went the late Lord Murray of Elibank (after the Marconi scandal) and, also, a son of Mr. Lloyd George.

The Royal-Dutch-Shell combination has, aided by British diplomacy, in the Lloyd George period, penetrated deeply into California, and other states of the Middle West. It has, also, been very active in Egypt whilst its little brother has been digging into Mesopotamia. In 1919, it established two subsidiaries to refine and market oil in France and did enormous business with French speculators. In fact, it almost succeeded in securing a monopoly in France. In the autumn of 1920, after the San Remo Conference—mainly about oil as Spa was mainly about coal—Sir Basil Zaharoff and the Anglo-Persian Oil Company set up another petroleum marketing agency in France and its colonies.

Standard Oil Hits Back.

Earlier in the same year, however, a fly got into the ointment (or into the oil). The Standard Oil Company pushed into France and formed the Standard Franco-American, "whose capital was provided in the proportion of 49 percent by 'Standard Oil,'" and 51 percent by the Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas.

The president of the new concern was the ex-Ambasador Jules Cambon.

It is this alliance of the Banque de Paris and Standard Oil which has been making trouble for Britain (just as will the Schneider Banks and the firm of J. P. Morgan and Co.).

Until Harding became President the Royal Dutch "Shell" was pressing Standard somewhat hard. In the last year or so, Standard has been driving the Royal Dutch "Shell" back.

The Dutch used to be big creditors of United States capitalism. They sold their holdings to the war-rich Americans and invested the proceeds in low-priced German properties—and in marks. In their greed for big profits, the Dutch investors have suffered enormous loss, and there have been some narrow escapes even the largest trading banks Rotterdam and Amsterdam. The banks whose moneyed men (V den Berghs and Jurgens) have foot in Holland and the other London or Hull, have been ha an uncomfortable time.

The bottom has dropped clean o of the palm, kernel and vegetable o markets and the rubber planters a shrieking despair.

These were the colonial produ in which Rotterdam (and the duce market of Mincing Lane) largely traded. That catastro weakened least the Rotterdam Bank. The collapse of the Ger exchange has pained the directors the Amsterdamsche Bank.

The other Dutch Bank is Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, e., the Bank of Paris and the Lo countries, and it is, pre-eminently, French Bank.

How They Line Up.

The Americans stand behind Jul Cambon and Eugene Schneider (i. e. behind the masters of Monsie Poincare).

The Americans, led by Secretar of State Hughes, the nominee of th Trusts, stand behind the Belgians.

The American "Equitable Life In surance Co." and the Guarante Trust Company" reverse the tradi tional role and close in upon thei one-time creditors of the Hague an Haarlem, of Amsterdam and Rot terdam.

The massed might of America money moves on—steadily encirclin Threadneedle Street.

The British Premier and his masters know, that whilst Genoa was a important outpost, the Hague is a very citadel whose fall into hostile hands means their capitulation at no distant date to the inexorable ruthless will of America and France.

The Alternatives.

These facts, known to the Marxi scholars of the Kremlin, will deter mine their attitude and influenc their diplomacy.

We must prepare for one of tw eventualities—either of which mean Revolution before many years g by.

The first is war with France an America, a war which will plac arms in the hands of the wage slaves of every capitalist country and which by its violence and ex penditure will bring the whole top heavy system of credit crashin speedily to the ground.

The second is the merciless grind ing down of the workers of thi country to a standard of life as lo as that of Vienna; the cutting o once and for all of the tribute o the dependencies with which to fee the hungry mouths of the home pro letariat; the establishment of a sys tem of repression and cruelty such as has been already employed as a preliminary canter in Colorado and West Virginia.

And either of these will bring the workers face to face with the dilemma—Revolution or Annihilation.

Class Struggle, Not Race Prejudice, Makes Harvard Hit at Jews

By GEORGE E. POWERS

The newspaper reading public has been thrown into an agitated debate respecting the merits of the alleged decision of the Harvard authorities to limit to a minimum the number of Jews at the college.

This decision has not started a discussion on a high plane, rather, it has tended to stir up narrow, ignorant race and religious prejudice of the same kind that led to the horrible pogroms of Czaristic Russia.

Had those behind the Harvard trustees been actuated by a deliberate design to bring about a series of cruel massacres of the innocent, their action could not be more diabolical.

In certain quarters where is reflected the intellectual "light" which illumines the mentalities responsible for the Harvard decision, the following conversation took place.

Employer—"Harvard should limit the attendance of Jews to one per cent. I don't want my son to be forced to associate with them."

Worker—"Have you any good reason to take such a bigoted stand?"

They Know Too Much.

Employer—"Yes; several reasons, which I don't consider bigoted, at all. In the first place, I don't intend to send my son to Harvard merely for education; he has enough now to last him the rest of his life. I want him to go to college so that he may meet young men of influential families and make friends who will help him along in business later on. If Harvard becomes overrun with Jews, they will drive away the best elements."

Worker—"How can the Jews do that?"

Employer—"Well, they run away with all the scholarships; by studying days, nights and Sundays, they get the highest marks. I certainly do not propose to put my son up against such competition. It would ruin his health. Furthermore, on general principles, they are undesirable, being for the most part aliens. It's a shame that a fine old university like Harvard should have to tolerate them."

Worker—"So those are your reasons for limiting the number of Jews at Harvard?"

Employer—"Yes; aren't they good enough?"

Worker—"Well, on those grounds would you object to your son associating with, say, for instance, a son of Mortimer L. Schiff, the Jewish banker?"

Employer—"Oh, I don't claim that all Jews are objectionable."

Degree Mere Badge of Loyalty

According to this employer's view, which we have good reason to believe is general among those who have taken the lead in the hue and cry against the Jewish students, the Harvard degree should be reserved for the rich and those who slavishly adopt the social, political and economic conceptions of the rich. If these people could have their way, the degree would become merely a badge of loyalty to the interests of a rich, parasitic leisure class.

An analysis of the condition at Harvard shows that 12 percent of the students in the college are Jews. Of this number, fully 80 percent are sons of working-class fathers. If the above twelve percent were composed wholly of the sons of bankers and business men, it is extremely doubtful that one word of discrimination would have been allowed to go forth as the decision of Harvard University. Since, however, the majority of Jews attending that college are of a class which is regarded by the powerful ruling elements in society as a slave class, those rulers have determined to protect the "sanctity" of the "fair" Harvard degree from proletarian "contamination."

These intellectual hirelings of the capitalist class dare not state the bald truth of the matter, for they well realize that to do so would unite against their class great masses of workers, regardless of race or creed. It so happens that Jewish workers have invaded the sacred precincts. "The easiest way is the best." Therefore we have the spectacle of the trustees of one of the oldest colleges in the country engaged in the old game of fomenting race and religious prejudice to back up a decision which in reality is intended to keep Harvard a "pure" bourgeois institution. Hence the proposed limitations on the Jews.

In other localities it may be that workers of other races will be discriminated against. They should realize at all times that it is not their RACE but their CLASS which is the real ground for that discrimination.

In a society which places the ownership of material things above all else, institutions of learning must play second fiddle. And those who have cherished the illusion that intellectual attainment is the primary concern of a bourgeois university are rapidly learning otherwise.

TOKIO.—Japanese business and professional circles, as well as the workers, are hostile to the imperial adventure in Siberia, according to the Japan Advertiser, which declares that only a group of militarists who exercise pressure on the government are favorable to the expansion of Japan in the former Russian empire. Labor demonstrations against the government have included demands for recognition of Russia and withdrawal of Japanese forces from Siberia, as promised by the government during the disarmament conferences at Washington.

First Soviet Ship Enters British Port

(From Our Own Correspondent).

HULL, ENGLAND—The red flag of the Russian Soviet Republic made its appearance in England for the first time, fluttering today (Friday, May 26th) at the stern of the S.S. Kapl Mapkc (Karl Marx) which has brought a cargo of timber from Petrograd to Hull.

The crimson ensign, bearing the letters R.S.F.S.R., aroused considerable interest in the city. The letters stand for Russian Socialist Federa Soviet Republic.

The ship, which brought 2,750 ton of Russian timber, has been rechristened after the famous German Socialist. It is the first Soviet vessel to arrive in the port, and marks the opening of trade relations with the Republic.

It is expected that other ships will follow, and one left Petrograd at about the same time as the Karl Marx bound for Dundee.

I made a tour of the ship and obtained interviews with officers and members of the crew.

There was little distinction in dress between officers and crew, and conditions aboard were generally clean and businesslike.

Above all other things I was struck with the fact that the seamen were proud of their Communism and their leaders.

In every cabin, from the firemen to the captain, there were framed photographs of Lenin and Trotsky, and it was evident that these leaders stand high in the esteem of the rank and file.

Many of the crew stated that conditions in the Russian capital were gradually improving.

District No. 2 Convention

District No. 2, which includes New York and vicinity, is planning a convention for July 29-30, at New York City. The convention agenda will be published in next week's issue.

Hod carriers and laborers at Springfield, Ill., are on strike and desire workers in other cities to stay away pending this struggle.

Upton Sinclair, the author, recently spent a day with Bartolomeo Vanzetti in the jail at Charlestown, Mass., and later issued a statement urging his release.

Cameron H. King, the Socialist boss of California, recently held a personally conducted state convention at Fresno, in which the general confession was made that most of the S. P. membership had gone over to the Workers Party.

MOSCOW, Russia.—The American White Star line has made a series of definite proposals to the People's Commissariat for Foreign Trade for establishing regular and frequent ship service between the United States and Soviet Russia. Under the terms of the proposals, the White Star line will undertake the transport both of passengers and of goods. The offer is now under advisement by the Soviet government.

Workers Party Backs Amalgamated Plan to Aid Russian Industry

workers and peasants against the counter-revolution, the factories were looted by employers and vandals, machinery wrecked, railroads destroyed and bridges burned — the whole industry was violently sabotaged by a maddened capitalist class seeking to bring the workers' victory to nothing.

The task of rebuilding Russia lies upon the workers.

This is no simple matter. It is a task that the workers of the world have never before faced. But it is a task that they must accomplish in order to prove that the hope of freedom in the breast of every worker in every land is not in vain.

Aid Reconstruction in Russia.

This is not a Russian question. It is a workers' question. Industrial freedom is the conscious or unconscious aim of the Labor movement. If the Russian workers, after having their struggle carried to the point of obtaining actual possession of industry, do not succeed in reconstructing and operating these industries, the result would be as a blank wall of discouragement in the path of the entire labor movement.

It is the duty of every working man and woman in the World to help in the reconstruction of the factories, workshops, mines and railroads of Russia.

A great American Labor Union has already realized this duty and has taken the lead. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, after consultation and agreement with the Workers' Soviet Government of Russia, have founded the Russian-American Industrial Corporation. This workers' corporation will undertake a great share in rebuilding the factories of Russia for the workers of Russia. The operations will be under the joint direction of a board representing equally the Russian Socialist Federative Soviet Republic and the Russian-American Industrial Corporation. The investment of the Corporation in Russia is guaranteed by the Russian Soviet Government.

Will Operate Nine Factories

The Corporation has received nine clothing factories, six in Petrograd and three in Moscow, to begin with.

There are 7,000 workers (approximately) in these nine factories which are already in operation with a high degree of efficiency. The plan is thoroughly to renovate these factories, and to import hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of the newest type of machinery with many expert American workers who will teach their Russian brothers and sisters the best American methods of quantity production. After a careful and business-like beginning with these factories, the work will branch out to textile mills and will probably extend to machine shops and other industries as the success justifies.

The Russian-American Industrial Corporation was launched under the laws of the State of Delaware on June 2, 1922, capitalized at one million dollars. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America in their Convention just closed, voted unanimously to purchase $50,000 worth of stock and donated $10,000 for initial expenses in carrying the message to all of American Labor.

The stock is already being [illegible] by the [illegible]. The project [illegible] already appears to be a [illegible] stimulating new hope, courage and idealism in the workers.

Capitalized at One Million.

The Corporation is capitalized at One Million Dollars, but the sum subscribed may be many times that amount. The workers in this country can raise an amount in proportion to the needs of the enterprise, and there is no limit to its possibilities and opportunities.

The advantages to the Labor Movement in this project are more than economic assistance to a few co-operative factories. Great political significance lies in the fact of labor's aiding to solve a question of international industrial credit, the workers en masse telling all the gentlemen at Genoa and at the Hague that the workers will have their own way and will help a Workers' Republic to get on its feet by the will of the proletarian solidarity. This is an opportunity which labor must not lose.

The credit for the first step in this admirable demonstration of working class solidarity belongs to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. But it is not an affair confined to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. All labor unions without exception are welcome to come in with their full strength, and will, of course, have influence in proportion to their contribution. Measures will be provided to ensure that the control of stock shall remain in the hands of workers and workers' organizations.

Workers! Honor Yourselves.

The WORKERS PARTY OF AMERICA hereby formally endorses this project and recommends to all workers of whatever political faith, in the unions and workshops, in all political parties and fraternal organizations, that they take up this opportunity to help the workers of Russia in building for their industrial freedom. Workers! Do honor to yourselves and to your organization by participating in this glorious work!

All members of the Workers Party are hereby urged to give their heartiest co-operation to promoting the project and the stock sales of the RUSSIAN-AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL CORPORATION.

All workers and their organizations are welcome. No partisanship except the partisanship of the workers for the workers' cause! Here, of all places, the UNITED FRONT!

Workers of the Socialist Party, we extend to you a cordial invitation to join with us in this high purpose without thought of factional differences or political quarrels. Workers of the Socialist Labor Party, the Proletarian Party, the Farmer-Labor Party, all workers' fraternal societies and all labor unions, this invitation extends to you. Let us show that in this field at least we know no division within the fraternal bonds of unity of the working class.

Make a Proud Record.

Let us make a proud record for the American working class. Already the workers of this country have given more than those of all others combined to save the Russian peasants from death in the Volga famine region. The famine relief work must continue and must be redoubled, for the famine still rages. Let us make an equally proud record in the industrial reconstruction of the first Workers' Republic of the world, making a success of the Russian-American Industrial Corporation.

[illegible] of Blue Laws, Black Lists and Open Shop

By JOHN W. MARSHALL

Connecticut is the state of blue laws, black lists and the open shop—and, of course, "Americanism".

The first town I struck was Stamford where I was respectfully notified that no meeting could be held without a permit, "which takes time". Previous experience and a slight shower served to dampen the spirit of the Comrades, so that no attempt was made to defy the authorities. The mayor of this town is a high official of the Yale-Towne Lock Co., where of course there is an open shop.

In Norwalk, the cop in charge of the district notified me point blank that "I'm in charge here and you can't hold no meetin' on the streets. Why don't you hire a hall?"

When I informed him about the existence of the Constitution of the U. S., he referred me to the city clerk who he said might give me a permit. To the clerk I went, and was referred to the mayor, who informed me that a permit was necessary, but that altho they didn't object to us, "even the Democrats would have to get a permit. We must investigate you."

To which I replied that he can investigate as he wished, but whether he decided to grant permits for future speakers or not we intend to fight the matter in the courts. "Well, you'll have a hard fight in the state of Connecticut."

That night I went back to Stamford and addressed a meeting of the Local I. L. G. W. U.

I talked for a half hour on the United Front, after which I sold five of Foster's "Railroaders' Next Step" and a few other booklets. This local sent our Comrade Loske to the convention in Cleveland where he participated in the left block. This comrade is very active and has been influential in getting the local to join the C. L. U. of which he is a member and where with a few left members he will soon I think be able to get the endorsement of our "United Front" program.

I went to Bridgeport, the home of Remington—U. M. C., ammunition makers; the American Tube and Stamping Co., subsidiary of the U. S. Steel Trust, the Columbia Phonograph and various steel and iron industries. Of course, the open shop is universal.

The black list system here is complete. One comrade here says that his picture is in the employment office of every firm in the city. The American Tube and Stamp Co pays so-called unskilled labor 30 c per hour and has boys of 13 years working for 15 c. per hour.

The Post, the big capitalist daily is owned by a man whose interests extend to every enterprise in the city, started an open shop fight on its composition men about a year ago, and imported a labor hater-thug from the Cincinnati Enquirer to help do the job. The composing room men are still on strike and the pressmen are still on the job. The State Federation of Labor meeting at Stamford while I was there passed a legislative program for light wine and beers, and a resolution against the "unfairness" of the Bridgeport Post.

A strike of the only clothing shop in town, Wolf and Abraham, should be of interest to our Amalgamated readers. The workers there had been getting as low as $7 per week. $12 I am told is about the average. The shop chairman told me that he had been in the shop 10 years and was only now getting $28. They are striking for a $3 increase for every one. When the strike was declared, all came out, but the cutters who are the highest paid did not all stand firm. The Chamber of Commerce, the Manufacturers Association and the Police Department have told Mr. Wolf to advertise in the out-of-town papers, and they will do the rest.

The C. C. C. of the Workers' Party has sent the strikers a resolution of sympathy and have pledged their moral support. Our members are working among the strikers and are serving to keep up their morale, which in spite of the lack of class consciousness or experience is so far very good.

Our meeting was held in a place a half block away from Main Street, because of course, the authorities did not care to have us get a crowd. In spite of this, however, we had according to the verdict of the comrades a successful meeting.

A Challenge from Iowa
